A

COMMENTARY

OR

EXPOSITION

Upon all the Books of the New Testament.

VVherein the Text is explained, some Controversies are discussed, divers Common places are handled, and many remarkable matters hinted, that had by former Interpreters been pretermitted.

Besides, divers other Texts of Scripture, which occasionally occur, are fully opened, and the whole so intermixed with pertinent Histories, as will yield both pleasure and profit to the judicious Reader.

With a Decad of Common-places upon these ten Heads,

Abstinence.	Anger.
Admonition.	Apostasie.
Alms.	Arrogancie.
Ambition.	Arts.
Angels.	Atheism.

The second Edition very much enlarged throughout, with an Alphabetical Table thereunto.

TO THE

VVORSHIPFUL

Colonel IOHN BRIDGES,

Governor of Warwick-Caſtle, Juſtice of Peace for the County of Warwick, and one of the Honorable Committee for the Safety of that County.

Worthy Sir,

THis book of mine doth at once both crave and claim Your Patronage: for I cannot bethink me of any one that (all things conſidered) hath better right to it and me, then your ſelf. I muſt never forget, how that being carried priſoner by the enemies, You ſoon ſet me off by exchange; and after that, being by them driven from houſe and home, you received me to harbour; yea, being driven out of one Pulpit (where they thought to have ſurprized me) you preſently put me into another, where I had a comfortable implyoment, and a competent encouragement. What hours I could then well ſpare from that penſum diurnum, of praying and preaching, I gladly ſpent in theſe Notes upon the New Teſtament; as hating with the Athenians, ἡσυχίαν ἀπράγμονα, a fruitleſs feriation; and holding with Cato, that account muſt be given, not of our labour only, but of our leiſure alſo. For that two-years-ſpace (well-nigh) that I lived in your Garriſon, I think I may truly ſay with Seneca, Nullus mihi per otium exiit dies, partem etiam noctium ſtudiis vendicavi, that I laboured night and day (amidſt many fears and tears for the labouring Church, and bleeding State) Vt ad vitam communem aliquem ſaltem fructum ferre poſſem; that I might be ſome way ſerviceable to the Publike, and to you. And albeit I was even ſick at heart ſometimes of the affliction of Ioſeph; and even ready thorow faintneſs to let fall my pen, as it befell Hierom, when writing upon Ezekiel, he heard of the ſacking of the City of Rome by the Goths; yet as God (who comforteth thoſe that are caſt down) gave us any lucida intervalla (this laſt triumphant year eſpecially) I took heart afreſh to ſet cloſer to the

The Preface to the Reader.

THE manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal, saith S. Paul. And, as any man hath received the gift, so let him minister the same to others, saith S. Peter. We therefore learn that we may teach, is a Proverb among the Hebrews. And I do therefore lay in, and lay up, saith the Heathen, that I may draw forth again, and lay out for the good of many. Synesius speaks of some, who having a treasure of rare abilities in them, would as soon part with their hearts as their conceptions: the canker of whose great skill shall be a swift witness against them. How much better Augustus and Augustin! Of the former, Suetonius tels us, that, in reading all sorts of good Authors, he skilfully picked out the prime precepts and patterns of valour and vertue, sending the same to such of his servants and under-officers for tokens, as he thought they might do most good unto. And for the latter, he accounted nothing his own, that he did not communicate: and somewhere professeth himself in the number of those, Qui scribunt proficiendo, & scribendo proficiunt, That write what they have learned, and learn yet more by Writing. His last Works are observed to be his best: And the reason is given by Melanchon, Quia docendo didicit, because by much trading his talent, he had much improved it. Of Melanchon himself, one of his Countrey-men gives this testimony: It appears (saith he) that Melanchon was on this wise busied abroad the World, that seeing and hearing all he could, he made profit of every thing; and stored his heart, as the Bee doth her hive, out of all sorts of flowers, for the common benefit. Pismires labour like Bees, but with this difference. Quod illæ faciant cibos, hæ condant, That the Bees make their meat, the Pismires gather it: both have their proper praise and profit. If I may be esteemed by thee (Courteous Reader) either the one or the other, it is enough; And that I may, Enitar sane (saith Gerson, and I with him) I will endeavour out of other mens good Meditations and Collections, to frame to my self (but for thy use) some sweet honey-comb of truth, by mine own art and industry, in mine own words and method; And then envy it self cannot (likely) say worse of me (it cannot, truly, say so bad) as one doth of Hugo de Sancto Victore: Ivonis deflorator est (saith he) quem per omnia ferè αὐτοσχέδιος sequitur, He hath pickt the best out of Ivo, and transcribed him word for word almost. I never envied Zabarel, that arrogant brag of his, Hoc ego primus vidi, I was the first that ever found out this; and yet I hate extreamly to be held a plagiary. Remigius and Haymo seem to be but two Friers under one hood. Cedrenus his Imperial History is read (a great part of it) under the name of Joannes Curopalates; That is a foul blur to one of them, but to which, I know not. And that is no praise to Lactantius in Erasmus his judgement, that having read Aristotle and Pliny writing of the same subject that he did, and borrowing much out of them, he never so much as once mentioneth them; as he doth Tully; whom he nameth indeed, but disparageth. Atqui candidius erat nominare eos per quos profecit, quam eum quem notat, saith Erasmus; I have not spared to profess by whom I have profited, to tell out of whom I have taken ought; and that I hope shall excuse me for that matter, with the more ingenuous; what fault else soever they may find with me. Faults will escape a man betwixt his fingers, let him look to it never so narrowly; saith B. Jewel. Some plain solecisms, and harsh expressions have been found even in Tullies own Works, as Augustin noteth. And Erasmus addeth, Qualia nonnunquam excidunt, & horum temporum scriptoribus, & in his mihi quoque. Our times are (as one well observeth) partly accurately judicious, partly uncharitably censorious. The one likes nothing not exquisite, not sublimated; the other, nothing at all. Let them please themselves for me; I am of Hieroms mind, Si cui legere non placet, nemo compellit invitum If any think good to read what I have written, let him; if otherwise, let him do as he will; but let him know, That every man cannot be excellent,

The Epiſtle to the Reader.

READER,

THE worth of the Author of this Book is already well known in the Church of Chriſt, by ſome former labours of his which are extant: and they which are well acquainted with him, cannot but know and teſtifie, that he is a man of ſingular Prudence and Piety, of an acute wit, of a ſound judgement, and of an indefatigable ſpirit, who hath wholly devoted, and given up himſelf to the ſervice of Gods Church, and doth naturally care for the good thereof: witneſs his conſtant preaching, even whileſt the burthen and care of a publike School lay upon him: and now in theſe calamitous and bloody times, wherein he hath ſuffered deeply, being driven from his charge, and forced to ſhroud himſelf in a Garriſon of the Parliaments, yet notwithſtanding his daily labours amongſt the ſouldiers, and in the midſt of the noiſes of guns and drums, he hath betaken himſelf to writing of Commentaries upon the ſacred Scriptures; and beſides this preſent Book, he hath prepared for the Preſs ſome notes upon Geneſis, and now by the good hand of Gods providence, compleated a Comment upon the whole new Teſtament; the firſt volumn whereof preſents it ſelf unto thee in this Book, and the latter part is haſtening after it, which thou mayeſt expect with all expedition. I preſume that it will be ſuperfluous for me to tell thee how uſeful and advantagious his labours in this kinde may be; for though we have many Comments in Latine, yet but few in Engliſh; and for want thereof, and a right underſtanding of the Scripture, daily experience ſhews how wofully many perſons are led aſide into erroneous waies: For that which the Apoſtle Peter ſaith of S. Pauls Epiſtles, is true of all the word of God; 2 Pet. 3. 13. That therein ſome things are hard to be underſtood, which they that are unlearned and unſtable pervert to their own deſtruction. Bleſs God therefore for ſtirring up the hearts of thoſe who are pious and judicious, to lay forth their labours this way: and amongſt others, make uſe of this Comment, which by Gods bleſſing will prove no leſs pleaſing then profitable, in regard of the variety and excellency of the matter contained therein; as alſo it will give great ſatisfaction to the more judicious, in regard of his pains, in noting all the Criticiſms through theſe his labours: which that it may do, his prayers ſhall not be wanting, who ſubſcribes himſelf,

To the Learned, Reverend AUTHOR of these ANNOTATIONS.

NO, fear it not: Although our Worthies Nine
Have gone before you in that Work divine,
(Their Annotations on the Sacred Pages, Which makes them famous to ſucceeding Ages)
Yet they have not prevented you. What you Do here preſent, will find Acceptance too.
Have you not Goſpel for it? Did not JOHN,
Whom the laſt Year you ſent abroad, alone,
To ſearch the Land, as Joſhuah ſent out Spies,
Come quickly back, and thus Evangelize;
I every corner of the Land have ſeen,
I by moſt Learned hands turn'd o're have been:
Of my Aloneneſs all men notice took,
And asked, Where are Matthew, Mark, and Luke?
Of me they were moſt glad; yet griev'd to ſee
The Eagle thus without all company.
You have example too. The Reverend Head
Of Sion-Colledge, lately publiſhed,
To his great praiſe, and others good content,
His Lucubrations *on th'*Old Teſtament.
He doubted not, (and You as little may)
But that a Tenth would be receiv'd with joy.
The Nine divide the Sacred Text; each Man
Is like a Tribe i'th' Land of Canaan:
But were they all conjoyn'd in every Line,
Or were there nine great Volumes for the Nine,
Each having done the Whole, and done it ſo,
That each did ſeem his Fellows to out-do:
Yet You, and Twenty more would welcome be,
Bringing ſuch Gifts into the Treaſurie.
Such Ships as, fraught with precious Wares, do come,
After the reſt, are no leſs welcome home:
Nor are thoſe Stars, which do not firſt appear,
Leſs lookt upon; they make the Night more clear.
Store is no ſore. The more ſuch Books as This,
The Church the richer, and the merrier is;
And can no more of them ſpare any One,
Then he that hath a ſcore, can ſpare a Son.
Hark, now me thinks a thouſand Tongues I hear,
Saying, Shew TRAPP. The Price? It is a dear,
But golden Book. O that this Author would
What he hath done to th' New, do to the Old!
Things new, and old, out of his Treaſurie
A good Scribe brings; And ſo we hope will He.
Long may he live! and part of's Time be ſpent
In bringing light to the Old Teſtament.

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION upon the GOSPEL according to S^t. Matthew:

WHEREIN

The Text is Explained, some Controversies are briefly discussed, divers Common Places handled, and many remarkable matters hinted, That had been by former Interpreters pretermitted.

CHAPTER. I.

VERSE 1. The Book]

THat is, a Roll or Register, Catalogue or Calendar (Heb. ספר) a Cyphering and Summing up.

Of the generations] That is, of the Genealogies, as touching his Humanity (St. Matthews main drift:) for as touching his Divinity (St. Johns chief scope and subject,) who can declare his generation? Isa. 53. 8. What is his name? and what is his sons name, if thou canst tell? Prov. 30. 4. He is without discent or pedegree, as Melchisedech, Heb. 7. 2.

Gen. 5. 1. This is Sepher toledoth, ἡ βίβλος γενέσεως, say the Septuagint.

Of Jesus Christ] Jesus shews he was God (for besides me there is no Saviour, Isa. 45. 21.) Christ, that he was man, the Anointed; for in respect of his manhood, chiefly, is this anointing with gifts and graces attributed to Christ. The name of Jesuits therefore savoureth of blasphemous arrogancy. One of their own gives the reason; because he hath communicated unto us the thing signified by the name Christ, but not by the Rem ſanatam nomine Chriſti nobis communicavit, non autem Ieſu, name Jeſus. And yet, it is notoriouſly known (ſaith Dr Fulk, out of another of their own Writers) that the moſt honorable name of Chriſtian, is in Italy and at Rome a name of reproach; and uſually abuſed, to ſignifie a Fool or a Dolt.

Lindwood. Fulk in Rhem. Teſtam. on Act. 11. Sect. 4. out of Chriſtoph. Franch. Col. Ieſuit. in fine.

David, amaſius vel amabilis. Unde Dido Pœnis, Hinc Solomon dictus eſt Iedidiah.* Joh. 8. 56. ἠγαλλιάσατο. Iſa. 53. 10, 11. Verè fuit Iſaac beatæ ſenectutis & emerita fidei filius. Bucholc. Gen. 25. 21. The Hebrew word is, to frequent and multiply prayer.

The ſon of David] Gods darling, *one that obſerved all his wills, Acts 13. 22. and faithfully ſerved out his time, ver. 36.

The ſon of Abraham] The friend of God, and father of the faithfull, reckon'd here (for honors ſake) as the next immediate father of Chriſt; whoſe day indeed he ſaw and rejoyced; he laughed, yea leapt for joy of this man-childe to be born into the world. Whoſe children we are, ſo long as we walk in the ſteps of his faith; that Chriſt, being formed in us, may ſee of the travel of his ſoul, and be ſatisfied: he may ſee his ſeed, and prolong his daies upon earth. Such honor have all his Saints, Pſal. 149. 9.

Verſe 2. Abraham begat Iſaac] The fruit, not more of his fleſh, then of his faith: Whence he is ſaid to be born after the Spirit, Gal. 4. 29.

Iſaac begat Jacob] After twenty years expectance, and many an hearty prayer put up therewhile. So, Adam lived an hundred and twenty years ere he begat Seth; whom God ſet as another ſeed inſtead of Abel, Gen. 5. 3. with Gen. 4. 25. when Cains family flouriſhed, and grew great in the earth. God uſually ſtays ſo long, that he hardly finds faith, Luk. 18. 8. till men have done expecting, and then he doth things that they look not for, Iſa. 64. 3. Wait therefore upon him who waits to be gracious; and know this, that he is a God of judgement, Iſa. 30. 18. that is, a wiſe God, one that chuſeth his times, and knows beſt when to deal forth his favors. See Iſa. 49. 8. with Pſal. 69. 13. Every thing is beautifull in its ſeaſon, ſaith Solomon. Eccleſ. 3. 11.

Jacob begat Judah and his brethren] Brethren in iniquity (the moſt of them) a part of their fathers puniſhment, for that three-fold lye in a breath. Reuben was the begining of his ſtrength, excelling in dignity and power, Gen. 45. 3. that is (ſaith the Chaldee Paraphraſt) in the Principality and the Prieſthood. Both which he forfeited by his foul offence; the former to Judah, the latter to Levi. Howbeit, upon his return to God (though diſinherited of the birth-right, yet) he had this honor of an elder brother, that he was firſt provided for. But Judah was he, Whom his brethren ſhould praiſe (ſaith Iacob) in alluſion to his name, and in reference to his priviledge; for it is evident, that our Lord ſprang out of Judah, Heb. 7. 14. that branch from on high, Luke 1. 78. that Shiloh, which ſome interpret, His ſon: Others, Tranquillator, Salvator, the Proſperer, Pacificator, Safe-maker, &c. Others, the ſon of her ſecundines, which is the Tunicle that wrappeth the child in the womb. Gen. 27. 19, &c. Gen. 49. 8. ἀνατέτηλεν. ἀνατολή. R. David. Tranquillator, ſalvator, à themate Salah, unde Shiloah tranquillitas. Unde etiam Lat. Salvare, Shalvus, Salvare. Amama.

Verſe 3. And Judah begat Phares and Zarah] Hierom is deceived, that deriveth the pedegree of the Phariſees from this Phares. They took their name either of Pharaſh, to expound, as Interpreters of the Law, Rom. 2. 18. Or of Pharas to ſeparate with a--ſtand further off, for I am holier then thou. Joſephus ſaith, That the Phariſees ſeemed to outſtrip all others, both in height of holineſs, and depth of learning. As for Phares, he was a breach-maker (whence alſo he had his name, Gen. 38. 29.) He violently took the firſt birth-right; and became both a father of the Meſſias, and a Type. For Chriſt by his ſtrength broke the power of death and hell: he broke down alſo the partition wall that was betwixt the Jews and Gentiles: who when they ſhall be fully born, then ſhall the Jews (Typified by Zarah, who thruſt forth the hand firſt, as thoſe that willing to be juſtified by their works, and thinking to regenerate themſelves, had the ſkarlet thred of the Laws condemnation bound upon their hands, which therefore they drew back and fell from God,) then ſhall they, I ſay, come forth again, Rom. 11. 11, 12, 25, 26. Τὸν πυγμὴ τῆ Ἰεδαίων ἐυσεβεσεγοντὸν βίον, ἢ δεδέντων ἀκριβέσεγον τῶν ἀλλων τὸν νόμων ἐρηγεσθαι lib 1. de bel. Iud. cap. 4

Of Thamar] A Canaaniteſs, but probably, a Proſelyte. The Jews ſay, ſhe was Melchiſedechs daughter the High-Prieſt, and was therefore to be burned, Lev. 21. 8. But this may well paſs for a Jewiſh fable: Howbeit, that Melchiſedech was a Canaanite, but a moſt righteous King and Prieſt of the moſt high God, and was therefore not moleſted or medled with by Kedar-laomer and his complices, I judge not unlikely. This Thamar out of deſire, partly of revenge, and partly of iſſue, fell into the ſin of inceſt. Rahab was an harlot, Bathſheba an adultreſs: Yet all theſe grandmothers to our Saviour: Who as he needed not to be ennobled by his ſtock, ſo neither was diſparaged by his Progenitors; but took fleſh of theſe greateſt ſinners, to ſhew that we cannot commit more then he can remit:

remit: and that by his purity he waſheth off all our ſpots; like as the Sun waſteth and wipeth away all the ill vapors of the earth and air.

And Phares begat Eſrom,] When he was but 14 years of age, the year before they went down to Egypt ſay ſome: Others aſſoil it otherwiſe. Let him that readeth underſtand as he can. Chriſt (the Arch-Prophet) when he comes again, ſhall teach us all things. Pareus in Gen. Funccius in Chronol. Com. Anno. 2273.

Eſrom begat Aram] While they ſojourned in the Land of Egypt; a miſerable home, where was nothing but bondage and tyranny. And yet in reference to it, Moſes (who was likewiſe born there) calls his ſon Gerſhom, or a ſtranger there, becauſe born in Midian. The ſons of Ephraim, about the birth of Moſes, ſought to break priſon before Gods goal-delivery: but this proved a great miſchief to themſelves, and no ſmall heart-break to their aged father, 1 *Chron.*7.21,22. *Pſal.*78.9. Beſides that, it gave occaſion, likely to that cruell Edict of Pharaoh; Let us deal wiſely (St. Stephen ſaith, ſophiſtically, ſubtilly) leſt they multiply and joyn alſo to our enemies, and fight againſt us (as now they have fought againſt the Gittites, their own enemies, who detained from them the promiſed Land, till their ſins were full) and ſo get them up out of the Land, as lately they had aſſaied to do. Therefore they did ſet over them taskmaſters to afflict them with their burdens, and to keep them from ſpawning ſo faſt, after the manner of fiſhes (as the word imports) which multiply beyond meaſure. But God turned their wiſdom into folly; they took a wrong courſe. For who knows not that your labouring men have the moſt and the ſtrongeſt children? And notwithſtanding this new Pharaohs craft and cruelty. κατασοφισάμενος. Acts 7. 19. Exod. 1.

Verſe 4. Aram begat Aminadab, and Aminadab begat Naaſſon] Who was hang'd up in the wilderneſs, among the reſt of their Rulers, for folly committed with the Miſtreſſes of Moab. Neither ſcaped the common ſort ſcot-free, for they fell in one day three and twenty thouſand ſaith St. Paul: Four and twenty thouſand ſaith Moſes: whereof a thouſand were the chief Princes, the other were inferiors, provoked to ſin by their example. But why doth the Apoſtle inſiſt in the ſpecial puniſhment of the people? to ſhew ſaith learned Iunius, how frigid and ſlender their defence is, how ſhort their covering, who plead and pretend for their ſins the example of their Superiors. 2 Cor. 10 8. Parallel. lib. 2, pag. 37.

And Naaſſon begat Salmon] Called 1 *Chron.*2. Salmah. There was alſo a Mount of this name (as touching the ſound, though with difference of one letter in the Original) whither Abimilech and his hoſt reſorted, Judg. 9.48. And whereof the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh; When the Almighty ſcattered Kings, they ſhall be white as ſnow in Salmon. Now it is ſtoried of Andronicus, the old Emperor of Conſtantinople, that all things going croſs with him, he took a Pſalter into his hand, to reſolve his doubtfull mind: And opening the ſame, as if it were of that heavenly Oracle to ask counſel, he lighted upon this verſe, and was thereby comforted and directed what to do for his greateſt ſafety. To be white as ſnow in Salmon, is to have joy in affliction, light in darkneſs. Salmon ſignifieth ſhady and dark: ſo this mount was with dens and glimneſs; but made lightſome by ſnow. Hoc autem obiter. Turk. Hiſto. fol. 164. Pſal.68.14. explained.

Verſe 5. And Salmon begat Booz of Rahab.] This the Evangeliſt might have by Tradition. Salmons genealogie is ſet down, 1 Chron. 2. Ruth. 4. but whom he married, nothing is reported.

And Booz begat Obed of Ruth] Whiles Orphah wants bread in her own Country, Ruth is grown a great Lady in Bethlehem, and advanced to be great grandmother to the King of Kings. There's nothing loſt by Gods ſervice. ἡ μυελομαγεύτης ὅτιν ἐν τῇ εὐσεβείᾳ.

And Obed begat Jeſſe] A good old man, but not very famous. Retired it ſeems he was, and drawn much up into himſelf; neither thinking great things of himſelf, nor ſeeking great things for himſelf; but living among his own people; much of his ſon Davids diſpoſition, who loves his book the better ſince he ſaw the Court, and ſings, Beatus ille qui procul negotiis, &c. Λάθε βιώσας. Vivetibi, quantum potes, præluſtria vita.

Non vixit malè, qui natus moriensq; feſellit. Horat.

He's not the leaſt happy that is leaſt obſerved.

Verſe 6. And Jeſſe begat David the King.] But that was not his chief title: He gloried more in ſtiling himſelf the ſervant of the Lord, Pſal.36.1, &c. So Theodoſius eſteemed it a greater honor, that he was membrum Chriſti, then Caput Imperii. Numa etiam τῷ θεῷ δουλείαν βασιλείαν exiſtimabat. Numa held the ſervice of God the higheſt honor. Plut. in vit. David

David the King begat Salomon] Whom Bellarmine reckoneth for a Reprobate: but (besides that he was Gods Corculum, and by him called Jedidiah,) he calleth himself in his sacred Retractations, Coheleth: which being interpreted, The Preacher, is a word of the fœminine termination, and by some rendered Aggregata, where understanding the substantive Anima, they conclude herehence that he was renewed by repentance, and reunited to the Church.

Peccatum tametsi non bonum, tamen in bonum. Aug.

Of her that had been the wife of Uriah.] His best children he had by this wife: the fruit of his humiliation doubtless. The barren womens children are observed to have been the best, as Isaac, Samuel, John Baptist, &c. for like reason.

Verse 7. And Solomon begat Roboam.] A child of fourty years old, a soft-spirited man, the Scripture notes him a רך, easily drawn away by evil Counsel. Green wood will be warping. Of him it might be said, as once it was of a certain Prince in Germany, Esset alius, si esset apud alios. But a man would wonder, that by so many wives Solomon should have but one son, and him none of the wisest neither. Heroum filii noxæ. He might (likely) bewail his own unhappiness in Rehoboam, Eccles. 2. 18, 19. as he is thought to do in Ieroboam, Prov. 20. 21. His mother was an Ammonitess: the birth follows the belly: the conclusion follows the weaker proposition.

Bucholcer.

And Roboam begat Abia] A man not right, yet better then his father: and for this to be commended, that he held and pleaded the true worship and service of God as the beauty and bulwark of his Kingdom: relying also upon God, he discomfited Ieroboam; Deo confisi, nunquam confusi.

And Abia begat Asa.] A better son sprung of the seed of bad Abia, of the soil of worse Maachah, whom St. Ierome makes to be a worshipper of that abominable idol Priapus, otherwise called Baal-peor. For thus he translates that, 1 Kings 15. Insuper & Maachan matrem suam amovit, ne esset princeps in sacris Priapi, & in luco ejus. Nos pudore pulso, stamus sub Iove, coleis apertis, said the worshippers of Priapus. The people that came thereto (the sacrifice being ended) all stepped into a thicket, which was always planted near the Altar of this God; and there like brute beasts, they promiscuously satisfied their lusts: thereby as they conceived, best pleasing their God. This villany Maachah may seem to have been guilty of, and was therefore worthily removed by her son Asa, from being Queen. Sedes prima, & vita ima, suit not well together. Dignitas in digno est ornamentum in luto, saith Salvian. Honor in a dishoneſt man, is as a jewell of Gold in a swines snout.

Numb. 25. 5. In 4. Hoseæ. D. Hackwells Apolog.

Verse 8. And Asa begat Iosaphat.] A godly King, but late-witted: and therefore paid for his learning, twice, at least in holy history. One thing in the narration of his acts is very remarkable. He placed forces in all the fenced Cities: yet is it not said thereupon, that the fear of the Lord fell on the neighbour Nations. But when he had established a Preaching Ministry in all the Cities, then his enemies feared, and made no war: Solidissima regiæ Politiæ basis, (saith Paradinus) est verum Dei cultum ubivis stabilire: Alias, qui potest aut Deus Reges beare, à quibus negligitur: aut populus fideliter colere, qui de obsequio suo non rectè instituitur? The Ordinances of God are the beauty and bulwark of a place and people.

2 Chron. 17.

In Symbolis.

And Iehosaphat begat Ioram] That lived undesired, and died unlamented. While he lived, there was no use of him, and when he died, no miss of him: no more then of the paring of the nails, or sweeping of the house. He lived wickedly, and died wishedly, as it is said of King Edwin.

περὶ ὕψους. Dan. Hist. of Eng. 14. Gen. 17.

And Ioram begat Ozias] Here Ahaziah, Ioash and Amaziah are written in the earth, not once set down in the Roll: perhaps it was because they were imped in the wicked family of Ahab. This Uzzias, though a King, yet he loved husbandry, 2 Chron. 26. This gift is the fuell of magnificence. He was at length a Leper, yet still remained a King. Infirmities may deform us, they cannot dethrone us. The English Laws (saith Camden) pronounce, that the Crown once worn, quite taketh away all defects whatsoever: Sure it is, that when God once Crowns a man with his grace and favor, that man is out of harms-way forever.

Camdens Elizabeth, fol. 8.

Verse 9. And Ozias begat Ioatham] A pious Prince, but not very prosperous. Grace is not given to any as a target against outward affliction.

And Ioatham begat Ahaz] A sturdy stigmatick, a branded Rebell. The more he was distressed, the more he trespassed. This is that Ahaz, 2 Chron. 28. 22. How many (now adays) adays) are humbled, yet not humble? Low, but not lowly? Qui nec fractis cervicibus inclinantur, as Hieron complaineth: quos multo facilius fregeris, quam flexeris, as another hath it. These are like the Creature called Monoceros, who may be killed, but not caught. Plectimur à Deo, saith Salvian, nec flectimur tamen: corripimur, sed non corrigimur. But if men harden their hearts against correction, God will harden his hand, and hasten their destruction. Humiliantur, & humiles non sunt. Bern in Cantic. 34. In Esai. Interimi potest capi non potest, Plin.

Ahaz begat Hezechiah] Who stands betwixt his father Ahaz, and his son Manasseth, as a Lily between two thorns, or as a Fuller between two Colliers: or as that wretched Cardinal of Toledo in his Preface before the Bible, Printed at Complutum in Spain, said, that he set the Vulgar Latine betwixt the Hebrew and Greek, as Christ was set betwixt two thieves. Here observe (by the way) that Judah had some enterchange of good Princes; Israel, none: and that, under Religious Princes the people were ever Religious: as under wicked Princes, wicked. Most people will be of the Kings Religion, be it that it will be, as the Melchites were of old, and the Papists still, if Mr. Rogers (our Protomartyr in Queen Maries days) may be believed. The Papists, saith he, apply themselves to the present State: yea, if the State should change ten times in the year, they would ever be ready at hand to change with it, and so follow the cry, and rather utterly forsake God, and be of no Religion, then that they would forgo lust or living, for God or Religion. Niceph. Acts and Mon.

Verse 10. And Hezechiah begat Manasses] Who degenerates into his Grandfather Ahaz, as the Kernell of a well-fruited Plant doth sometimes into that Crab or Willow which gave the Original to his stock. This man was (till converted) as very a Nonsuch in Judah, as Ahab was in Israel; Yet no King of either Judah or Israel reigned so long as he. It was well for him that he lived so long, to grow better: As it had been better for Asa to have died sooner, when he was in his prime. But they are met in heaven, I doubt not: whither, whether we come sooner or later, happy are we.

And Manasses begat Amon] Who followed his father in sin, but not in repentance. And thou his son, ô Belshazzar, hast not humbled thine heart, though thou knewest all this: but hast lifted up thy self against the Lord, &c. It is a just Presage and desert of Ruine, not to be warned. This was a bloody Prince, therefore lived not out half his days. Queen Maries Reign was the shortest of any since the Conquest, Richard the third only excepted: Yet she was non naturâ, sed Pontificiorum arte ferox, say some. Dan. 5. 22.

And Amon begat Josias] of whom that is true, that St. Hierom writes of another, In brevi vitæ spacio tempora virtutum multa replevit: Or as Mr. Hooker speaketh of King Edward 6. He departed soon, but lived long: for life consists in action: In all these is the life of my spirit, saith Hezechiah, Isa. 38. 15 16. but the wanton widow is dead while she liveth, 1 Tim. 5 6. That good King lived apace, and died betime, being deliciæ Orbis, as Titus was called: and Mirabilia mundi, as Otho: having at his death (as it is said of Titus) one thing only to Repent of, and that was his rash engaging himself in a needless quarrel, to the loss of his life, and the ruine of that state. When Epaminondas was once slain, his Countrymen were no longer famous for their Valor and Victories, but for their Cowardise and Calamities. When Augustus departed this world, we feared saith one, the worlds ruine, and were ready to wish that either he had never been born, or never died. When God took away Theodosius, he took away with him almost all the peace of that Church and State: So he did of this, with Josiah, that heavenly Spark, that Plant of Renown, that precious Prince, Titus moriens se unius tantummodo rei pœnitere dixit. Id autem quid esset non aperuit, nec quisquam certò novit. Dio. in Tito.

Verse 11. And Iosias begat Iechonias.] Rob. Stephanus restoreth and rectifieth the Text thus; Iosias begat Iakin and his brethren, and Jakin begat Iechonias. For otherwise the middle fourteen, (whereby S. Matthew reckoneth) would want a man. Iehoahaz, younger brother to Jakin, had after his Fathers death, stept into the Throne, but was soon ejected. Usurpation prospers not. Abimilechs head had stollen the Crown, and by a blow on his head he is slain at Sechem. What got most of the Cæsars by their hasty advancement, nisi ut citius interficerentur? as one hath it. Notandum, saith the Chronologer, quod nullus Pontificum, egregii aliquid à tempore Bonifacii tertii pro sedis Romanæ tyrannide constituens, diu supervixerit. Quod & huic Bonifacio accidit. It is remarkable that no Pope, of any note for Activity in his Office, was long of life.

Verse 12. And after they were brought to Babylon] This the Evangelist inculcates, and rings often in the ears of his impious Countreymen, as a notorious publike judgement on a nation so incorrigibly flagitious, so unthankful for mercies, so impatient of remedies, so uncapable of repentance, so obliged, so warned, so shamelesly, so lawlesly wicked, quorum maxima beneficia, flagitia, supplicia, as the Centurists set it forth. Abused mercy turns into fury.

Iechonias begat Salathiel] Neri begat him naturally, Iechonias, legally: adopting him for his child, that was his Nephew, 1 Chron. 3. 17.

Zech. 4. 8, 9. And Salathiel begat Zorobabel] Who brought forth the head-stone of the Second Temple with shoutings, crying Grace, Grace unto it. He was a Chieftain in the first year of Cyrus, Ezra. 2. 2. and he lived to see the building of the Temple, about the sixth year of Darius Nothus, which is a matter of a hundred years between. So he had a longer life then ordinary, which God granteth to some, because he hath something to be done by them. A short life in some cases is a blessing, 1 King. 13. 14. as Grapes gathered afore they be ripe, are freed from the violence of the winepress: as lambs slain before they be grown, escape many storms and sharp showers that others live to taste of. Some wicked live long, that they may aggravate their judgement; others dye sooner, that they may hasten it. But they are blessed, that whether they live, they live unto the Lord; or whether they die, they die unto to Lord, and in the Lord, their works following them.

Rom. 14. 8. Rev. 13. 13.

Verse 13 And Zorobabel begat Abiud] St. Luke saith, Rhesa: Hence the diversity of number and names. Matthew descends by the posterity of Abiud: Luke, of Rhesa, down to Ioseph.

And Abiud begat Eliakim, and Eliakim begat Azor, &c.] These lived in those Calamitous times of the people of God after the Captivity: and were not Kings and Captains, as being held under by other Nations: but Law-givers they were, as Iacob propheſied, and principal men among that People, till Shiloh came, Gen. 49. 10.

Verse 14. And Azor begat Sadoc, and Sadoc begat Achim] Of these and the rest, as the Scripture sets down nothing more then their bare names, so neither is there any Jewish Record, at this day Extant, of their acts. So many miseries they had, one in the neck of another, that little liberty was left them to write: though I doubt not, but the Posterity of David were then carefully observed, by as many as lookt for the consolation of Israel. But among the Jews, since our Saviours time, after the sealing up of the Babylonish Talmud, that is, after the year of Christ 500. to the year 1000. there was little or nothing written, by reason of the grievous calamities that seized upon them.

Verse 15. And Eliud begat Eleazar &c.] These might be private persons, some of them, as Ioseph and Mary were: it being the care and the endeavor of the Herods, and those afore, that held the Iews in subjection, to suppress as much as might be, the Posterity of David: at least to keep them in a low condition; for as much as it was a certain and received truth among that People, that Messiah the Prince, Dan. 9. 26. should shortly come of that Family. And this was that that held up the fainting hearts of the good people of those sad times, (when prophecy failed them, and prosperity too,) they looked for the Desire of all Nations, for the Consolation of Israel, having little else to relieve them, for the external means, unless it were that בת קול, that eccho heard in the Temple, they tell us of, which served them for an Oracle: And the miracle of the pool of Bethesda granted by God, to strengthen them in the true worship of God, under the persecution of Antiochus and other tyrants, till the days of John Baptist, and the Lord Christ.

Ver. 16. And Iacob begat Ioseph,] Whose Genealogie is here Recorded, and not Maries: it being not the custom of that people then, to set forth the Genealogies of women. As at this day, the Jews have an over-base conceit of that Sexe; saying that they have not so Divine a soul as men, but are of a lower creation, &c. and therefore they suffer them not to enter the Synagogue, but appoint them a Gallery without.

The husband of Mary, of whom was born Iesus] This is the summ of all the good news in the world, such as surpasseth the joy of Conquest, or of Harvest, *Isa.*9 3,5,6. and should therefore swallow up all discontents whatsoever.

Who is called Christ] The name of Jesus is mel in ore, melos in aure, jubilum in corde: as it was to St. Paul, who therefore names it nine several times in the ten first verses of his first Epistle to the Corinthians, as loth to come off it. Yet is not the name Jesus alone half so sweet, as when Christ is added to it, as here. For Iesus Christ betokneth such a Saviour as is anointed and appointed thereunto by God, consecrated to the Office according to his Godhead, and qualified for it according to his manhood: In both natures a Saviour, and that ex professo (as you would say) and by consent of all three persons: The Son being anointed by the Father, with the Holy Ghost: And as Sampson when clothed with the spirit, saved the people, so Christ much more. Bern.

Verse 17. So all the Generations, &c. are fourteen Generations] For memory sake, Matthew summeth up the Genealogie of our Saviour into three fourteens: like as some of the Psalms are, for the same reason, set down in order of the Alphabet. Discere voluit Socrates, nihil aliud esse quàm recordari, saith Tully. Magis autem Christi meminisse debemus quàm respirare. The soul should be as the Ark of God, the memory like the pot of Manna, preserving holy truths touching him that is the Way, the Truth, and the life. Tessaradecades. Tusc. quest. Chrysost.

Verse 18. Now the birth of Iesus Christ] A γενέσει ad γένεσιν transit. And being to relate a strange thing, and till then never heard of, he Elegantly stirs up the hearers mind with this Preface.

When as his mother Mary was espoused] An Antient and commendable custom. Adam took his wife the first day of their Creation, (she was espoused to him) but knew her not, till after the fall: Lots daughters were espoused, yet had not known man, *Gen.*19.8,14. See Deut. 22.22. Yea, the very Heathens had their espousals, Iudg. 14.1, &c. Placuit, desponsi: nuptiis hic dictus est dies, saith he in Terence. We agreed, were contracted, and the wedding-day appointed.

To Ioseph, before they came together.] Espoused they were by a special providence. 1. That Mary might not be held an harlot. 2 That being big, and needing necessary help, she might be provided for. 3. That the mysterie of Christ might be made known by degrees.

She was found with child of the holy Ghost.] This wonderfull conception of our Saviour is a Mysterie, not much to be pried into, and is therefore called an overshadowing, Luk. 1. 35. Where also, lest any should mistake this (Of) in the text for the material cause: as if the holy Ghost had begotten him of his own substance (as fathers do their children,) the whole order and manner of this conception, so far as concerneth us to know, is declared by the Angel. Mirari licet, rimari non licet.

Verse 19. Then Ioseph her husband being a just man] And yet withall a mercifull tender man of the Virgins credit. Hence that conflict and fear within himself, lest he should not do right.

And not willing to make her a publike example] That is, to wrong her, as the same word is used and expounded by the Author to the Hebrews of the Son of God, as here of the mother of God. *Heb.*6.6. with Heb 10.29. παραδειγματίσαι. Noluit ipse eam nec pœnis, nec infamiæ, imò nec risui exponere. Aret. in loc.

Was minded to put her away privily] Which yet he could hardly have done, without blame to himself, and blemish to her. So far out we are (the best of us) when destitute of Divine direction. How shamefully was that good Iosiah miscarried by his passions to his cost, when he went up against Pharaoh-Necho, without once advising with Ieremiah, Zephany, Huldah. or any other Prophet of God then living by him?

Verse 20. But while he thought on these things] And was not so well advised upon his course, God, who reserveth his holy hand for a dead lift, expedites him. The Athenians had a conceit that Minerva (their goddess) drove all their ill counsels to a happy issue. The superstitious Romanes thought that an Idol, which they called Vibilia, kept them from erring out of their way. The Divine providence is our Vibilia, that will not suffer us to miscarry, so long as we have an eye to the Patern that was shewed us in the Mount, *Exod.*25.40 In the Mount will the Lord be seen. Behold the Angel of the Lord appeared unto him] As of old he had done to Daniel being caused to flee swiftly, or with wearinesse of flight (as the Hebrew hath it) with so good a will he did it as thinking he could never come soon enough.

Ioseph, thou son of David] Albeit a poor Carpenter. A man may be as high in Gods favor, and as happy in Russet, as in Tissue. I know thy poverty (saith Christ to that Church,) but that's nothing, thou art rich.

Fear not to take unto thee) viz. From the hands of her parents, who have, by all right, the dispose of their children, as a chief part of their goods: Therefore when Satan obtained leave to vex Iob, and to touch him in his possession, he dealt with his children also. Iob. 1.

For that which is conceived in her] That holy thing, Luk. 1.35. that Holy of Holies wherein the Godhead dwelleth bodily, that is, personally; and is called the Son of God, saith the Angel there. Yet not in respect of his humane nature, for then there should be in the person of Christ two sons, viz. one of the Father, and another of the holy Ghost. Besides, Heb. 7.3. he is without father, as Man, and without mother, as God. All that can be gathered out of that place in Luke, is, that he, that was so conceived of the holy Ghost, was the natural Son of God. The union of three Persons into one nature, and of two natures into one Person, these are the great Mysteries of Godliness.

ἄντλημα. Ioh. 4.11. The well is deep, as she said, and we want wherewith to draw.

Is of the Holy Ghost.] As the Efficient, not as the Material cause. The virtus formatrix, the formative faculty which the Virgin had not, is ascribed to the power of the Holy Ghost, framing and fashioning Christ of the substance of the Virgin sanctified miraculously, and without mans help. But if no mother knows the manner of her natural Conception; what presumption shall it be for flesh and blood, to search how the Son of God took flesh of his Creature? It is enough for us to know, that he was conceived of the holy Ghost, not spermatically, but operatively, yet secretly and mystically; the Virgin her self knew not how. Fearfully and wonderfully he was made, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Psal. 139. 14, 15. with Ephes. 4.9.

Verse 21. And she shall bring forth a Son] Shiloh the Son of her secundines: that Son, that Eve made account she had got, when she had got Cain: For said she, I have gotten a man from the Lord. Or as others read it (and the Original rather favors it) I have gotten the man, the Lord. But how far she was deceived, the issue proved. Fallitur augurio spes bona sæpe suo. Hope comes halting home many times.

And thou shalt call his name Iesus] Not of ἰάομαι to heal, as some Hellenists would have it: Although it be true that he is Iehova Rophe, the Lord the Physician, by whose stripes We are healed: But of Iashang, whence Iehoshuah, Jesus. Two in the old Testament had this name. The first when he was sent as a Spie into Canaan, Numb. 13.16. had his name changed from Oshea, Let God save, to Iehoshua, God shall save. Under the Law (which brings us as it were into the Wilderness of SIN) we may wish there were a Saviour: but under the Gospel we are sure of Salvation, sith our Iehoshuah hath bound himself to fulfill all righteousness, and had therefore this name imposed upon him at his circumcision. For he assumed it not to himself (though knowing the end of his coming, and the fulness of his sufficiency, he might haue done it) nor received it from men, but from God; and that with great solemnity, by the Ministery of an Angel, who talked with a woman about our Salvation, as Satan sometime had done about our destruction Exod. 15.26.

For he shall save his people from their sins] This is the Notation and Etymon, or reason of his name, Jesus: A name above all names, Phil. 2.9. Σωτὴρ, saith the Heathen Orator, is a word so emphatical, that other tongues can hardly find a word fit to express it. Salvation properly notes the Negative part of a Christians happiness, viz. preservation from evil: chiefly from the evil of sin, (which is the mother of all our misery:) from the damning and domineering power thereof, by his merit and Spirit, by his value and vertue. Jesus therefore is a short Gospel, and should work in us strongest affections and egressions of soul after him, who hath saved us from the wrath to come. The Græcians being set free but from bodily servitude, called their deliverer a Saviour to them: and rang it out, Saviour, Saviour, so that the fowls in the air fell down dead with the Cry. That he ſhould be the ſeed of the woman, was made known to Adam, but not of what Nation, till Abraham, nor of what Tribe till Iacob, nor of what ſex, till David, nor whether born of a Virgin, till Eſay. Thus by degrees was that great Myſterie of Godlineſs revealed to mankind. If any Jew object, ſaith Chryſoſtom, How could a Virgin bring forth? Dic ei, quomodo peperit ſterilis & vetula? Ask him, How could Sarah, when old and barren, bear a child? The Bees have young, yet know not marriage. The Phœnix, they ſay, hath no parents. This head ſtone of the corner was cut out of the mountain without hands: this flower of the field, this roſe of Sharon, hath Heaven for his father, and earth for his mother. Was it not as eaſie to frame this ſecond Adam in the womb, as that firſt Adam out of the mire? Herein ſee a miracle of mercy, that the incomprehenſible God, that Circle (whoſe Center is everywhere, whoſe Circumference nowhere) ſhould be Circled, and coop'd up for nine moneths together in the narrow womb of a pure Virgin.

ever. This is ſo much the more wonderfull, becauſe the very Angels (which are far greater in glory then man) are not able to abide the preſence of God, Iſa. 6. 2. But that ſhe vowed Virginity, is both falſe and abſurd. For how could ſhe promiſe Virginity to God, and Marriage to Joſeph? ſure it is, the blemiſh will never be wiped off from ſome of the Antients, who, to eſtabliſh their own Idol, of I know not what Virginity, have written moſt wickedly, and moſt baſely of marriage, which both Chriſt honoured with his firſt Miracle, and the holy Ghoſt by overſhadowing the betrothed Virgin. As for the Papiſts that diſgrace it, they appear herein more like Devils then Divines. If the ſame God had not been the Author of Virginity and Marriage, he had never countenanced Virginity by Marriage, as he did in the Virgin Mary.

Verſe 5. And they ſaid unto him in Bethlehem] Lo, how readily and roundly, out of the Scriptures, they could anſwer to this capital queſtion; giving ſuch ſigns of the Meſſias as did evidently agree to Jeſus Chriſt. Yet were they for their obſtinacy ſo infatuated, that when God ſhewed them the man to whom their own ſigns agree, they cannot allow of him. Unleſs the Lord give a mind as well as means: ſight, as well as light, and irradiate the Organ as well as the Object, we grope as blind men in the dark: we erre in heart, as not knowing Gods ways, yet cannot wander ſo wide as to miſs of Hell; to Original blindneſs, we add actual ſtubborneſs, the Devil holding his black hand (as it were) afore our eyes, that we may not ſee and be ſaved, Acts 26. 19.

Verſe 6. And thou Bethlehem, in the Land of Judah, art not the leaſt.] Thou art the leaſt, ſaith Micah, viz. in compariſon of greater Cities, yet not the leaſt, ſaith Matthew; becauſe out of thee ſhall come a Governor, &c. In Scripture, the place of holy mens birth is remembred and Regiſtred: God loves the very ground his ſervants tread on. The Lord ſhall count, when he numbreth up the people, that this man was born there: how much more the man Chriſt Jeſus? Any intereſt or relation to him, ennobleth whatſoever place or perſon; and may juſtly comfort us againſt whatſoever troubles. The Prophet Micah, whoſe words are here cited, oppoſeth the birth of this babe of Bethlehem, to all the troops and troubles of Aſſyria.

That ſhall Rule my people] Or feed them; for the art of feeding and ruling are ſiſters. David was taken from following the Ewes to feed Gods people; ſo was Moſes, in whoſe abſence, how ſoon was Iſrael, as ſilly ſheep, gone out of the way? Chriſt is the Archſhepherd, that feeds his People daily, daintily, plentifully, pleaſantly, among the Lillies, Cant. 2. 16 yea, in his garden of ſpices, in green paſtures of his word, and by the ſtill waters of his Sacraments, where we go in and out, and find paſture, Joh. 10. 8. ſuch as breeds life, and life in more abundance, ver. 10. We lie down in peace, Jer. 23. 4. and need not fear the ſpiritual Aſſyrian, Micah 5. 5. whiles we keep us within the hedge, and run to the foddering places; ſubmitting to the Miniſters, thoſe under-ſhepherds, Cant. 1. 7, 8. who are charged to feed Chriſts ſheep, his ſheep with golden fleeces; yea to do it (as the Syriack hath it) for me, for my ſake (ſaith our Saviour) to whom Peter cannot better ſeal up his love, then by taking care of his Cure. I know how Bellarmine gloſſeth that Text; Feed my ſheep, that is, Regio more impera, Rule like an Emperor: Supremum in Eccleſia dominium tibi aſſere, ſaith Baronius; Domineer over the Church: becauſe the word here uſed (and ſo in John) ſignifieth as well to Govern as to feed. But what will they ſay to βόσκω, the other word there twice uſed by our Saviour; which always ſignifieth to feed, and not at all to Govern? But theſe men catch at Government, let go feeding; although the Fathers took the Text only of feeding by Doctrine, and that they beat upon, and urged altogether.

Verſe 10. When they ſaw the Star.] The ſight whereof they ſeem to have loſt, when they turned out of the way, it led them to Jeruſalem. But this Text is excellently Paraphraſed and applied by Biſhop Hooper, Martyr, in a Letter of his, Written to one M^rs. Anne Warcup, in theſe words: Such as travelled to find Chriſt, followed only the Star, and as long as they ſaw it, they were aſſured they were in the right way, and had great mirth in their journey. But when they entered into Ieruſalem (whereas the Star led them not thither, but unto Bethlehem) and there asked the Citizens the thing that the Star ſhewed before: As long as they tarried in Ieruſalem, and would be inſtructed where Chriſt was born, they were not only ignorant of Bethlehem, but alſo loſt the ſight of the Star that led them before. Whereof we learn in any caſe, whileſt we be going to ſeek Chriſt, which is above, to beware we loſe not the Star of Gods Word, that only is the mark that ſhews us where Chriſt is, and which way we may come unto him. But as Ieruſalem ſtood in the way, and was an impediment to theſe wiſe men: So doth the Synagogue of Antichriſt (that bears the name of Jeruſalem, that is, the Viſion of peace, and among the people now is called the Catholike (Church) ſtand in the way that Pilgrims muſt go by, thorow this world to Bethlehem, the houſe of ſaturity and plentifulneſs; and is an impediment to all Chriſtian travellers. Yea, and except the more grace of God be, will keep the Pilgrims ſtill in her, that they ſhall not come where Chriſt is adored. And to ſtay them indeed, they take away the Star of light, viz. the Word of God, that it cannot be ſeen, as you may read that other Star was hid from the wiſe men, while they asked of the Phariſees at Jeruſalem, where Chriſt was born. You may ſee what great dangers happened to theſe wiſe men, whiles they were a learning of lyars, where was Chriſt: firſt, they were out of their way, and next, they loſt their guide, &c.

With Mary his mother] Without any other assistance or attendance. Joseph haply was at work, or otherwise absent, lest the wise men should mistake him for the true father of the child.

And When they had opened their treasure, they presented unto him gifts] No great matters to make him rich: for then, what needed the holy Virgin, at her Purification, to have offered two young Pigeons, as a token of her penury, that could not reach to a Lamb? Yet something it was; Gold, Frankincense and Myrrhe, (sent them in by a special providence of God) to help to bear their charges into Egypt, whither they were now to flie.

Gold, Frankincense and Myrrhe] The best Commodities of their Country, doubtless: thereby (as by a Pepper-corn, in way of Homage or chief-rent) they acknowledged Christ to be the true Proprietary and Lord of all. Of the Elephant it is reported, that coming to feed, the first sprig he breaks, he turns it toward Heaven. Of the Stork Pliny tells us, that she offers the first-fruits of her young ones to God, by casting one of them out of the nest. God is content we have the benefit of his Creatures, so he may have the glory of them: this is all the loan he looketh for; and for this as he indents with us, *Psal.*50.15. so the Saints restipulate, Gen. 28.22. But he cannot abide that we pay this Rent to a wrong Landlord, whether to our selves, as *Deut.*8.17. or to our fellow creatures, as they to their sweet-hearts, *Hos.*2.5.

Ought we not (saith one) often in soul to go with the wise men to Bethlehem, being directed by the star of Grace, and there fall down and worship the little King: there offer the Gold of Charity, the Frankincense of Devotion, the Myrrhe of Penitency: and then return, not by cruell Herod, or troubled Jerusalem, but another way, a better way, unto our long and happy home?

Verse 12. And being warned of God in a dream, &c.] Thus were they pulled, by a sweet Providence, out of the Lions mouth, as Paul was: as Athanasius and Basil often: as Luther also, and Queen Elizabeth of famous memory: for whose execution a Warrant once came down under Seal, Gardner being the chief Engineer. And when thorow a Sea of sorrows, she had sworn to the Crown, Treasons there were every year so many, that she said in Parliament, she rather marvelled that she was, then mused that she should not be. But no man is master of his own life, much less of anothers, as our Saviour told Pilate: See Job 24. 22. My times are in thy hands, saith David, Deliver me from the hands of mine enemies, and from them that persecute me. So Queen Elizabeth at Woodstock, after a great deliverance, Lord, look upon the wounds of thy hands, said she, and despise not the Work of thy hands. Thou hast written me down in thy book of preservation With thine own hand. Oh read thine own hand Writing, and save me, &c. And God heard her, and hid the silver thred of her precious life, in the endless maze of his bottomless mercies. Mr. Fox makes mention of one Laremouth, alias Williamson, Chaplain to Lady Anne of Cleeve, a Scotchman, to whom, in Prison, it was said, as he thought, Arise and go thy ways; whereto when he gave no great heed at first, the second time it was so said; upon this, as he fell to his prayers, it was said the third time likewise to him, which was half an hour after. So he arising upon the same, immediatly a piece of the Prison-wall fell down: And as the Officers came in at the Outer-gate of the Prison, he leaping over the Ditch escaped; And in the way meeting a certain beggar, changed his coat with him, and coming to the Sea-shore, where he found a Vessel ready to go over, was taken in, and escaped the search, which was straitly laid for him all the Country over.

Verse 13. Behold, the Angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream] Angels cannot enlighten the mind, or powerfully incline the will (that's proper to the holy Ghost to do) but as Spirits and Instruments of the holy Ghost, they can insinuate themselves into the phantasie (as here to Joseph) stir up phantasms of good things, propound truth to the mind, advise and perswade to it, as Councellors, and inwardly instigate, as it were, by speaking and doing after a spiritual manner, suggesting good thoughts, as the Apostate Angels do evil. How oft had we fallen, had not these Guardians hindered (as Michael opposed Satan) by removing occasions, or casting in good instincts into us, either asleep or awake, &c.

Take the young childe, and flee into Egypt.] Perhaps thorow that terrible and roaring wilderneſs of Arabia: However, this was a part of his paſſion; for, from his cratch to his croſs, he ſuffered many a little death all his life long; And as it is ſaid of that French King, That he acted more wars, then others ever ſaw: ſo our Saviour ſuffered more miſeries, then we ever heard of. Baniſhed he was betime, to bring back his baniſhed to Paradiſe that is above, their proper Countrey; towards the which we groan and aſpire, as oft as we look towards heaven, waiting, as with ſtretched out necks, for the manifeſtation of the ſons of God; and ſaying with Siſera's mother, Why is his chariot ſo long in coming? why tarry the wheels of his chariots? Make haſte, my beloved, and be like a Roe, or a young Hart upon the mountains of ſpices. Verſe 16. Then Herod when he ſaw that he was mocked] He had mocked them, and yet takes it ill to be mocked of them, to have his own meaſure: He never takes notice of this, that God uſually maketh fools of his enemies; lets them proceed, that they may be fruſtrated; and when they are gone to the utmoſt reach of their tedter, pulls them back to their task with ſhame.

Was exceeding wroth, and ſent forth and ſlew] In their anger they ſlew a man, ſaith Jacob of his two ſons, Curſed be their anger, for it was fierce, &c. Gen. 49. 6, 7. It is indeed the fury of the unclean ſpirit, that old manſlayer, a very beaſt within the heart of a man; a ſhort madneſs, as we ſee in Saul, whom the Devil poſſeſt by this paſſion, Epheſ. 4. 17. in Lamech, who ſlew a man in his heat, and boaſted of it; as Alexander Phereus conſecrated the Javelin wherewith he ſlew Poliphron; in David, who ſwore a great oath what he would do to Nabal, by ſuch a time: And when Uzziah was ſmitten, for his carting the Ark, how untowardly ſpake he? But immoderate sorrow for losses past hope of recovery, is more sullen then useful: our stomack may be bewrayed by it, not our wisdom; and although something we may yield to nature in these cases, yet nothing to impatiency.

At which time a pretty ſpectacle it was to behold Chriſt ſtriving with Antichriſt for maſtery. For whatſoever the Pope and his Champions could do to the contrary, all fell out rather, as at Philippi, unto the furtherance of the Goſpel. So was it here in Q. Maries time; do what they could, the Chriſtian Congregation in London, were ſometimes fourty, ſometimes a hundred, ſometimes two hundred. I have heard of one (ſaith M. Fox) that being ſent to them to take their names, and to eſpy their doings, yet in being among them was converted, and cryed them all mercy. Harpſfield hearing that the Queen lay a dying, haſted home from London, to burn thoſe ſix that he had in his cruel cuſtody. No more had this Archelaus. Pope Paul the third, when his son Farnesis had committed an unspeakable violence on the Person of Cosmus Charius Bishop of Fanum, and then poisoned him, held himself excused, that he could say, Hæc vitia, me non commonstratore, didicit: He never learned this of the father. But Archelaus though he could never attain to his fathers craft, yet he had learnt his cruelty. Fierce he was, but fooliſh: ſavage, but ſilly, a ſlug, a ſlow belly, an evil beaſt: wherefore the Jews ſoon rebelled againſt him; and Auguſtus (after ten years abuſe of his authority) baniſhed him to Vienna; or as others ſay, to Lyons in France; ſetting up in his ſtead his brother Herod, the ſame that derided and ſet at nought our Saviour at his paſſion, as Saint Hierom writeth.

When one commended the Popes Legate at the Council of Baſil, Sigiſmund the Emperour anſwered, Tamen Romanus eſt. That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the Prophets.] For the book of Judges was written by ſundry Prophets, in ſeveral Ages. And there be very grave Authors of opinion, that Ezra (that skilful Scribe) either himſelf alone, or with the help of his colleagues, godly, and learned men like himſelf, inſpired by the holy Ghoſt, compiled and compoſed thoſe books of Joſhua, Judges, Samuel and Kings, out of divers Annals, preſerved by the Churches of thoſe Ages, wherein thoſe things were acted.

And it is aſcribed to three ſorts of men, uſually ſet above others (as Divines have well obſerved.) 1. To ſuch as are ſet apart to ſingular ſanctimony, as the high Prieſt, whoſe crown is called Nezer, Exod. 29.6. 2. To ſuch as in dignity and authority are ſet above others, as Kings, whoſe diadem is called Nezer, 2 Sam 1.10. 3. To ſuch as were ſeparated by ſome religious vow, as to the order of the Nazarites, whoſe hair encreaſing on their heads, as an external ſign of their vow, was called Nezer, Numb. 6.18. As for our Saviour, it is not likely that he nouriſhed his hair; becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith (in that Age) it was uncomely for men to have long hair. It was enough for him, that he was a Nazarite in the truth and ſubſtance of that Law. and a ſingular comfort it is to us, that although we have broken our vows, and ſo deeply gaſhed our conſciences, as Jacob did, yet ſo long as it is of infirmity and forgetfulneſs, not of obſtinacy and maliciouſneſs, this famous Nazarite, this arch-votary, hath expiated our defaults in this kinde; and through him we are in Gods ſight, as Jeruſalems Nazarites, Lam. 4.7. Purer then the ſnow, and whiter then the milk. And therefore ſith God thinks not the worſe of us, let not us think the worſe of our ſelves, for the involuntary violation of our vows.

For although he carried the matter ſo cleanly and cunningly, that Philip took him for a true convert, and baptized him; yet Peter ſoon ſaw that he was in the gall or venome of bitterneſs (for the word uſed, Deut. 29. 18. whereunto the Apoſtle alludes, ſignifieth both) and therefore preſcribes him an Antidote, the very ſame that John doth here this generation of vipers, Repent, if perhaps the thoughts of thy heart may be forgiven thee. His wicked thought is called ἐπίνοια the godly change of minde that the Apoſtle perſwadeth him unto, is called μετάνοια he that by ſome miſchance hath drunk poiſon, muſt caſt it up again as ſoon as he can, ere it get to the vitals. Repentance is the ſouls vomit, which is the hardeſt kinde of phyſick, but the wholſomeſt. Knoweſt thou not, that the goodneſs of God ſhould lead thee to repentance? Is there not mercy with God therefore that he may be feared? ſhould not men rent their hearts, becauſe God is gracious, and turn to the Lord, becauſe he will multiply pardon? To argue from mercy to liberty, is the Devils Logick, and makes God repent him of his favours to ſuch, as David did of his kindneſs to Nabal. Rather we ſhould argue from mercy to duty, as Joſeph did to his maſter in a temptation; from deliverance to obedience, with David, Pſal. 116. 8,9. And therefore return to our fathers houſe, with the Prodigal, becauſe there is bread enough; therefore repent, becauſe his Kingdom is at hand, and would be laid hold on. Ye have to do with deaf men, dead men, living carcases, walking sepulchres of themselves. Now therefore as our Saviour lifted up his voyce, when he said, Lazarus, come forth: so must Christs Ministers (when they speak to such as lie rotting and stinking in the graves of their corruptions) cry aloud, Awake thou that sleepest, and stand up from the dead, that Christ may give thee light. Ecclesia (the Church) is a word in use among the Athenians, and signifies an Assembly of Citizens, called out of the multitude (as it were) by name, or in their ranks, by the voyce of the publike Cryer, to hear some speech or sentence of the Senate. The Church in like sort is a company called out of the Kingdom of Satan, by the voyce of Gods Ministers, as it were Cryers, to hear the doctrine of the Gospel revealed from heaven. There are that observe, that John Baptist entred upon his calling in the year of Jubilee, which used to be proclaimed by a Cryer with the sound of a trumpet, and that in allusion thereunto, he is called, The voyce of a Cryer.

Prepare ye the way of the Lord] Suffer the terrours of the Lord to seize upon your souls: take not up bucklers against the strokes of Gods Law, bring not your buckets to quench the motions of his Spirit, knocking at your hearts by the hammer of his Word; Make much of the least beginnings of grace, even those they call repressing; since they prepare the heart for conversion. Open the everlasting doors, that the King of glory may come in, that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith. As Esther leaned upon her two maids, when she came before the King: So let the soul lean upon attrition of the Law, and contrition of the Gospel: so shall the King of glory stretch out the golden Scepter of his grace, and we shall live. As John Baptist was Christs fore-runner into the world; so must repentance be his fore-runner into our hearts: for he that repenteth not, the Kingdom of God is far from him: he cannot see it for his lusts that hang in his light.

Rom. 4. θηρεύειν derived of θήρ a Viper.

Who hath fore-warned you?] Who hath privily, and under-hand as it were shewed you, and set you in a course of avoyding the danger that hangs over your heads, as by a twined threed. The wrath of God is revealed from Heaven, and Hell hath enlarged her self, and even gapes for you: who gave an inkling thereof, and sent you hither for help? &c.

From the wrath to come] Called the Damnation of Hell, Chap. 23.33. which hath Torments without end, and past imagination. For, Who knoweth the power of thine anger, saith David? Even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath. That is, as I conceive it,

Psal. 90.11. Let a man fear thy wrath never so much, he is sure to feel a fair deal more thereof, then ever he could have feared. When but a drop of Gods displeasure lights upon a poor soul in this present world, what intolerable pain is it put to? The spirit of a man may

Prov. 18.14. sustain his infirmity, saith Solomon, q.d. some sorry shift a man may make to rub thorow an outward affliction, and to bear it off by head and shoulders, But a wounded spirit who can bear? q.d. the stoutest cannot possibly stand under it: there's no proportion between the back and the burden; its able to crush and crack the mightiest amongst us. Judas chose an halter rather then to endure it: and well he might, when as Job (with Iob 7.15. whom God was but in jest, in comparison) preferred strangling, and any death before such a life. But all this (alas) is but present wrath, and nothing at all to the wrath to come. A phrase of speech that involves and carries in it stings and horrors, woe and alas, flames flames of wrath, and the worm that never dieth, trembling and gnashing of teeth, Seas of vengeance, Rivers of brimstone, unutterable and unsufferable tortures and torments. We read of Racking, Roasting, Hanging, Stoning, putting men under harrows of Iron, and Saws of Iron, Scratching off their flesh with thorns of the wilderness, pulling their skins over their ears, and other exquisite and unheard of miseries that men have here been put unto. But whats all this to the wrath to come? not so much as a flea-biting as a prick with a pin, or fillip with a finger: no, though a man should go thorow a thousand cruell deaths every hour, his whole life thorowout. Oh bless and kiss that blessed Son of God, that bore for us the brunt of this unsupportable wrath, even Jesus that delivered us from the Wrath to come, 1 Thes. 1. 10. And shun sin, that draws hell at the heels of it. Is it nothing to lose an immortal soul to purchase an ever-living death? ἐπεμπαίζοντο. Heb 11.

Verse 8. Bring forth therefore fruits] q.d. You cannot wash your hands in innocency, wash them therefore in tears: there's no way to quench hell flames, but by the tears of true Repentance; to prevent the wrath to come, but by bearing those fruits of righteousness that are by Christ Jesus to the glory and praise of God, Phil. 1. 11. Optima & aptissima pœnitentia est nova vita, saith Luther. Which saying, though condemned by Pope Leo, is certainly an excellent saying.

Meet for Repentance.] That weigh just as much as Repentance, that may parallel, and prove it to be right, evince and evidence it to be a repentance never to be repented of. There is no grace but hath a counterfeit. See therefore that your graces be of the right stamp, an effectual faith, laborous love, patient hope, &c. as the Apostle hath it. See that your performances and whole course be such as becomes Repentance, and may justifie it; as may bear weight in the balance of the sanctuary, and amount to as much as Repentance comes to. And albeit your righteousnesses be but as a menstruous clout, and your works at best (if tried by the fire of the Word) would burn (which made good Nehemiah to pray for pardon of his Reformations) yet upon your true Repentance for the evil that cleaves to your best works, your souls may be saved from the wrath to come; yea they are such as accompany salvation, and comprehend it, as the Greek Scholiast expounds that Text. Labour therefore to have a heart full of goodness, as those Romans, Chap. 15. 14. and a life full of good Works, as Tabitha, Act. 9. 33. such as may beseem amendment of life. 2 Cor. 7. 1 Thes. 1. 3. Ἄξια τῆς μετανοίας. Isa. 64 6. 1 Cor. 3. Neh. 13. 22. Heb. 6. 9. ἐχόμενα. i.e. κατεχόμενα σωτηρίας.

Verse 9. And think not to say within your selves.] Hypocrites are never without their starting-holes, out of which they must be ferreted. There are infinite turnings and windings in the heart of man, studious of deceiving it self by some Paralogism. Therefore the Apostle so oft premiseth, Be not deceived, when he reckons up Reprobates, 1 Cor. 6. 9. Eph 5. 6. &c. παραλογιζόμενοι ἑαυτούς. Iam. 1. 22.

We have Abraham to our Father] What of that? so had Ishmael an out-cast, Esau a castaway, &c. External priviledges profit not, where nothing better can be pleaded. Nabal the fool was of the Line of faithful Caleb, Qui implevit post me, Followed me fully, saith God, Numb. 14. 24. Vertue is not, as Lands, Inheritable. Why should these men brag they had Abraham to their father, when they might have observed, that God had raised up of this stone, a son to Caleb?

God is able] His power is, 1. Absolute whereby he can do more then he doth. 2. Actual whereby he doth that only that he willeth. Some things he can do, but will not, as here, and Matth. 26. 53. Rom. 9. 18. Some things he neither will nor can, as to lye, to dye, to deny himself. 2 Tim. 2. 13. Tit. 1. 3. Heb. 6. 17. for these things contradict his essence, and imply impotency. But whatsoever he willeth, without impediment he effecteth, Isa. 46. 10. Psal. 115. 3.

Of these stones to raise up children to Abraham] This he could do, though he will not. And yet he doth as much as this, when he takes the stone out of the heart: when of carnal he makes us a people created again, Psal. 102. 18. when out of a hollow person (one as empty and void of heart, as the hollow of a tree is of substance) is fetcht out heart of Oak, and of a wild asse-colt-born, is made a man: See both these similitudes, Job 11. 12. It was a strange change that Satan mentioned and motioned to our Saviour of turning stones into bread. But nothing so strange as turning stony hearts into hearts of flesh. This is a work of Gods Almighty power, the same that he put forth in raising Christ from the dead, Ephes. 1. 19. (where the Apostle, the better to set forth Iob 11. 12. expounded.

He comes ſeeking fruit from time to time, but findeth none, Luke 13. 7. Now therefore he hath laid down his basket, and taken up his axe, as reſolved to ruine you, unleſs preſent courſe be taken. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit.] So God is graciouſly pleaſed to ſtile our poor performances; in every of which there is ſomething of his, as well as ſomething of our own. That which is his, he accepts, that which is ours he pardons. But good it muſt be, quoad fontem, the Spirit of God: and quoad finem, the glory of God. Negative goodneſs ſerves no mans turn, to ſave him from the axe. It is ſaid of Ithacius, that the hatred of the Priſcillian Hereſie, was all the Vertue that he had. The evil ſervant did not riot out his Talent: thoſe Reprobates, Mat. 25. robbed not the Saints, but relieved them not. Moab and Ammon were baſtardized and baniſhed the ſanctuary to the tenth Generation, for a meer omiſſion, becauſe they met not Gods Iſrael with bread and water in the wilderneſs: And Edom is ſore threatned, for not harbouring them when ſcattered by the Chaldeans. Verſe 11. I indeed baptize you with water to Repentance.] There is a twofold baptiſm, Heb. 6. 2. the Doctrine of baptiſms, viz. Fluminis & flaminis, external and internal, the putting away of the pollution of the fleſh, and the anſwer of a good conſcience (purged from dead works) to God-ward. When theſe two meet, when men are baptized with water to Repentance, then baptiſm ſaveth, 1 Pet. 3. 21. that is, it effectually aſſureth Salvation, whenſoever by the Spirit and faith, the baptized comes to be united to Chriſt, and to feel the love of God ſhed abroad in his ſoul, whereby is wrought in him a ſpirit of Repentance, a grief for ſin, as it is an offence againſt God. And hereupon St. Peter ſaith, Baptiſm ſaveth, in the preſent tenſe: implying that it is of permanent and perpetual uſe; effectual to ſave and ſeal up the promiſes, whenſoever we repent. From which happy time, baptiſm once received, remains a fountain always open for ſin and for uncleanneſs, to thoſe that mourn over him that bled over them; a Laver of Regeneration, a waſhing of the ſpirit, who powreth clean water upon them: ridding and rinſing them from all their ſins, paſt, preſent, and future. Provided, that they ſtand to the Covenant and order of baptiſm, in a continual renovation of faith and Repentance, as occaſion ſhall be offered. This Doctrine of baptiſms (now cleared by Divines) divers of the Ancient Doctors underſtood not: which diſheartned Piſcator from ſpending much time upon them.

(my proper profeſſion) the greateſt part of my knowledge is the leaſt part of mine ignorance. I, in my little Cell, ſaith Hierom, with the reſt of the Monks my fellow-ſinners, dare not determine of great matters. This is all I know, that I know nothing, ſaid Socrates: and Anaxarchus went further, and ſaid, that he knew not that neither, that it was nothing that he knew. This is the utmoſt of my wiſdom (ſaid David Chytraus) that I ſee my ſelf to be without all wiſdom. And if I would at any time delight my ſelf in a fool, ſaith Seneca, I need not ſeek far, I have my ſelf to turn to. Thus the heavieſt ears of corn ſtoop moſt toward the ground: Boughs the more laden they are, the more low they hang: and the more direct the Sun is over us, the leſs is our ſhadow; So the more true worth is in any man, the leſs ſelf-conceitedneſs; and the lower a man is in his own eyes, the higher he is in Gods. Surely John Baptiſt loſt nothing by his humility and modeſty here: for our Saviour extols him to the multitude, Math. 11. and there are that doubt not to affirm (where they have it I know not) that for his humility on earth, he is dignified with that place in heaven, from whence Lucifer fell. Sure it is. That he that humbleth himſelf ſhall be exalted. If men reckon us as we ſet ſelves, God values us according to our abaſements. With the holy Ghoſt, and with fire.] That is, with that fiery holy Ghoſt, that ſpirit of judgement and of burning, wherewith the filth of the daughters of Zion is waſhed away, Iſa. 4. 4. that they may eſcape that unquenchable fire, mentioned in the verſe next following. This fire of the ſpirit muſt be fetcht from heaven, Lumen de lumine, from the father of lights, who giveth his ſpirit to them that ask it. It muſt be a coal from his Altar, which when you have once gotten, your heart muſt be the hearth to uphold it; your hands, the tongs to build it; Gods Ordinances, the fuell to feed it; the Prieſts lips, the bellows to blow it up into a flame: So ſhall we find it (according to the nature of fire) 1. To illighten us; as the leaſt ſpark of fire lightens it ſelf at leaſt, and may be ſeen in the greateſt darkneſs. 2. To enliven and revive us; for whatſoever is of the ſpirit is ſpirit, that is, nimble and active, full of life and motion. A bladder is a dull lumpiſh thing, ſo is a bullet: but put wind into the one, and fire to the other in a Gun, and they will flee far. Fire is the moſt active of all other Elements, as having much form, little matter; and therefore the Latines call a dull droniſh man, a fireleſs man, which God cannot away with. What thou doeſt, do quickly, ſaid our Saviour to Judas: So odious to him is dulneſs in any buſineſs. Baruch, full of the ſpirit, repaired the wall of Jeruſalem earneſtly, Nehem. 3. 20. Se accendit, he burſt out into heat, and ſo finiſhed his part in ſhorter time. I preſs toward the mark, ſaith Paul, διώκω, I perſecute it, Phil. 3. 14. Never was he ſo mad in perſecuting the Saints, Act. 26. 11. as after his converſion, he was judged to be, the other way, 2 Cor. 5. 13.

To Elevate and carry the heart heaven-ward, as fire naturally aſpireth, and the ſpark fleeth upwards, to kindle our Sacrifices, and make us heavenly-minded; to break out at length, though for a while it lie under the weight of ſin, that doth ſo eaſily beſet us: as fire may lie puffing and blowing under green wood, as almoſt ſmothered. 5. Right ſo Chriſt (and his trials) purgeth chaff and corruption out of us, and nouriſheth and increaſeth his graces in us. Contrariwiſe, the Devil, what evil ſoever is in us, he confirmeth it; what faith or other good thing ſoever, he weakneth it. But Chriſt hath prayed for his (though never ſo hard laid at) that their faith fail not, and giveth them in time of fanning, to fall low at his feet, as wheat, when the wicked, as light chaff, are ready to flee in his face, as murmuring at their hard meaſure, with thoſe miſcreants in the wilderneſs.

A Metaphorical fire doubtleſs, and differs from material fire. 1. In reſpect of the violence, for it is unſpeakable. 2. Of the durance, for it is unquenchable; 3. Of illumination, for though it burn violently to their vexation, yet it ſhines not to their comfort. 4. augustissimum, a most majestical meeting of the three Persons in Trinity, about the work of mans redemption, as once about his creation, *Gen.*1. 26. Let us make man: The Hebrews interpret it, I and my judgement-hall; by which phrase, the Trinity of old, was implied. For a Judgement-Hall in Israel consisted of three at least; which in their close manner of speech, they applyed to God; but their posterity understood it not. And as in the matter of mans creation and redemption, so likewise of his sanctification; remarkable is that of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 12.4,5,6,7. where the diversities of gifts are said to be of the Spirit: The diversities of ministeries (whereby these gifts are administred) of the Lord, that is, of Christ, and the diversities of operations (effected by the gifts and ministeries) to be of God the Father. Jarch. 1 Cor. 12. 4, 5, 6. exp.

That was more then ridiculous (nay it was blasphemous) that those Pilgrims, that went to Jerusalem to fight in the Holy war (as they called it) did carry a goose before them, pretending it to be the holy Ghost. These were drunk with the wine of the whore of Babylons abominations; and not filled with the Spirit, as St. Stephen was, and Barnabas, and others of old; as of late, among many, that famous Beza, De quo collega sæpe dicebant, eum sine felle vivere. And himself reports of himself, and his colleagues, in an Epistle to Calvin, that, disputing with a Spanish Jesuit about the Eucharist, the Jesuit (saith he) called us Vulpes, & simias, & serpentes, foxes, apes, serpents, My answer was this, Non magis nos credere, quam transubstantiationem. So that Angel John Bradford (as one calleth him) when he reasoned with Alphonsus a Castro; The Fryer was in a wonderful rage, and spake so high, that the whole house rang again, chafing with om and cho, saith Mr. Fox. But Bradford answered him with meekness of wisdom, and, like the waters of Siloe at the foot of Sion, ran softly. Yea, he will rest in his love, as abundantly well pleased, he will joy therein with singing. So well thinketh God of his Son Christ, and of us thorow him; as some of the Ancients rendered this word, εὐδόκησα, In quo bene sensi. So (after Irenæus) Tertullian, Cyprian and Augustine interpret it. And yet, as well as he thought of his only Son, he spared him not, but delivered him up for us all, Rom. 8. 32. whereupon St. Bernard thus cryes out, O quantum dilecti, pro quo filius ipse aut non dilectus, aut saltem neglectus? God so loved his Son, that he gave him all the world for his possession, Psal. 2. but he so loved the world, as he gave Son, and all for its redemption. One calls this an hyperbole, an excess of love, a miracle of mercy, a sic without a sicut. God so loved the loved, so infinitely, so incomparably, so incomprehensibly, as that there is no similitude in nature, whereby to express it. Abraham (Gods friend) shewed his love to him, in not withholding his only Son Isaac: But what was Isaac to Christ? or what was Abrahams love to Gods? He did that freely and voluntary, that Abraham would never have done, but upon a command: Besides, Isaac was to be offered up after the manner of holy Sacrifices, but Christ suffered after the manner of Malefactours. And yet further, Isaac was in the hand of a tender ἐδώκα τὴν ἀγαπητήν μου ἐχθρῶν ψυχὴν μου Dedi dilectam animam meam. Vul. 1. Were he never so much displeased before, yet upon the sight of this his well-beloved Son, in whom he is well pleased, all shall be calm and quiet, as the sea was, when once Jonas was cast into it.

Verse 1. Then was Jesus led up]

LEst haply the people, hearing that testimony from Heaven, should come and take him by force to make him a King; as John 6.15. to try their love also to him, who was thus overclouded, as the Sun in his first rising.

Led up of the Spirit] The better to fit him thereby for the Ministry. Luther observed of himself, that when God was about to set him upon any special service, he either laid some fit of sickness upon him beforehand, or turned Satan loose upon him; who so buffeted him (eft-soons) by his temptations, ut nec calor, nec sanguis, nec sensus, nec vox supereſſet, that neither heat, nor blood, nor sense, nor voyce remained: The very venome of the temptations drank up his spirit, and his body seemed dead, as Justus Jonas, that was by, and saw it, reported of him in his Epistle to Melanchton. Hence also it was, that in his Sermons, God gave him such a grace (saith Mr. Fox) that when he preached, they that heard him thought, every one, his own temptations to be severally touched and noted. Whereof when signification was given unto him by his friends, and he demanded how that could be? Mine own manifold temptations (saith he) and experiences are the cause thereof: For from his tender years he was much beaten and exercised with spiritual conflicts, as Melanchton in his life testifieth. Also Hieronymus Wellerus, schollar to the said M. Luther recordeth, that he oftentimes heard Luther his Master report of himself, that he had been assaulted and vexed with all kinde of temptations (saving only with that of Covetousness) and was thereby fitted for the work of the Lord. Whence also he was wont to say, that three things make a Preacher, Meditation, Prayer, and Temptation.

Into the wilderness] Likely the wilderness of Sinai, where Moses and Elias had fasted before. These three great fasters, met afterwards, in Mount Tabor: God promiseth to turn his peoples fasting into feasting, Zech.8.19, The Devil took advantage of the place here, to assault our Saviour in the desart, but was beaten on his own dunghil, that we might overcome through him that loved us, *Rom.*8. the fiend being already foiled by Christ.

To be tempted of the Devil] No sooner was Christ out of the water of Baptism, then in the fire of Temptation. So David, after his anointing, was hunted as a Partridge upon the mountains. Israel is no sooner out of Egypt, then Pharoah pursues them: Hezekiah no sooner had kept that solemn Passover, then Sennacherib comes up against him. St. Paul is assaulted with vile temptations, after the abundance of his revelations; and Christ teacheth us, after forgiveness of sins obtained, to look for temptations, and to pray against them. Whiles Jacob would be Labans drudge and packhorse, all was wel; but when once he began to flee, he makes after him with all his might. All was jolly quiet at Ephesus before S. Paul came thither; but then, there arose no smal stir about that way. the Devil troubled him not. But now, that he is to enter more publikely upon his office of Mediatorship, the Tempter pierceth his tender soul with many sorrows, by solicitation to sin. And dealt he so with the green tree? what will he do with dry? Temptations (besides those that come from God, which are only probationis, not perditionis as the other) are of two sorts: for either they are of seducement, Jam. 1. 15. or of buffeting and grievance, 2 Cor. 12. 7. either of allurement or affrightment. In the former we are pressed with some darling corruption, whereto our appetites by nature are most propense: In the later, we are dogged with foulest lusts of Atheism, Idolatry, Blasphemy, Murther, &c. that Nature startles at: In these the Devil tempts alone, and that so grosly, that the very flesh is ashamed of it. But in the former, that come more immediately from the flesh, the Devil only interposeth himself, and speaks his good word for them; whence they are called Messengers of Satan, 2 Cor. 12. and Eph. 4. 26. we are said in anger to give place to the Devil; and in resisting of lusts, we resist the Devil, Jam. 4. 7.

πειράζω of πείρω, to pierce thorow. Irritamenta, vel Terriculamenta

Verse 2. And when he had fasted forty days, &c. All Christs actions are for our instruction, not all for our imitation. We may not imitate the works miraculous of Christ, and proper to him as Mediator. The ignorance of this caused some to counterfeit themselves Christs: As one Moor in K. Edward the sixths time, and one Hacket in Q. Elizabeths time, David George, and sundry others, according to Mat. 24. 24. Neither need we seek to imitate him in his infirmities, which (though they were not sinful, but only natural, and therefore unblameable) yet import a weakness (as that he was hungry, weary, sleepy, &c.) and so, though they be in us, yet we need not strive the attaintment of them. But we must imitate the Lord Christ in all his imitable graces and actions: shewing forth the praises, or vertues of him that hath called us out of darkness into his marvellous light. The word signifies to preach them abroad; for we should practise those vertues so clearly, that our Lives may be as so many Sermons upon the life of Christ. It is a dishonour to a dear friend, to hang his picture in a dark hole, and not in a conspicuous place, that it may appear we rejoyce in it as an ornament to us: Think the same of Christs image and graces, shew them forth we must, and express them to the world; walking in Christ, Col. 2. 6. yea, as Christ, 1 John 2. 6. who therefore left us a copy that we might write after it, a sampler that we might work by it, a patern that we should follow his steps, 1 Pet. 2. 21. And although we cannot follow him passibus aequis, yet we must shew our good-wills, stretching and straining our utmost, as St. Paul did: striving what we can to resemble him, not as a picture doth a man in outward lineaments only; but as a son doth his father (for he is the father of eternity, Isa 9. 6.) in nature and disposition; and as servants, labouring to do as our Lord John 13. 15. who therefore washed his Disciples feet, to give us an example of humility; as he did likewise of meekness, Matth. 11. 29. patience, 1 Pet. 2. 21. obedience, Heb. 12. 2 diligence and fidelity in his function, Heb. 3. 1, 2. fewness of words, yet boldness of speech, going about, and doing all possible good, beneficence to the poor Saints, 2 Cor. 8, 9. constancy in profession, 1 Tim. 6. 13. forgiveness of others, and love to the brethren, Eph. 5. 2. Be ye therefore followers herein of Christ, as dear children, not fashioning your selves according to the former lusts in your ignorance; but as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation, 1 Pet. 1. 14, 15.

τὰς ἀρετὰς 1 Pet. 1 9. ἐξαγγείλῃς. Vatablus. Exemplar quod oculo conspicitur. ἐπιτεινόμενος Phil. 3. 14.

He was afterward ahungred.] Our Saviour was tempted all that forty days space, saith St Luke: but these three worst assaults were reserved to the last. So deals the Devil with the Church (which is Christ mystical:) He never ceaseth tempting, though never so often repulsed; and is therefore called Beelzebub as some will have it, The Lord of flyes, because the fly is noted for an impudent creature, that will soon return to the bait, though beaten away but erewhile. Hence those many bickerings and buffetings we meet with all our life long: And hence those sharpest encounters and terrible conflicts many times at the hour of death. The Israelites met with many tryals and troubles in the wilderness: Amalek and the Amorites, sore thirst, , and fiery serpents, &c. but were never so put to't, as when they came to take possession of the promised Land; for then all the Kings of Canaan combined to keep them out. So the devil, furious enough at all times, most of all bestirs him at last cast, because he knows his time is but short, Apoc. 12. 12. For death sets a Saint out of his gun-shot. Satan may compass the earth, but not enter the lists of Heaven. He tempted Adam in the earthly Paradise, he cannot tempt in the heavenly: Hence his malice, malice whiles he may. Morientum nempè bestiarum violentiores sunt morsus (ut ille olim de semidirutâ Carthagine:) Beasts that have their deaths-wound, bite cruelly, spurn exceedingly.

ὁ πειράζων. Verse 3. Then came unto him the Tempter] So called, because he politikely feels our pulses which way they beat, and accordingly fits us a penny-worth. He sets a wedge of gold before covetous Achan, a Courtezan Cozbi, before a voluptuous Zimri, a fair preferment before an ambitious Absolom: and finds well that a fit object is half a victory. So dealt his agents with those ancient Christians, ἐπρίσθησαν, ἐπειράσθησαν, they were Heb. 11.37. sawn asunder, they were tempted, saith the Apostle; to wit, with the proffers of preferment, would they but have renounced their Religion, and done sacrifice to an Idol. So the Pope tempted Luther with wealth and honour. But all in vain; he turned him to God, Et valde protestatus sum, saith he, me nolle sic satiari ab eo, he said flat, that Melch. Adam. God should not put him off with these low things. Here was a man full of the Spirit of Christ. The Tempter came to Christ, but found nothing in him; that matter was not malleable. In vain shall the Devil strike fire, if we finde not tinder: In vain shall he knock at the door, if we look not out to him at the window. Let us but divorce the flesh from the world, and the Devil can do us no hurt. Ita cave tibi, ut caveas teipsum. From that naughty man my self, good Lord deliver me, said one.

If thou be the Son of God] As the Devil quarrel'd and questioned the Law given in Paradise, as nought, or naught: so doth he here the voyce from heaven, as a meer imposture. And this he did out of deep and desperate malice; for he could not be ignorant nor doubtful. Neither is his dealing otherwise with us (many times) who are too ready (at his instigation) to doubt of our spiritual Sonship. We need not help the Tempter, by holding it a duty to doubt; this is to light a candle before the Devil, as we use to speak. Rather let us settle and secure this, that we are indeed the Sons of God, and heirs of heaven, by passing thorow the narrow womb of repentance, that we may be born again, and by getting an effectual faith; the property whereof is to adopt as well as to justifie; viz. ratione objecti, by means of Christ the object upon whom faith layeth hold, and into whom it engraffs the Believer, after an unspeakable manner. Now ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, Gal. 3.26. John 1. 12. who hath both laid down the price of this greatest Priviledge, Heb. 9. 15. Gal. 4.5. and sealed it up to us by his Spirit, crying Abba Father in our hearts, whatever Satan or our own misgiving hearts object to the contrary, Gal. 4.6. Rom. 8.15. Ephes. 1.13.

Command that these stones be made bread.] And so distrust the Providence of God for relieving thy body in this hunger; help thy self by working a preposterous miracle, in this point of Gods providence for this present life. Satan troubled David and Jeremiah, and so he doth many good souls at this day, who can sooner trust God with their souls then with their bodies: and for a crown, then for a crust, as those Disciples, Matth. 16.8.

Verse 4. But he answered and said, It is written] With this his sore, and great, and strong sword of the Spirit, doth the Lord here punish Leviathan that crooked piercing serpent, Isa. 27.1. With these shafts out of Gods Quiver, with these Pibbles chosen out of the silver streams of the Scriptures, doth he prostrate the Goliah of hell. The word of God hath a power in it to quail and to quash Satans temptations, far better then that wooden dagger, that leaden sword of the Papists, their holy water, crossings, grains, dirty reliques, &c. It is not the sign of the cross, but the word of the cross that overthrows Satan. He can no more abide by it, then an Owl by the shining of the Sun. Set therefore the Word against the temptation, and the sin is laid. Say, I must not do it, I may not, I dare not: For it is forbidden in such a place, and again in such a place. And be sure to have places of Scripture ready at hand (as Saul had his spear and pitcher ready at his head, even while he slept) that ye may resist the Devil, stedfast in the faith, grounded on the Word. Joseph overcame him by remembring the seventh Motive. 48. Commandment: And David, by hiding this Word in his heart, Psal. 119.11. Wicked therefore was that advice of D. Bristow to his Agents, to labour still to get hereticks out of their weak and false Castle of holy Scriptures, into the plain fields of Councels and Cant. 4.4. Fathers. The Scriptures are our Armoury (far beyond that of Solomon) whether we must resort and furnish our selves. One savoury setence thereof shall do us more service, then all the pretty, witty sayings and sentences of Fathers and Philosophers, or constitutions of Councels.

Man liveth not by bread alone] Though ordinarily, as having a nouriſhing property inherent in it for ſuch a purpoſe: yet ſo, as that the operation and ſucceſs is guided by Gods power and goodneſs; whereon (as on a ſtaff) this ſtaff of life leaneth. A wiſe woman builds her houſe, Prov. 14.1. As the Carpenter laies the plot of the houſe in his head firſt, and contrives it; ſo doth ſhe forecaſt, and further the well doing of her family: and yet, except the Lord alſo build the houſe, they labour in vain that build it, Pſal. 127.1. So, the diligent hand, and the bleſſing of God (meeting) make rich, Prov. 10.4. and 22. Ezek. 4.16.

But by every word, &c.] That is, by any thing elſe beſides bread, whatſoever God ſhall think good, whatſoever he ſhall appoint and give power unto, to be nouriſhment. Therefore if bread fail, feed on faith, Pſal. 37. 3. So Junius reads that Text. Jehoſhaphat found it ſoveraign, when all other help failed him. And the captive Jews lived by faith, when they had little elſe to live upon, and made a good living of it, Habak. 2. 4. To this Text the Jews ſeem to allude in that fiction of theirs, that Habakkuk was carried by the hair of the head, by an Angel into Babylon, to carry a dinner to Daniel in the den; It was by faith that he ſtopped the mouthes of Lyons, and obtained promiſes, Heb. 11.33. God made the Ravens feed Elias, that were more likely (in that famine) to have fed upon his dead carcaſe; and, another time cauſed him to go forty days in the ſtrength of one meal. Merlyn was nouriſhed a fortnight together with one egg a day, laid by a hen that came conſtantly to that hay mow, where he lay hid, during the maſſacre of Paris. And who hath not read or heard, how by a miracle of his mercy, God relieved Rochel in a ſtrait ſiege, by an innumerable company of fiſhes caſt in upon them? Faith fears no famine, and although it be but ſmall in ſubſtance and in ſhew (as the Manna was) yet is it great in vertue and operation. The Rabbins ſay, that Manna had all manner of good taſtes in it: ſo hath faith. It drinks to a man in a cup of Nepenthes, and bids him be of good chear, God will provide for him. The Biſhop of Norwich kept Robert Samuel, Martyr, without meat and drink, whereby he was unmercifully vext, ſaving that he had every day allowed him two or three morſels of bread, and three ſpoonfuls of water, to the end he might be reſerved to further torment. How oft would he have drunk his own water? But his body was ſo dryed up with long emptineſs, that he was not able to make one drop of water. After he had been famiſhed with hunger two or three days together, he fell into a ſleep, as it were one half in a ſlumber; At which time one cloathed in white, ſeemed to ſtand before him, which miniſtred comfort unto him by theſe words, Samuel, Samuel, be of good chear, and take a good heart unto thee; for after this day thou ſhalt never be either hungry or thirſty: for ſpeedily after this, he was burned, and from that time, till he ſhould ſuffer, he felt neither hunger nor thirſt. And this declared he, to the end, as he ſaid, that all men might behold the wonderful work of God. He likes not to be tyed to the ſecond ordinary cauſes, nor that (in defect of the means) we ſhould doubt of his Providence. Its true, he commonly worketh by them, when he could do without, that we may not neglect the means, as being ordained of him. (David ſhall have victory, but by an ambuſh, 2 Sam. 5.19 —— 24. Men ſhall be nouriſhed, but by their labour, Pſal. 128.2.) But yet ſo, as that he doth all in all by thoſe means (he made graſs, corn and trees, before he made the Sun, Moon and Stars, by the influence whereof they are and grow.) Yea to ſhew himſelf chief, he can and doth work (other whiles) without means, 2 Chron. 14. 11: and againſt means, ſuſpending the power and operation of the natural cauſes; as, when the fire burnt not, the water drowned not, the Sun went back ten degrees, the rock gave water, the iron ſwam, &c. And then when he works by means, he can make them produce an effect diverſe from their nature and diſpoſition, or can hinder, change or mitigate their proper effect: as when at the prayer of Elias it rained not for three years and a half: And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruits. A man would have thought that after ſo long drought, the roots of trees and herbs ſhould have been utterly dryed up, and the Land paſt recovery: But God heard the heavens (petitioning to him, that they might exerciſe their influence for the fructifying of the earth) and the heavens heard the earth, and the earth heard the corn, the wine and the oyl, and they heard Jezreel. Let all this keep us, as it did our Saviour here, from diffidence in Gods providence; vidence; and make us poſſeſs our ſouls in patience, Luke 21. Hang upon the promiſe, and account it as good as preſent pay, though we ſee not how it can be effected. God loves to go a way by himſelf; He knows how to deliver his, ſaith S. Peter, 2 Epiſt. 2. 9. and he might ſpeak it by experience, Act. 12. 9. if ever any man might. The King ſhall rejoyce in God, ſaith David of himſelf, when he was a poor exile in the wilderneſs of Judah, Pſal. 63. 11. But he had Gods word for the Kingdom, and therefore he was confident, ſeemed the thing never ſo improbable or impoſſible. We truſt a skilfull workman to go his own way to work: ſhall we not God? In the ſixth year of the reign of Darius Nothus was the Temple fully finiſhed. That ſacred work which the husband and ſon of an Eſther croſſed, ſhall be happily accompliſhed by a baſtard. The Iſraelites thought that Moſes ſhould preſently have delivered them, and he himſelf thought as much, and therefore began before his time, to do juſtice upon the Egyptian, whom he ſlew and hid in the ſand. But we ſee, God went another way to work: He ſent Moſes into a far Country, and the bondage was for forty years after exceedingly encreaſed upon them; yet all this to humble and try them, and to do them good in their latter end. He croſſeth many times our likelieſt project, and gives a bleſſing to thoſe times and means whereof we deſpair. He breaks in pieces the ſhip that we think ſhould bring us to ſhore, but caſts us upon ſuch boards as we did not expect. Loſe we then any particular means? (ſaith one) it is but the ſcattering of a beam, the breaking of a bucket, when the Sun and the fountain is the ſame. But we for the moſt part do as Hagar did: when the bottle was ſpent, ſhe falls a crying, ſhe was undone, ſhe and her child ſhould die: till the Lord opened her eyes to ſee the fountain. It was nere her, but ſhe ſaw it not: when ſhe ſaw it, ſhe was well enough. If thou hadſt been here (ſaid Martha) my brother Lazarus had not died. As if Chriſt could not have kept him alive, unleſs he had been preſent. So if Chriſt will come and lay his hands on Jairus his daughter, and Eliſha ſtroke his hand over Naamans Leproſie, they ſhall be cured. So the Diſciples believed that Chriſt could feed ſo many thouſands in the wilderneſs, but then he muſt have two hundred peny worth of bread. But our Saviour gave them, ſoon after, an ocular Demonſtration of this truth, That man liveth not by bread alone, &c. Dan. 11. 34. They ſhall be holpen with a little help. Why a little? that through weaker means we may ſee Gods greater ſtrength.

Spiritual aſſaults may be beaten back by the ſhield of faith: Bodily admit of no ſuch repulſe. A daughter of Abraham may be bound by Satan, A Mary Magdalen poſſeſt, a Job vexed, a Paul boxed, &c. Or if it touch their heel, yet it can come no higher. There is no ſorcery againſt Jacob, becauſe God was a Unicorn, to take away the venom (ſaith Balaam the Sorcerer) as waters, when the Unicorns horn hath been in them, are no longer poyſonable, but healthfull.

And for the ſame cauſe was the ground, whereon Moſes and Joſhua trod, called holy ground, and Tabor, the holy Mount. And when we ſtand in our Churches, ſaith Chryſoſtom, we ſtand in a place of Angels and Arch-angels, in the Kingdom of God and heaven it ſelf; which they that profane, may juſtly fear to be whipt, like dogs, out of the heavenly Temple, and City too. And ſurely it were to be wiſhed, that ſuch profane Eſaws now adaies, as dare prate or ſleep, or laugh and play the parts of jeſters, or do any thing elſe unbeſeeming the ſervice of God, would keep themſelves from Gods Sanctuary: or that we had ſuch Porters to keep them out, as they had under the Law, 2 Chron. 23. 19.

And setteth him upon a pinacle of the Temple.] Height of place giveth opportunity of temptation. The longest robe contracts the greatest soil: neither are any in so great danger, as those that walk on the tops of pinacles. Even heigth it self makes mens brains to swim: As in Diocletian, who not content to be Emperour, would needs be adored as a god: and Caligula, of whom it was said, That there was never any better servant then he, nor worse Lord. Vespasian is reported to have been the only man that ever became better by the Empire conferred upon him. It is both hard and happy, not to be made worse by advancement. Τιμὴ signifies both honour and loss; Chabad, heavinesse and honour; Honoro and onero shew, that honour goeth not without a burthen. Fructus honos oneris, fructus honoris onus. Pope Pius Quintus said thus of himself, Cum essem religiosus, sperabam benè de salute animæ meæ: Cardinalis factus extimui. Pontifex creatus, pænè despero. When I was first in orders, without any further Ecclesiastical dignity, I had some good hopes of my salvation: When I became a Cardinal, I had less; since I was made Pope, least of all: The same thoughts of himself had Clement the eighth his immediate successour, saith the same Authour. *Non insulsè Autor ocul. moral. cap 12. Verse 6. And he saith unto him.] The Devil usually tempteth by speech, inward or outward. Senarclaus telleth of a plain Countrey-man at Fribugh in Gremany, that lying on his death bed, the Devil came to him in the shape of a tall terrible man, and claimed his soul, saying, Thou hast been a notorious sinner, and I am come to set down all thy sins; And therewith he drew out paper and ink, and sate down at a Table that stood by, and began to write. The sick man answered, My soul is Gods, and all my sins are nailed to the cross of Christ. But if thou desire to set down my sins, write thus, All our righteousnesses are as a filthy rag, &c. The Devil set down that, and bid him say on: He did; but thou, Lord, hast promised, for thine own sake to blot out our iniquities, and to make our scarlet sins white as snow. The Devil passed by those words, and was earnest with him to go on in his former argument. The sick man said with great chearfulness, The Son of God appeared to destroy the works of the Devil. With that the Devil vanished, and the sick man departed.

Claudius Senarcleus in epist. ad Mart. Bucerum, præfixâ historiæ suæ, de morte Iohannis Diazii, à fratre Alphonso trudati.

If thou be the Son of God, cast thy self, &c.] This is the Devils Logick, to argue from mercy to liberty, to do wickedly with both hands earnestly. Whereas the Heathen could say, In maxima libertate minima licentia. And the Father, Ideò deteriores sumus, quia meliores esse debemus: Therefore are we worse, because we ought to be better. Remember but this, that thou art son to a King (said one to Antigonus) and that will keep thee from base courses. Take thou those spoils to thy self (said Themistocles to his friend that followed him) οὐ γὰρ εἰ Θεμιστοκλῆς, for thou art not Themistocles, as I am: they are poor things, far below me. Shall such a man as I flee? Shall I do any thing to the dishonour of my heavenly Father? and therefore sin, because grace hath abounded? That is not the guise of any of Gods children. They walk honestly, bravely, gallantly, worthy of God, who hath done so great things for them. The more priviledges, the more engagements. Scipio, when a harlot was offered unto him, said, Vellem, si non essem Imperator. It was an aggravation of the fall of Solomon, that God had appeared unto him twice; and of Saul, That he fell, as if he had not been anointed: So it is of any of Gods Saints to sin, as if they had not been adopted.

1 Kings 11.9. 2 Sam. 1.21.

Cast thy self down.] Here our Saviour is tempted to self-murther, by an old Manslayer. And when Moses, Elias, Jonas, and others of the best sort of Saints were in a fit of discontent, and grew weary of their lives, wishing for death, Divines doubt not but Satan gave a push at them with his ten horns, to dispatch, and ease themselves of the present trouble, by cutting off their own days. A dangerous and hideous temptation; yet such as may befal the best, and few scape it that live out their time. But in all the Book of God, we read not of any of the generation of the just, that ever did it. That God who kept them, will (if we look up to him) do as much for us. Only we must set against this bloody temptation with Gods arm, and with Gods armour. The Word and Prayer are the Ordinances and Power of God, and (by his might) do extinguish all the fiery darts of the Devil. Oppose the commination to the temptation. Herein Eve faultred (in her lest ye dye, though she held the Precept) and so fell.

2 Tim. 3. 8. De præscript. adverſ. hæret. In my treatiſe of the divinity of the Scriptures, called The true Treaſure. Bucholcer.

For it is written.] A vile abuſe of ſacred Scripture, to perſwade thereby to ſin, or plead for it: yet what more ordinary with men of corrupt minds, and reprobate concerning the faith, Qui eadem Scripturarum faciunt ad materiam ſuam, as Tertullian ſpeaketh; who murther the Scriptures to ſerve their own purpoſes? But of this more elſewhere.

In viis noſtris, non in præcipitiis. Bern. Prov. 27. 8. Deut. 22. 6.

He ſhall give his Angels charge over thee.] Hitherto the old lyar ſpeaketh truth. But, Satan etſi ſemel videatur verax, millies eſt mendax, & ſemper fallax, ſaith one. Satan though he may ſometimes ſeem a true ſpeaker, yet he is a thouſand times for it a lyar, and alwayes a deceiver. Becauſe our Saviour had alledged Scripture, he alſo would do the like, in a perverſe, apiſh imitation, but marres the maſculine ſenſe, by clipping off that clauſe, They ſhall keep thee in all thy wayes; that is, in thoſe courſes that are appointed thee by God. But as the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, when they went out of Gods Precincts, were out of his Protection: ſo are all others. As a bird that wandereth from the neſt: ſo is a man that wandereth from his own place, ſaith Solomon. God made a Law that none ſhould moleſt a bird upon her neſt. Doth God take care of birds? A King undertaketh the ſafety of his Subjects, whileſt they travel within due hours, and keep the Kings high-way; elſe not: So doth God. He hath given his Angels charge over us, whiles we hold his way, which is like Jacobs Ladder, where the Angels were aſcending and deſcending. Oh the dignity and ſafety of a Saint, in a guard ſo full of ſtate and ſtrength! Well might David (after he had ſaid, The Angel of the Lord pitcheth his tent round about them that fear him) preſently ſubjoyn, Taſte and ſee how gracious the Lord is, in allowing his children ſo glorious an attendance.

In Chriſt and for Chriſt, they count it their greateſt glory, to do us any good office for ſoul or body; they ſave us from the foul fiends, that elſe would worry us. Theſe walk about as Lyons to devour us, whiles alive, and to hinder our paſſage to heaven, when we dye: the other, as Guardians, to keep us here, and to convey and conduct us thorow the Devils Territories (who is Prince of the ayr) when we go hence to heaven, in deſpight of the evil Angels that would intercept us, Dan. 10. 21.

thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God: Ther's the happy succeſs. Ora & labora was an Emperors Motto. St. Auguſtine ſets it down as a vanity of his youth, that he prayed God to help him againſt ſome ſpecial ſins, whereunto he was ſtrongly addicted, but ſhould have been full ſorry, that God ſhould have heard him, becauſe he was loth to part with them. How much better was that prayer of Sr. Thomas Moor, Domine Deus, fac me in iis conſequendis operam collocare, pro quibus obtinendis ſoleo ad te orare; Lord God, make me to beſtow pains in getting thoſe things, for obtaining whereof I uſe to pray unto thee. Prov. 2.3,4,5. Reuſneri Symb.

Verſe 8. Again the Devil taketh him.] This Maſter-fly Beelzebub, though beaten away once and again, yet returns to the ſame place. See how ſhameleſs he is in renewing his temptations after a flat repulſe. He ſollicites and ſets upon our Saviour again (as Potiphars wife did upon Joſeph, for all his many denials) and is not only importunate, but impudent. Stand we therefore ſtill upon our guard, and look for no eaſe here. The Roman Captains, when they had once triumphed, took their eaſe ever after. So did not Cato, and is therefore highly commended. So may not we, if ever we will be approved, as good ſouldiers of Jeſus Chriſt. Our whole life is a continual warfare, and we muſt look for the continual hail-ſhot, hell-ſhot of Satanical aſſaults and ſuggeſtions. When Xerxes fought againſt the Greeks, The Sea was full of ſhips (ſaith the Orator) the Earth of Souldiers, the Air of Arrows. So fares it with the Saints under Satans Batteries: no truce, but continual conflict. Ever ſince theſe two ſtrong men fought, there is no more peace. St. Paul ſounds the Alarm, Arm, Arm, take the whole Armour of God, and be ever in your harneſs. And St. Peter gives the reaſon, Becauſe your adverſary the Devil, as a roaring Lion, walketh, and watcheth, night and day, ſeeking whom he may devour. For our encouragement, as the Devil is Leo ὠρυόμενος, a roaring Lion; ſo is Chriſt, Leo de tribu Iuda, ὁ ῥυόμενος, the Lion of the Tribe of Iudah, that delivereth us, and maketh us more then Conquerors; holding the Crown of glory over our heads (as we are fighting) with this inſcription, Vincenti dabo, To him that overcometh will I give, &c. Fight therefore and faint not; your reward is ſure, your Armor is of proof. Get on both thoſe pieces of defence (as the girdle of truth, breſt-plate of righteouſneſs, ſhoes of peace and patience, ſhield of faith, helmet of hope) and thoſe alſo of offence; as the ſword of the Spirit, and darts of prayer. And then reſolve, with that aged Citizen of Exeter in King Edward the ſixths time; who when the Town was beſieged, ſaid, That he would feed on the one arm, and fight with the other, before he would conſent to yeeld the City to the ſeditious. It is ſaid of Sceva at the ſiege of Dyrrachium, that he ſo long reſiſted Pompeys Army, that he had 220. darts ſticking in his ſhield, and loſt one of his eyes, and yet gave not over, till Ceſar came to his reſcue: And of Sr. Thomas Challoner (who died, Anno 1566.) that he ſerved in his younger time under Charls the fifth, in the expedition of Algier; where being ſhipwrackt, after he had ſwum till his ſtrength and his arms failed him, at the length catching hold of a Cable with his teeth, he eſcaped, not without the loſs of ſome of his teeth. The like (and ſomewhat more) is reported of Cynegirus the Athenian in the Perſian Warrs. Theſe did thus for a corruptible Crown, or temporary honor; what ſhould not we do for an eternal? 1 Cor. 9.25. Hold out, and hold faſt that thou haſt, that no man take thy Crown from thee. Be of Queen Elizabeths diſpoſition, who provided for War, even when ſhe had moſt perfect peace with all men. Gods Spirit ſets up a ſtandard in the Saints, Iſa. 59 19. And ſtronger is he that is in you, then he that is in the world. That old ſerpent hath his head ſo bruiſed and cruſht by Chriſt, that he cannot now ſo eaſily thruſt in his mortal ſting, though he affay it never ſo often, unleſs we dally with him, and lay our ſelves open, unleſs we tempt Satan to tempt us, by inconſideration, ſecurity, or venturing on the occaſion. Vitanda eſt glacies, ſi nolis cadere. weight. But why took he our Saviour into so high a Mountain? That he might thence have the fairer prospect: And perhaps in imitation of God taking up Moses into the Mount. The Devil delights to be Gods Ape, that he may, by counterfeiting the like to God, bring his holy Ordinances into disgrace. Thus the Heathens had their Sacrifices, Washings Tithes, Oracles, &c. Vitruvius and others tell us, that the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, and her image therein, were made of Cedar. So for Christ bruising the Serpents head, Satan hath set up Hercules killing the Lernæan Hydra. Which fable who seeth not plainly to have been hatcht in Hell, and suggested to the Poets, in an Apish imitation of God, meerly to elude his Oracle? The like may be said of the fable of Orpheus his wife, suddenly snatcht from him, for looking back upon her: which was made out of the story of Lots wife: So their Hercules with his ten labours, was the Scripture Sampson. And their Sethon King of Egypt, and Priest of Vulcan (who was helped from Heaven by his God against Senacherib King of Assyria that invaded him) who could it be else but Hezekiah King of Judah? Ita diabolus (operum Dei Momus) per Egyptios hoc egit, ut divinum Miraculum in Judæa editum vilescereet, fidem & authritatem amitteret, & tanti operis gloria ad turpissima idola rediret. Thus the Devil attempted by his Egyptians to transfer the Glory of a Divine Miracle upon himself.

This world at the last day shall be burnt for a witch.

And sheweth him all the Kingdoms of the earth] In their beauty and bravery. A bewitching sight, doubtless, and would have moved much with a carnal heart. But here the Devils fire fell upon wet tinder, and therefore took not. Gain and Glory? Rule and Riches? Quis nisi mentis inops, &c. Set but a wedge of Gold in sight, and Joshua (that could stay the course of the Sun) cannot stay Achan from lusting aud laying hold on it. Balaams Ass never gallops fast enough after preferment. And Zimri will have his Cozbi, though he die for it. These three Enchantresses, The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life; Pleasure, Profit and Preferment (the worldly mans Trinity) whom have they not bewitched, befooled, bebeasted? St. John sheweth that a man may be very mortified, a father, and yet wondrous subject to dote on the world. Of the which, nevertheless, we may say (as Aaron of the people) tis wholly set upon wickedness: Or as another sometimes said of an Historian, Both the Words and shews of it are full of fraud. It promiseth (as the Devil here) great matters, but payeth, pro thesauro carbones, instead of Mines, cole-pits. Captain Forbisher, in his Voiage to discover the Straits, being tossed up and down with foul weather, snows and unconstant winds, returned home, having gathered a great quantity of stones, which he thought to be minerals: from which, when there could be drawn neither Gold not Silver, nor any other metal, we have seen them cast forth (saith Mr. Camden) to mend the high-ways. How oft do the Devil and the world give men stones and Serpents in stead of fish and bread, even the bread of deceit, that proves gravel in the teeth? How oft are they disappointed that hunt after lying vanities, and so forsake their own mercies? as Jonas freely acknowledged, for it had like to have cost him a choaking. What got Balaam by running after his wages of wickedness, but a sword in his ribs? Achan by his wedge, but the stones about his ears? Judas by his thirty pieces, but the halter about his neck? Cranmer by his subscription, but such a wretched condition, as that there was left him neither hope of better, nor place of worse, as Cole could say in a Sermon at his Recantation? Many of the Romish runnagates, that run thither for preferment, what little respect have they often times, and as little content in their change? Roffensis had a Cardinals hat sent him, but his head was cut off, before it came. Allin had a Cardinals hat, but with so thin lining (means I mean to support his state) that he was commonly called the starving Cardinal. Stapleton was made Professor of a petty University, scarce so good as one of our freeschools in England. Saunders was starved. William Rainolds was nominated to a poor Vicarage under value. On Harding his holiness bestowed a Prebend of Gaunt, or to speak more properly, a Gaunt Prebend. Many others get not any thing, so that they wish themselves at home again; and sometimes return in the same discontent in which they went.

of profit and pleasure, hath cast down many wounded, as Solomons harlot, Prov. 7. 26. and by the glistering of her pomp and preferment, hath misled millions; as the going fire leads men into hedges and ditches: or as the Serpent Scytale, which when she cannot overtake the fleeing passengers, doth with her beautifull colours astonish and amaze them, so that they have no power to pass away till she have stung them to death. Plin.

Verse 9. And he saith unto him, All these thing will I give thee.] A great catch sure: even just nothing; for he shewed our Saviour only shews and shadows, apparitions and resemblances of things. The word also used in the former verse for (glory) signifieth an opinion or imagination. So St. Luke stiles all Agrippa's pomp, but a fantasie. David tells us, that man walketh in a vain shadow. Now a shadow is something in appearance, nothing in substance: So the Apostle calleth all these things, that the Devil profers our Saviour, σχῆμα, an accidental Mathematical figure, without solidity or substance. And further tells us, that this figure passeth away, is ever in transitu, like the streams of a river, that passing by the sides of a City, no man can stop: or if we could retain the things of this life, yet not the world only passeth away (saith the Apostle) but the lusts thereof. So that a man cannot make his heart delight in the same thing still. Vota post usum fastidio sunt. We loath after a while what we lusted after (as Amnon did Tamar) and quickly find a satiety, yea an unsatisfyingness in the Creature. For he that loveth silver, shall not be satisfied with silver, nor though he could heap up his hoards to the stars, and ingross a Monopoly of all the wealth in the world. Non plus satiatur cor auro, quàm corpus aurâ. You may as soon fill a bag with wisdom, a Chest with vertue, or a Circle with a Triangle, as the heart of man with any thing here below. All that earth can afford, is, fumus aut funus (saith one) nugæ & μορμολύκεια, saith another, Vanity and vexation, saith Solomon the wise: To whose impartial verdict (grounded upon so good experience) we shall do well to subscribe, without believing the Devils craks, or trying any further conclusions. The Centuriists interpret, All these things will I give thee, thus; I will make thee Pope. And indeed many Popes were advanced to that Sea immediately by the Devil, as Histories relate; Who had they but observed what is usally done at their Inthronization, would never have been so hasty. For before the Pope is set in his Chair, and puts on his tripple Crown, a piece of tow, or wad of straw is set on fire before him, and one appointed to say, Sic transit gloria mundi, The glory of this world is but a blaze. This is only matter of form and Ceremony: As is also that, that one day in the year the Popes Almoner rideth before him, casting abroad to the poor certain pieces of brass and lead, saying, Silver and Gold I have none, but such as I have I give you; Whereas that scarlet Whore holds a Golden cup in her hand; and her merchants that Trade with her, are the Grandees of the earth, Revel. 18. and are made rich by her, vers. 15. The Cardinal of Toledo hath a hundred thousand pound a year coming in; The Arch-bishops of Germany are free-Princes (many of them) and have revenues accordingly. Petrarch reporteth, that in the Treasury of Pope John the 22. were found after his death 250. Tuns of Gold. And of Boniface the eighth it is storied, that when he was taken by Philip the fair, King of France, and his Palace rifled, there was more treasure found then all the Kings of the earth were able to shew again. Otto, one of the Popes Mice-catchers (as the story calleth them) sent hither by Gregory the ninth, after three years raking together of money by most detestable arts, at last departing hence, he left not so much money in the whole Kingdom, as he either carried with him, or sent before him. Judge by this, what they did throughout all Christendom. The Pope, saith one, could never want money so long as he could hold a pen in his hand. Thus it was then; but how now? Bellarmine complains, that since by as the Pope was cried down for Antichrist, his Kingdom hath not only not encreased, but every day more and more decreased. And Cotton the Jesuite confesseth, That the Authority of the Pope of Rome is incomparably less then it was: And that now the Christian Church is but a diminutive. Hereupon also the Cardinals (who were wont to meet oftener) meet but once a week, because the businesses of the Court of Rome grow fewer. And albeit the Popes good, and his blood, his honors and manners rose together; yet abates he as little of his former pomp and pride, as the Devil doth since his fall, in taking upon him here to dispose of all

If thou wilt fall down and worſhip me.] Luke ſaith, Worſhip before me. So that to worſhip before an Idol is to worſhip the Idol, whatever the Romaniſt pretend and plead to the contrary. And not only ſo, but to fall down, as the Devil would have had our Saviour here (though it be not come to worſhipping) is a grievous ſin. St. John had not yet worſhipped the Angel but only fallen down, as deſirous to worſhip, and is taken up by the Angel for that Idolatrous geſture. Woe then to thoſe Kimmonites, that pleade for an upright ſoul in a proſtrate body; and alleadge for their warrant, that of Apochryphal Baruc, Chap. 6. Wherefore when ye ſee the multitude of people worſhipping them behind and before, ſay ye in your hearts, O Lord, it is thou that oughteſt only to be worſhipped. Serve we God with our bodies alſo; and ſay with David and Chriſt, Lord, a body haſt thou given me; Loe, I come to do thy will therewith. But what a deſperate and deteſtable boldneſs was it in the Devil, to move ſpeech of ſuch a ſin as this to our Saviour Chriſt? It was extreme ſawcineſs in Satan to adjure our Saviour (whom he there calls The Son of the moſt high God) not to torment him; it was horrible impudency; But nothing comparable to this in the Text, to worſhip the Devil in perſon: then which, what can be imagined more odious? We ſee then to what execrable ſins the beſt may be tempted. A man is to expect (ſaith one) if he live out his dayes, to be urged to all ſins, to the breach of every branch of the ten Commandments: and to be put to it in reſpect of every Article of our Creed. Have you not been tempted (ſaith another) in this or that kind? It is becauſe God in mercy would not lead you into temptation. Yea this is, in ſome ſort, more to be acknowledged then Victory, when ye were tempted. For not to be tempted is more immediately from God, and leſs in mans power, then to prevail againſt temptation. For nothing doth overcome us without our will: but without our will doth God lead us into trial: for he knoweth we would taſte little of theſe, if we might be our own Carvers. Simon, Simon (ſaith our Saviour) Satan hath deſired to have you to winnow you (that is, to trouble and hurt you ſaith a Father) as a challenger deſireth to have one of the other ſide to combat with: as Goliah called for a man to match him. Now either God denies him, or delivers us, ſo that evil one toucheth us not, viz. Tactu qualitavito, with a Mortal touch, as Cajetan gloſſeth that Text, I have praid for thee, ſaith our Saviour, that thy faith fail not. He praied for all, but eſpecially for Peter, becauſe more violently tempted: as becauſe more ſhamefully foiled; therefore, Go tell my Diſciples and Peter, that I am riſen; and that thereby he is juſtified. I have prayed; ſo that the remedy was ready made before the diſeaſe, the ſalve before the ſore, or elſe it might have come too late; As thoſe that are ſtung by a Scorpion, if they be not preſently anointed with oil of Scorpions, die for it: and as thoſe that have drunk poyſon, if they take not an antidote immediately, ere it get to the vitals, periſh infallibly. God in Chriſt hath all plaiſters and pardons ready made and ſealed. Elſe we might die in our ſins, whiles the pardon is providing.

Verſe 10. Get thee hence, Satan.] Avaunt, avoid, be packing. This was an indignity not to be endured, as great every way, as if the baſeſt ſcoundrell upon earth ſhould aſſault the chaſtity of the greateſt Empreſs: Our Saviour therefore will endure him no longer, but commands him out of his preſence, with utmoſt indignation. And 2 Cor. 5.13. Agnoſco te primogenitum diaboli. Sic Cerintho Ioannes Apoſtolus. Act 13.9,10. ſurely madneſs, in caſe of Gods diſhonor, is far better then meekneſs. Here, if we be beſides our ſelves, it is to God, as Paul ſaid to the Corinthians; and as he did, when he dealt with Elymas the firſt born of the Devil, when he ſaw him perverting the deputy; He ſet his eyes upon him, ſaith the Text, as if he would have run thorow him. After which lightning follows that terrible thunder-crack, O full of all ſubtilty and of all miſchief, &c. So the Angel of Epheſus could not abide thoſe counterfeits, Revel 2.2. Nor could David brook the workers of iniquity: he caſteth down the gauntle of defiance againſt them, as his utter enemies, He hateth them with a perfect hatred. Hezekiah pulled down the brazen Serpent (when the people idolized it) and called it a Pſa 139.21, 22. piece of braſs. And Joſiah would not let ſtand the horſes of the Sun, and other Monuments of Idolatry, upon any intreaty. King Edward the ſixth, being laboured by ſome Act. and Mon. fol. 1179. of his beſt friends, to permit the Lady Mary his ſiſter, to have Maſs in her houſe, anſwered, He would rather ſpend his life, and all he had, then to agree and grant to that he knew certainly to be againſt the truth. And another time, in his meſſage to the Rebels of Devonſhire: Aſſure you, moſt ſurely, ſaid he, that We, of no earthly thing under heaven, make ſuch reputation as of this one, to have our Law obeyed, and this cauſe of God which we have taken in hand, to be thorowly maintained; From the which We will never remove an heirs breadth, or give place to any creature living, much leſs to any Subject; Wherein We will ſpend our own royall Perſon, our Crown, Treaſure, Realm, Ibid. 1189. and all our State, whereof we aſſure you of our high honor. Now Gods bleſſing be on that bleſſed heart, that hath ſuch a ſtomack againſt Gods diſhonor; and can entertain Iude 9. all wicked attempts and aſſaults with this Apage of our Saviour. And woe to them that cry Euge to ſuch. Whether we ſay to the Tempter, as our Saviour did, Get thee hence; and not rather as the Angel, The Lord rebuke thee, is queſtioned by ſome; becauſe it is his only, to command the Devil. But that we may, and muſt ſay to him, no mans doubts, as our Saviour did to the Phariſees, Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites? as Naboth did to Ahab, God forbid me any ſuch wickedneſs: As Solomon to his mother, Ask the Kingdom alſo: As the witch of Endor to Saul, Why ſeekeſt thou to take me in a ſnare, to cauſe me to die? Thus, Reſiſt, ſaith Peter: Stand faſt, ſaith Paul: Reſiſt, and Satan will flee, he is but a coward. Stand, and then Satan will fall. Not to yield, is to Conquer: if he caſt us not down, we are then accepted, as if we did caſt him down. We do over-overcome, ſath that great Apoſtle, becauſe in our head Chriſt we overcome before we fight, and are ſure of Victory, Revel. 12.1. Quare apage ſis, Diabole, & tela tua in hoc ſemen mulieris converte: hunc ſi viceris, me quoq; viceris, ſaid one; Devil, do thy worſt to Chriſt: Conquer him and take all.

For it is written] This two-edged ſword our Saviour had found to be metal of proof, and therefore holds him to it. Only the Scriptures ſcare the Devil, as only faithfull prayer can charm him. Athanaſius writeth that evil ſpirits may be put to flight by that Pſalm 68. Let the Lord ariſe, and his enemies be confounded. But this is true of the whole word of God, which is armor of proof againſt the Devil.

And again in the end of them, makes it the end and upſhot of all. For they that fear the Lord will keep his Covenant, Pſal. 103. 13 —— 18. Yea, they will will work hard at it, as afraid to be taken with their tasks undone, Act. 10. 35. They will give him both the ſhell of outward adoration, and the kernel of inward devotion; truly, without halting; and totally without halfing; truly, both for matter and manner; totally, both for ſubject and object; as David who did all the wills of God, and with all his heart, all the days of his life. The Gentiles could ſay, that God muſt be worſhipped πᾶλως, ἢμὴ ὅλως, either to our utmoſt, or not at all. Verse 11. Then the Devil left him.] If Christ command him away, there's no abiding for him. Here he was foiled and quelled, and as it were, cast down and killed by Christ our Champion. He came into the field like another Goliah, Cracking and calling Craven, but ere he went thence, was made to hop headless, as he First a terror, afterward a scorn, as it was Anciently said of those Chariots, armed with sithes and hooks. Henceforth therefore, though we are ever to expect temptations, till such time as we have gotten that great gulf between the Devil and us, Luke 16.26. Yet fear none of those things that ye shall suffer. Behold, the Devil shall (by his Imps and instruments) cast some of you (not all) into Prison (not into hell) that ye may be tried (not destroyed) and ye shall have tribulation ten daies (so long, and no longer.) Be thou faithfull unto the death, and I will give thee a Crown of life. Satan can look for no Crown, he is in perdition already. His aim and endeavor is, to draw us into the same condemnation. This we escape, if we resist, stedfast in the faith: for then he perceives Christ the chief Captain of our Salvation to be there; and therefore flees his presence, ever since he felt his prowess. Chrysostom saith, That by the Sacrament of the Lords Supper we are so armed against Satans temptations, that he fleeth from us no otherwise then if we were so many leones ignem expuentes, Lions that spet fire. It is not silly peoples defying the Devil, and spetting at his name, that avails any thing: for they spet not low enough; they spet him not out of their hearts: yea, they admit him thereinto by yeilding to his suggestions; and are miserably fooliſh, as if men should startle at the name of fire, and yet not fear to be scorched with the flame thereof. Our safest way is to run to Ithiel and Ucal, as Agur did, to Christ the Author and finisher of our faith; who here gave the Devil such an inglorious foil, trampled him in the mire, triumphed over him, and hath promised to tread him under our feet shortly, Rom. 16. 20.

And lo, the Angels came and ministred unto him.] Perhaps food to his body, as once to Elias; but certainly comfort to his soul, as to Jacob, Hagar, Daniel, Zecharias, Joseph, Cornelius, Paul, &c. Socrates and Theodoret tell us of one Theodorus, a Martyr, put to extream torments by Julian the Apostate, and dismissed again by him, when he saw him unconquerable. Ruffinus tells us, that he met with this Martyr, a long time after this triall, and asked him, Whether the pain he felt were not unsufferable? He answered, That at first it was somewhat grievous: but after a while, there seemed to stand by him a young man in white, who with a soft and comfortable handkerchief, wiped off the sweat of his body (which through extream pain and anguish was little less then blood) and bade him, Be of good chear. Insomuch as that it was rather a punishment then a pleasure to him to be taken off the rack, sith, when the tormentors had done, the Angel was gone. And how many unspeakable comforts Ministred the good Angels to the modern Martyrs in their Prisons, at the stake, and in the fire? Christ indeed was not comforted by them, till the temptation was over; but to us they Minister, many times, in the hour of temptation. They have power over the Devils, to restrain them: and (though invisibly and insensibly) are as ready to help and comfort us, as the evil Angels to tempt and trouble us: else were not our protection equal to our danger, and we could neither stand nor rise. An Angel stood at Zecharies right hand, Luke 1. 11. (as the Devil did at Jehoshuahs, Zech. 3. 1.) to shew how ready and handy they are to defend and support the Saints. It was as he was burning incense. The Angels are busiest about us, when we are in Gods work: which to set forth, the hangings of the Tabernacle of old were full of Cherubims within and without. He said unto him, Fear not Zechary. The blessed spirits (though they do not often vocally express it) do pity our humane frailties, and secretly suggest comfort to us, when we perceive it not. Alway they stand looking on the face of God to receive commandments, for the accomplishment of all designs for our good; which they have no sooner received then they readily dispatch, even with wearines of flight, as Dan. 9. 21. with so much swiftnes, as if they had had wearied themselves with fleeing. I read of a Frier that undertook to shew to the people a feather of the wing of the Angel Gabriel. Verse 12. Now when Jesus heard that John was cast into Prison] For Herodias his sake, though under pretexts of fear of sedition, because of the great multitudes that followed and admired him, as Josephus hath it. This hath ever been an ordinary accusation cast upon the most innocent, to be feedsmen of sedition, and troublers of the State. Jeremy was held and called a Traitor, Elijah a troubler of Israel, Paul a pest, Luther, tuba rebellionis, the Trumpet of Rebellion, &c. Invenies apud Tacitum frequentatas accusationes Majestatis, unicum crimen eorum qui crimine vacabant, saith Lipsius. There was some colour of right, yea of piety laid upon the French Massacre, and by edicts, a fair cloak sought, to cover the impious fraud, as if there had been some wicked conspiracy plotted by the Protestants against the King, the Queen-mother, the Kings brethren, the King of Navarre, and the Princes of the blood. For there was coyn stamped in memory of the matter, in the forepart whereof, (together with the Kings picture) was this inscription, Virtus in rebelles. And on the other side, Pietas excitavit justitiam. Not many years before this, Francis King of France, when he would excuse to the Princes of Germany (whose friendship he then sought after) that cruelty he had exercised against the Protestants, he gave out that he punished Anabaptists only, that bragged of Enthusiasms, and cried down Magistracy, stirring up the people to sedition. as they had done not long before in Germany. This foul aspersion cast upon true Religion, gave occasion to Calvin (then a young man of 25. years of age) to set forth that incomparable work, called his Institutions of Christian Religion. Since Christs and the Apostles time no such book hath been written.

He departed into Galilee.] Succenturiatus prodit Joanni, saith a learned interpreter. He therefore went into Galilee (which was under Herods government) to be, as it were, a supply and successor to John, whom Herod had imprisoned. How well might the tyrant say of the Church, as those Persians did of the Athenians, βάλλομεν, καὶ πίπτομεν ἡμῶν, καὶ φοβεῦνται. We overturn them, and yet they fall not; we wound them, and yet they fear not. St. Basil bade the persecuted Christians tell the tyrants with a bold and brave spirit, Ἐὰν γὰρ πάλιν ἰσχύσητε, πάλιν ἡττηθήσεσθε; If ye prevail again, yet surely ye shall be overcome again. For there is neither power nor policy against the Lord. (Charls the fifth (then whom al Christendom had not a more prudent Prince, nor the Church of Christ (almost) a sorer enemy) when he had in his hand Luther dead, and Melancthon and Pomeran, and certain other Preachers of the Gospel alive, he not only determined not any thing extreamly against them, or violated their graves, but also entreating them gently, sent them away, not so much as once forbidding them to publish openly the Doctrine that they professed. For it is the nature of Christs Church, the more that persecutors spurn against it, the more it flourisheth and encreaseth, as the Palm-tree spreadeth and springeth the more it is oppressed: as the bottle or bladder, that may be dipt, not drowned; as the Oak that taketh heart to grace from the maims and wounds given it, and sprouts the thicker; as Fenugreek, which the worse it is handled (saith Pliny) the better it proves. This made Arrius Antoninus (a cruel persecutor in Asia) cry out to the Christians, who came by troops to his tribunal, and proclaimed themselves Christians (so offering themselves to death) O miseri, si libet perire, num vobis rupes aut restes desunt? O wretched men, if ye be so desirous to die, have you neither rocks nor halters, wherewith to dispatch your selves? Diocletian after he had in vain done his utmost to blot out Christs Name from under heaven, and could not effect it (such was the constancy of the Primitive Christians, that no sufferings could affright or discourage them, but that they grew upon him daily, do what he could to the contrary) laid down the Empire in great discontent, and betook himself (as Charls the fifth also did) to a private course of life. De Atheniensibus Persæ campo Marathonio victis, apud Stobæum. Basil. Enar. in Isa. 8. 10. ubi hæc verba inveniuntur juxta. LXI. Act. and Mon. 1785. Duris ut ilex tonsa bipennibus, per damna, per cædes ab ipso Ducit opes animumq; ferro. Horat. As Lambs breed in winter, and Quails came with the wind: So good Preachers and people ſpring moſt in hard times. No fowl is more preyed upon by hawks, kites, &c. then the Pigeon, yet are there more doves then hawks or kites for all that, ſaith Optatus. So the ſheep; and ſo the ſheep of Chriſt, A little little flock, he calleth it, but ſuch as all the Wolves on earth, and Devils in Hell cannot poſſibly devour. The Chriſtians of Calabria ſuffered great perſecution, Anno 1560. for being all thruſt up in one houſe together, as in a ſheep-fold, the Executioner cometh in, and amongſt them taketh one, and blindfoldeth him with a muffler about his eyes, and ſo leadeth him forth into a larger place, where he commandeth him to kneel down: which being done, he cutteth his throat, and ſo leaving him half dead, and taking his butchers knife and muffler all of gore blood, cometh again to the reſt, and ſo leading them one after another, he diſpatcheth them all, to the number of 88. All the elder went to death more cheerfully, the younger were more timerous. I tremble and ſhake (ſaith a Roman-Catholike, out of whoſe Letter to his Lord this is tranſcribed) even to remember how the executioner held his bloody knife between his teeth, with the bloody muffler in his hand, and his arms all in gore-blood, up to the elbows, going to the fold, and taking every of them one after another by the hand, and ſo diſpatching them all, no otherwiſe then doth a butcher kill his calves and ſheep. Notwithſtanding all which barbarous cruelty, the Waldenſes or Proteſtants were ſo ſpread, not in France only their chief ſeat, but in Germany alſo, many years before this, that they could travell from Collen to Millain in Italy, and every night lodge with hoſts of their own profeſſion. It is not yet a dozen years ſince Pope Urban the eighth (that now ſitteth) upon the ſurrender of Rochel into the French Kings hands, ſent his Breve to the King, exaſperating him againſt the Proteſtants in France, and eagerly urging, yea, enforcing the deſtruction of all the hereticks, ſtabling in the French vineyard, as his Inurbanity is pleaſed to expreſs it. But what ſhall be given unto thee? Or what ſhall be done unto thee, thou foul tongue? Sharp arrows of the mighty with coals of Juniper (Pſal. 120. 4, 5.) which burn vehemently, and ſmell ſweetly. God ſhall ſhortly put into the hearts of the Kings of the earth (and this King among the reſt of the ten) to hate the whore, to eat her fleſh, and to burn her with fire, Revel. 17. 16. There are not many ages paſt, ſince one of his predeceſſors broke open the gates of Rome, mouldred the wall, diſperſed the Citizens, and condemned the Pope to a dark dungeon, lading him with bitter ſcoffs and curſes. There are not many years paſt, ſince the Realm of France was ready, upon the Popes refuſal to rebleſs King Henry 4. upon converſion to them, to withdraw utterly from the obedience of his Sea, and to erect a new Patriarch over all the French Church. The then Arch-biſhop of Burges was ready to accept it: and but that the Pope (in fear thereof) did haſten his benediction, it had been effected, to his utter diſgrace and decay. Before he would do it, he laſhed the King in the perſon of his Embaſſador, after the ſinging of every verſe of miſerere, untill the whole Pſalm was ſung out. Sed exorto Evangelii jubare, ſagaciores, ut ſpero, principes, ad nutum hujus Orbilii non ſolvent ſubligacula, ſaith a great Divine of ours. King Henry the eighth and the French King (ſome half a year before their deaths) were at a point to have changed the Maſs in both their Realms into a Communion: Alſo to have utterly extirpated the Biſhop of Rome, &c. Yea, they were ſo thorowly reſolved in that behalf, that they meant alſo to exhort the Emperor to do the like, or to break off from him. The ſame Emperor, to be revenged upon Pope Clement his enemy, aboliſhed the Popes Authority thorowout all Spain, his Native Kingdom, declaring thereby (the Spaniards themſelves for example) that Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline may be conſerved without the Papal Authority. The Eaſtern Churches have long ſince ſeparated; the other four Patriarchs dividing themſelves from the Biſhop of Rome, and at their parting uſing theſe or the like words; Thy greatneſs we know, thy covetouſneſs we cannot ſatisfie, thy encroaching we can no longer abide; live to thy ſelf. Neither are the Weſtern much behind, eſpecially ſince all was changed in that Church, manners, doctrine, and the very rule of faith in the Trent-Councel. Then (according to ſome Expoſitors) did the ſecond Angel pour out his vial upon the Sea (upon that conflux of all ſorts at Trent) and it became as the blood of a dead man (thoſe deadly decrees are written with the blood of hereticks) and every living ſoul died in that Sea, as once the fiſh of Egypt. the foundation of the World, Revel. 13.8. Slain, I say, as in his Fathers decree and promise, as in the Sacrifices of the Law, and faith of his people; so in his members and Martyrs, beheaded, as John Baptist, or otherwise butchered for the witness of Jesus, and for the Word of God. But the blood of the Martyrs was the seeding of the Church. God was never left without witnesses, as is seen in our Catalogues; but although John was cast in Prison, yea beheaded in the Prison, as if God had known nothing of him (quoth that Martyr) yet there never wanted a Jesus to go into Galilee: And that guilty Edomite Herod was sensible of it, Matth. 14.2. when he said to his servants, This is John Baptist, he is risen from the dead. In like sort the Romish Edomite, after he had done to death Christs two ancienter witnesses, that (Baptist-like) came in the Spirit and Power of Elias, to confute and confound their Baal-worships, yet to his great grief and regret, he hath seen them revive and stand upon their feet again, in that heroical Wicliff, who is said to have written more then 200 volumns against him, in that Goose of Bohemia, that Swan of Saxony (those three famous Angels, That flew in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth,) together with those other noble Reformers in all Christian Churches. By whom, ever since the Pope was declared to be Antichrist, his authority (saith Bellarmine) hath not only not encreased, but daily more and more decreased. The fourth beast hath lost a head, as Cusanus the Cardinal hath prophesied, Anno Domini. 1464. and after him Trithemius the Abbot, Anno 1508. A sect of Religion, saith he, shall arise once within this thirteen years, to the great destruction of the old Religions. It is to be feared that the fourth beast will lose one of her heads. This he writeth in his Book concerning Angels and Spirits: what kinde of Spirit it was (black or white) that dictated unto him this Prophecy, which fell out accordingly, and was fulfilled in M. Luther, I cannot tell. But the godly learned suspect it was from that evil spirit, who is said to have sung before,

Here he paid tribute as an inhabitant; and hither he resorted and retired himself, when he was tired at any time with preaching and journeying, and was willing to take rest; which yet hardly he could do, thorow the continual concourse, but was glad to get into a ship or desart to pray, eat or sleep.

For Strabo writeth that Pompey had commanded the walls of all fenced Cities in those parts to be pulled down. S. Hierom also saith it was a Town, and that it so continued till his times. But S. Matthew and S. Luke name it a City, wherein there was a Synagogue of the Jews, and a Garison of Herods souldiers, because it bordered upon Arabia. It had fifteen thousand inhabitants at least, there being no Town in Galilee that had fewer, saith Josephus. The inhabitants might be of the same minde with those of the Huge in Holland, who will not wall their Town, though it hath two thousand housholds in it, as desiring to have it counted rather the principal village of Europe, then a lesser City.

It was situate on this side Jordan, over against Bethsaida (otherwise called Julias) not far from Tiberias, and Tarichæa, famous places, lying likewise upon the lake.

Verse 14. That it might be fulfilled, &c.] The two Testaments may be fitly resembled to the double doors of the Temple, one whereof infolded another: The Old is the new enfolded; the new is the old explicated. In Nephthali were the City of Abel (where they asked counsel of old, and so they ended the matter) Haroseth the City of Sisera, Riblah, Cesarea, Philippi and Capernaum. This Burrough was the seat of the Evangelical Kingdom; and it was fitly chosen for such a purpose, as that which by reason of the wonderful wholsomness of the air, fertility of the soil, nearness to the River Jordan, and Lake of Genneareth, neighbour-hood of many great Towns and famous Cities, promised a plentiful encrease and income of the Evangelical harvest. Here the corn was white unto the harvest (as at Samaria) and solicited labourers. It is a Ministers wisdom to seat himself, as near as may be, where most need is, and greatest likelihood of doing good, as S. Paul did often. No Church was founded at Athens, no good to be done there among those wits of Greece. The Apostle tarried at Ephesus, whiles a door was opened, and then departed to other places. If thou perceive thy self unfit to do more good in any place, though it be not any fault of thine (saith a grave Author) away to another. If the commodity of the place prevail more with thee, there to abide, then the promoting of Christs Kingdom, to use thy talent elsewhere, it is to be feared, thou wilt either lose thy gifts, or fall into errours and heresies, or, at least, become a frigid and dry Doctor among such a people as have once conceived an incurable prejudice against thee.

Sate in darkness, and in the region and shadow of death] Note here, that a state of darkness is a state of death. This is condemnation, this is hell-above-ground, and afore-hand, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness better then light, Ut liberius peccent libenter ignorant. Now surely they shall one day have enough of their so much desired darkness. They know not the light, saith Job: They hate it, saith our Saviour: They spurn and scorn at it, saith Solomon; therefore shall they be filled with their own wayes, whiles they are cast into utter darkness: A darkness beyond a darkness, as it were a dungeon beyond a prison, where they shall never see light again, till they be enlightened with that universal fire of the last day to their everlasting amazement. And to say, Repent] Both for sin by contrition, and from sin by conversion. Change your mindes and manners, your constitution and conversation, from worse to better: Recover your lost wits with the Prodigal (who repenting is said to come to himself) and become wiser after your folly. Pull down the very frame of the old man, unmake your selves, as S. Peter hath it, 1 Pet. 2. 24. Undo what you had done before, and be ye transmentated and metamorphosed by the renewing of your mindes; For, Except a man be born again, not desuper only, but denuò, from above, but a second time (as Nicodemus understood our Saviour) except he go over all again that is past, rejecting it as unprofitable, and begin anew, he cannot see the Kingdom of God; where old things are past, all things are become new, 2 Cor. 5. 17. a whole new creation. For the Kingdom of heaven is at hand.] See what is said to this whole verse, Chap. 32. For this was the sum and substance of the Baptists, our Saviours, and his Apostles Sermons; and had need to be daily pressed and preached, sith it is our pensum diurnum, the first and continual work of Gods Spirit in the faithful, who because they cannot wash their hands in innocency, wash them in tears; and by renewing their repentance, work and wear out all brackish and sinful dispositions, as sweet water will do the salt sea, coming into it: as wine or honey casteth out the scum, as fast as it ariseth. Christ biddeth us as oft to pray, Forgive us our trespasses, as we pray, Give us this day our daily bread. He not only waits for repentance from the wicked, but would also have his dearest children daily meet him, condemning themselves, Luke 13. 5. If ye repent not also more and more, when ye see the examples of Gods wrath upon other, ye shall likewise perish. Besides, some sins are past in time that are not past in deed, if we dwell not in the undoing and reversing of them, Ezra 10. 11, 12. and 9. 15. They were to begin anew their repentance, because they had not considered their marrying of strange wives. 2 Pet. 3. 9.

Verse 18. And Jesus walking by the sea of Galilee] Not for recreation sake, or to deceive the time (for he had a great multitude attending upon him to hear the Word of God, as S. Luke noteth) but as laying hold on the opportunity of calling Peter and Andrew; and, after that, James and John to the Apostleship. Our Saviour knew that a well chosen season is the greatest advantage of any action; which, as it is seldom found in haste, so is too often lost in delay. The men of Issachar were in great account with David, because they had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do, and when to do it. So are they in great account with the son of David, who regard and improve (as he did here) the season of well-doing; which they that lose are the greatest losers, and the wastfullest Prodigals: For of all other possessions two may be had together: But two moments of time (how much less two opportunities of time?) cannot be possest together. Some are semper victuri (as Seneca saith) ever about to do better; they stand futuring and whiling out the time so long, till they have trifled and fooled away their own salvation. Let us sit ready in the door of our hearts (as Abraham did in the door of his tent) to apprehend occasions of doing good, as he to entertain passengers; to set a word or work upon its wheels, that it may be as apples of gold, and pictures of silver, pleasant and profitable; for every thing is beautiful in its season, and how forcible are right words? As the Bee (so soon as ever the Sun breaks forth) flies abroad to gather honey and wax: So be thou ready to every good work, waiting the occasions thereof, Tit. 3.1. Now, now, saith David, and after him Paul; because (for ought we know) it is now or never, to day, or not at all. Opportunities are headlong, and, once past, irrecoverable; Ex hoc momento pendet æternitas. God hath hanged the heaviest weights upon the weakest wires. Be quick therefore, and abrupt in thine obedience, Thou knowest not what a great-bellied day may bring forth: Yea, thou mayest the very next hour be cut off from all further time of repentance, acceptation, and grace for ever.

For idleness is the hour of temptation, and an idle person the Devils Tennis-ball, which he tosseth at pleasure, and sets a work as he liketh and listeth. God hath ordained that in the sweat of his brow man should eat his bread. The Hebrew hath it, In the sweat of his nose: for he must labour till the sweat run down his nose. Which, if he do, God hath promised, that manus mottians, the diligent, nimble-handed man shall not stay long in a low place. He shall stand before Princes, as these painful fishermen were to stand before the Prince of Peace, and to be of his constant retinue; As till then, their busie attendance on their calling was no less pleasing to Christ, then an immediate devotion. Happy is that servant, whom his Lord when he comes shall find serving God and man with his fat and sweet, as the Fig-tree and Vine in Jothams Parable.

Verse 19. He saith unto them, Follow me] And together with his Word, there went forth a Power inclining them to follow; whereby it appears, that they were not only of the many that are called, but of those few that are chosen. The Lord knoweth who are his, saith S. Paul. But this knowing of his is carried secret, as a river under ground, till by effectual calling he separates them from the rest; till they can call upon the Name of the Lord, and depart from evil. This; when they are once taught of Christ, they must be acting: when he hath tuned and touched us, we must make musick; and whilest the spirit embreaths us, we must turn about as the Mill: And follow the Lambe whersoever he goeth, as these Disciples did.

Unwittingly we are caught, and unwillingly we are kept, as fishes labour to get out of the net, and would fain leap back out of the boat into the water. 4. Ministers are fishers. A busie profession, a toilsom calling; no idle mans occupation, as the vulgar conceits it, nor needless trade, taken up alate, to pick a living out of. Let Gods fisher-men busie themselves as they must, sometimes in preparing, sometimes in mending, sometimes in casting abroad, sometimes in drawing in the net, That they may separate the precious from the vile, &c. and no man shall have just cause to twit them with idleness, or to say they have an easie life, and that it is neither sin nor pitty to defraud them.

Verse 20. And they straightway left their nets.] As the woman of Samaria did her pitcher, Matthew his Toll-book, and blind Bartimeus his cloak, when Christ called for him. Look we likewise to this Author and finisher of our faith; and for love of him, cast away every clog, and the sin that doth so easily beset or surround us. Divorce the flesh from the world, and there is no great danger. Admire not over-much, rest not in, dote not on, cleave not to the things of this life (those nets and snares of Satan, whereby he entangleth and encumbreth us) that we may attend upon the Lord (or sit close to him) without being haled away, or distracted by these lusts of life. The deeplier any man is drowned in the world, the more desperately is he divorced from God, deadned to holy things, and disobedient to the heavenly call, as the Recusant guests in the Gospel.

And followed him.] Immediately, and without sciscitation. When Christ calls, we must not reason, but run, as Paul, Gal. 1.16. not dispute, but dispatch, with David, Psalm 119. 60. Go we know not whither, with Abraham; do we know not what, with Gideon. If ye will enquire, enquire, saith Isaiah, return, come. A quick passage, and full of quickning; Like that of the Oratour, Si dormis, expergiscere; si stas, ingredere; si ingrederis, curre; si curris, advola. Courts have their citò, citò, quick, quick: and Courtiers use to observe and improve their mollissima fandi tempora; so must Christians. God is but a while with men in the opportunities of grace. He comes leaping on the mountains, and skipping on the hills: and, being come, he stands at the door, and knocks, by the sound of his Word, and motions of his Spirit. He sits not, but stands: while a man is standing, we say, he is going. And woe be unto us, if he depart from us. God hath his season, his harvest for judgement, Matth. 13.30. And is now more quick and peremptory in rejecting men, then of old: For how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation as is now preached? Our Saviour would not suffer the man that said he would follow him, to let so much time as to bury his father. Excuses he takes for refusals, delays for denials. As Saul lost his Kingdom, so doth many a man his soul, by not discerning his time: And troops of them that forget God, go down to hell, Psal. 9.17. Quare castigemus mores & moras nostras. Let us up and be doing, that the Lord may be with us.

Verse 21. He saw other two brethren, James, &c.] Three pair of brethren, at least, our Saviour called to the Apostleship; to shew what brotherly love should be found amongst Ministers; what agreement in judgement and affection. There the Lord commands the blessing, and life for evermore. As where envying and strife is, there is confusion, and every evil work. Jam. 3.6. Hence the Devil laboureth (all he can) to set Ministers at variance, and to sow dissention amonst them (as betwixt Paul and Barnabas) that the work may be hindred. Divide & impera, Make division, and so get dominion, was a Maxime of Machiavel, which he learnt of the Devil. What woful Tragedies hath he raised alate betwixt the Lutherans and Zuinglians? What Comedies have the Papists composed out of the Churches Tragedies? To foster the faction, they joyned themselves to the Lutherans in that sacramentary quarrel: They commended them, made much of them, and almost pardoned them all that loss they had sustained by them. This, that holy man of God Oecolampadius bitterly bewaileth, in a letter to the Lutherans of Suevia. The errour, saith he, may be pardoned through faith in Christ, but the discord we cannot expiate with the dearest and warmest blood in our hearts. They on the other side (in their syngrame or answer) handled that most innocent man so courtely, ut non objurgatione, sed execratione dignum sit, saith Zuinglius, that they deserved not to be confuted, but to be abhorred of all men. This was as good sport to the Papists, as the jars betwixt Abraham and Lot were to the Amorites. But that one consideration (that we are brethren) should conjure down all disagreements (as betwixt them) and make us unite against a common adversary. The Low-countrey men suspecting the English (Anno 1587.) stamped money with two earthern pots swimming in the sea (according to the old fable) and wittily inscribed, Si collidimur, frangimur, If we clash, we are broken. The Thracians, had they been all of one minde, they had been invincible, saith Herodotus. And (Cornelius Tacitus (who had been here in Britany with his Father in law Agricola) reporteth of our Fore-fathers, that they fell into the hands of the Romans, by nothing so much as by their dissentions amongst themselves. Pliny telleth of the stone Thyrreus, that though never so big while it is whole, it floateth upon the waters; but being broken, it sinketh. And who hath not read of Silurus his bundle of arrows? To break unity, is to cut asunder the very veins and sinews of the mystical body of Christ, as the Apostle intimateth, 1 Cor. 1,10. to hinder all true growth in godliness, *Ephes.*4.16. and inward comfort, *Phil.*2.1. to drive away God, who appeared not to Abraham till the difference was made up, *Gen.*13.14, &c. and to undo our selves. As the Dragon sucketh out the blood of the Elephant, and the weight of the falling Elephant oppresseth the Dragon, and so both perish together. To prevent all which, and to compose all quarrels in this Egypt of the world, let it be remembred, as Moses told the two striving Israelites, that we are brethren. And O how good, and how pleasant it is for brethren (in the Ministery especially) to dwell together in unity!

Verse 22. And they immediately left the ship and their father.] These were wise merchants, that parted with all to purchase the pearl of price. So did many Martyrs, and knew they made a savers bargain, Nicholas Shetterden writeth thus in a Letter to his Mother; What state soever your fathers be in, leave that to God, and let us follow the counsel of his Word. Dear Mother, embrace it with hearty affection: read it with obedience; let it be your pastime, &c. So shall we meet in joy at the last day: or else I bid you farewell for evermore. So Nicolas of Jenvile (a young man newly come from Geneva) was condemned to dye, and set in the Cart. His father coming with a staff, would have beaten him. But the Officers not suffering it, would have struck the old man. The son, crying to the Officers, desired them to let his father alone, saying, he had power over him, to do in that kind what he would; but Christ was dearer to him then the dearest friend on earth, &c. That of S. Hierom is well known to most, and often alledged: If my father stood weeping on his knees before me, my mother hanging on my neck behind me, and all my brethren, sisters, children, kinsfolk, howling on every side, to retain me in a sinful life with them, I would fling my mother to the ground, despise all my kinred, run over my father, and tread him under my feet, thereby to run to Christ when he calleth me. Rebezies and Danvile, two French Martyrs having been sorely racked, at night rejoyced together. After that, Rebezies cryed twice or thrice, Away from me, Satan. His fellow being in bed with him, asked, why he cryed, and whether Satan would stop him of his course? Rebezies said, that Satan set before him his parents, but by the grace of God, said he, he shall do nothing against me.

Happy sickness, that draws the sick matter out of the soul. Physicians hold, that in every two years, there is such store of ill humors and excrements ingendred in the body, that a vessel of one hundred ounces will scarce contain them. Certain it is, there's a world of wickedness and superfluity of naughtiness (that bed of spiritual diseases) daily gathered and got together in the sin-sick soul: which therefore we must labour to purge out by the practice of mortification; lest God purge and whiten us to our sorrow, by some sharp sickness: as he did Gehezi, whose white fore-head had made him a white soul; his disease cured him, as some are of opinion.

He preached (no doubt) many times, many hours together. But as his miracles, so his oracles are no more of them written then might suffice to make us believe, and live through his name: As the Prophets of old, after they had preached to the people, set down the sum of their Sermons, the heads only, for the use of the Church in all ages: So did the Apostles record in their day-books, the chief things in our Saviours Sermons, out of which they afterwards (by the instinct and guidance of the Spirit of God) framed this holy history.

For they shall be comforted.] Besides the comfort they find in their very sorrow (for it is a sweet sign of a sanctified soul, and seals a man up to the day of redemption, Ezek. 9.4,) they lay up for themselves thereby in store a good foundation of comfort against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life, as the Apostle speaketh in another case, 1*Tim.* 6.19. These April showers bring on May flowers: They that here sow in tears shall reap in joy; they that find Christs feet a fountain to wash in, may expect his side a fountain to bathe in. O how sweet a thing is it to stand weeping at the wounded feet of Jesus, as that good woman did! to water them with tears, to dry them with sighs, and to kiss them with our mouthes! None, but those that have felt it, can tell the comfort of it; The stranger meddleth not with this joy. When our merry Greeks, that laugh themselves fat, and light a candle at the Devil for lightsomness of heart, hunting after it to Hell, and haunting for it Ale-houses, Conventicles of Good-fellowship, sinful and unseasonable sports, vain and watterish fooleries, &c. when these Mirth-mongers (I say) that take pleasure in pleasure, and jeer when they should fear, with Lots sons in Law, shall be at a foul stand, and not have whither to turn them, Isa. 33.14. Gods mourners shall be able to dwell with devouring fire, with everlasting burnings, to stand before the Son of man at his second coming. Yea as the lower the ebb, the higher the tide; so the lower any hath descended in humiliation, the higher shall he ascend then in his exaltation. Those that have helped to fill Christs bottle with tears, Christ shall then fill their bottle (as once he did Hagars) with the water of life. He looked back upoon the weeping women, and comforted them, that would not vouchsafe a loving look, or a word to Pilate, or the Priests. Not long before that, he told his Disciples, Ye shall indeed be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy. And further addeth, A woman when she is in travel, hath sorrow, &c. comparing sorrow for sin, to that of a travelling woman. 1. For bitterness and sharpness for the time, throws of the new birth. 2 For utility and benefit, it tendeth to the bringing a man-child forth into the world. 3. For the hope and expectation that is in it, not only of an end, but also of fruit; this makes joy in the midst of sorrows 4. There is a certain time set for both, and a sure succession, as of day after night, and of fair weather after foul. Mourning lasteth but till morning: Though I fall, I shall arise; though I sit in darkness, the Lord shall give me light, saith the Church. Jabes was more honorable then his brethren, saith the Text, for his mother bare him with sorrow, and called his name Jabes, that is, sorrowful: But when he called upon the God of Israel, and said, Oh that thou wouldst bless me indeed, and inlarge my coast, &c. God granted him that which he requested. And so he will all such Israelites indeed, as ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, going and weeping as they go, to seek the Lord their God; he shall wipe all tears from their eyes (as nurses do from their babes that cry after them) and enlarge, not their coasts (as Jabes) but their hearts (which is better) yea, he shall grant them their requests, as him. So that as Hannah (when she had prayed, and Eli for her) she looked no more sad: yea as David when he came before God in a wo-case many times, yet when he had poured forth his sorrowful complaint there, he rose up triumphing, as Psal. 6. &c. so shall it be with such. that Martyr) when Abraham the good houſholder ſhall fill his boſom with them, in the Kingdom of heaven. Then as one hour changed Joſephs fetters into a chain of gold, his rags into robes, his ſtocks into a chariot, his priſon into a palace, his brown bread and water into manchet and wine; ſo ſhall God turn all his peoples ſadneſs into gladneſs, all their ſighing into ſinging, all their muſing into muſick, all their tears into triumphs; Luctus in lætitiam convertetur, lachryma in riſum, ſaccus in ſericum, cineres in corollas & unguentum, jejunium in epulum, manuum retortio in applauſum. He that will rejoyce with this joy unſpeakable, muſt ſtir up ſighs that are unutterable. M. Philpot. Cartw. Hiſt. Chriſt.

Verſe 5. Bleſſed are the meek.] Meekneſs is the fruit of mourning for ſin; and is therefore fitly ſet next after it. He that can kindly melt in Gods preſence, will be made thereby as meek as a lamb: and if God will forgive him his ten thouſand talents, he will not think much to forgive his brother a few farthings. Hence the wiſdom from above is, firſt, pure, and then peaceable, gentle, eaſie to be entreated, &c. Jam. 3. 17. And love is ſaid to proceed out of a pure heart, a good conſcience and faith unfeigned. And when our Saviour told his Diſciples they muſt forgive til ſeventy times ſeven times, Lord, encreaſe our faith, ſaid they, Give us ſuch a meaſure of godly mourning, as that we may be bold to believe that thou haſt freely forgiven us, and we ſhall ſoon forgive our enemies. David was never ſo rigid, as when he had ſinned by adultery and murther; and not yet mourned in good earneſt for his ſin. He put the Ammonites under ſaws and harrows of iron, and cauſed them to paſs thorow the brick-kiln, &c. which was a ſtrange execution, and fell out whiles he lay yet in his ſin. Afterward we find him in a better frame, and more meekned and mollified in his dealings with Shimei and others, when he had ſoundly ſoaked himſelf in godly ſorrow. True it is, that he was then under the rod; and that is a main means to make men meek. The Hebrew words that ſignifie afflicted and meek, grow both upon the ſame root, and are of ſo great affinity, that they are ſometimes by the Septuagint rendred the one for the other, as Pſal. 36. 11. Adverſus enim hominem manſuetum reddunt, ſaith Chemnitius: And, however it go with the outward man, The meek ſhall finde reſt to their ſouls, Mat 11. 29. Yea, the meek in the Lord ſhall encreaſe their joy, Iſa. 29. 19. And for outward reſpects; Meek Moſes complains not of Miriams murmurings, but God ſtrikes in for him the more. And he that ſaid, I ſeek not mine own glory, adds, But there is one that ſeeketh it, and judgeth. God takes his part ever that fights not for himſelf, and is Champion to him that ſtrives not, but, for peace ſake, parteth with his own right, otherwhiles. For they ſhall inherit the earth.] One would think that meek men, that bear and forbear, that put and forgive, committing their cauſe to him that judgeth righteouſly (as Chriſt did) ſhould be ſoon baffled, and out-ſworn out of their patrimony, with honeſt Naboth. But there's nothing loſt by meekneſs and yieldance. Abraham yields over his right of choice: Lot taketh it; And behold, Lot is croſſed in that which he choſe, Abraham bleſſed in that which was left him. God never ſuffers any man to loſe by an humble remiſſion of right, in a deſire of peace. The heavens, even the heavens are the Lords; but the earth hath he given to the children of men: Yet with this proviſo, that as heaven is taken by violence, ſo is earth by meekneſs; And God (the true Proprietary) loves no Tenants better, nor grants longer leaſes to any, then to the meek. They ſhall inherit, that is, peaceably enjoy what they have, and transfer it to poſterity, they ſhall give inheritance to their childrens children. As on the other ſide, frowardneſs forfeits all into the Lords hands, and he many times taketh the forfeiture, and outs ſuch perſons, comes upon them with a firme ejectione, as upon Amalek, Abimelech, and others. Αυθαδεια ουκ ενκαι & ἐνκαια, ſaid Plato. The Lord Treaſurer Burleigh was wont to ſay, That he overcame envy and ill-will more by patience then pertinacy. His private eſtate he managed with that integrity, that he never ſued any man, no man ever ſued him. He was in the number of thoſe few (ſaid Mr. Camden) that lived and dyed with glory. For as lowlineſs of heart ſhall make you high with God; even ſo meekneſs of ſpirit and of ſpeech ſhall make you ſink into the hearts of men, ſaid Mr. Tindal in a letter of his to John Frith, afterwards his fellow Martyr. 1 Pet. 2. This is in Chriſt for us, being wrought by his value and merit, and is called the righteouſneſs of juſtification. This is in us from Chriſt, being wrought by his vertue and ſpirit, and is called the righteouſneſs of ſanctification. Iuſtitia { imputata. imperfecta.

There must be a sad and serious consideration of mans misery, and Gods mercy. Whence will arise (as in hunger and thirst) 1. A sense of pain in the stomack. 2. A want and emptiness. 3. An eager desire of supply from Christ, who is the true bread of life, and heavenly Manna; the Rock flowing with honey, and fountain of living water, that reviveth the fainting spirits of every true Jonathan and Sampson, and makes them never to thirst again after the worlds tasteless fooleries: Like as his mouth will not water after homely provision, that hath lately tasted of delicate sustenance.

They shall be satisfied] Because true desires are the breathings of a broken heart, which God will not despise. He poureth not the oyl of his grace, but into broken vessels. For indeed, whole vessels are full vessels, and so this precious liquor would run over, and be spilt on the ground. There may be some faint desires (as of wishers and woulders) even in hell-mouth; as Balaam desired to dye the death of the righteous, but liked not to live their life: Pilate desired to know what is truth, but staid not to know it: that faint Chapman in the Gospel, that cheapned heaven of our Saviour, but was loth to go to the price of it. These were but fits and flashes, and they came to nothing. Carnal men care not to seek, whom yet they desire to find, saith Bernard; Fain they would have Christ, but care not to make after him: as Herod had of a long time desired to see our Saviour, but never stirred out of doors to come where he was, Luke 22. But now, The desire of the righteous, that shall be satisfied, as Solomon hath it, that shall be well filled, as beasts are after a good bait (as our Saviours word here signifieth.) Desires, as they must be ardent and violent, such as will take no nay, or be set down with silence or sad answers (whence it is that desire and zeal go together, 2 Cor. 7.11.) so if they be right, they are ever seconded with endeavor after the thing desired. Hence the Apostle contents not himself to say, that if there be first a willing mind, God accepts, &c. 2 Cor. 8.12. but presently adds, Now perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also; that is, a sincere endeavour to perform: As a thirsty man will not long for drink only, but labour after it; or a covetous man wish for wealth, but strive to compass it. And thus to run, is to attain; thus to will, is to work; thus to desire, is to do the will of our heavenly father; who accepts of pence for pounds, of mites for millions, and accounts us as good as we wish to be. He hath also promised, To fill the hungry with good things, to rain down righteousness on the dry and parched ground, to fulfil the desires of them that fear him. So that it is but our asking, and his giving; our opening the mouth, and he will fill it; our hungering, and his feeding; our thirsting and his watering; our open hand, and his open heart. The oil failed not,
2 Cor. 6. 12. till the vessels failed: neither are we streightned in God, till in our own bowels. Dear wife (saith Lawrence Saunders the Martyr) riches I have none to leave behind, wherewith to endow you after the worldly manner; but that treasure of tasting how sweet Christ is to hungry consciences (whereof, I thank my Christ, I do feel part, and would feel more) that I bequeath unto you, and to the rest of my beloved in Christ, to retain extend and exercise spiritual and corporal mercy. The former (which teacheth a man to warn the unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men, &c. The School-men thus, Consule, castiga, solare, remitte, fer, ora, usually excels and exceeds the later (which stirs a man up to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the sick, &c. 1 Thess. 5. 14. 1. In the nature of the gift, which is more noble. 2. In the object (the soul) which is more illustrious. 3. In the manner, which is transcendent, as being spiritual 4. In the kind, which is more heavenly, as that which aims at our brothers endless salvation. And this way the poorest may be plentiful, and enrich the richest with spiritual alms. As also the other way, something must be done by all the Candidates of true blessedness. They that labour with their hands, must have something to give to him that needeth; be it but two mites, nay a cup of cold water, it shall be graciously accepted from a sincere heart, and certainly rewarded. And here the poor Macedonians may shame (and many times do) the rich Corinthians, that have a price in their hands, but not a heart to use it; for it is the love, and not the lack of money that makes men churls and misers. And hence it is, that the richer men are many times the harder, as Dives: being herein like children, who when they have their mouthes full, and both hands full, yet will rather spoil all, then give any away. But do men give to Gods poor? or, do they not rather lend it to the Lord, who turns pay-master to such? Do they not lay it out for him, or rather lay it up for themselves? The safest chest is the poor mans box. Make you friends with the Mammon of unrighteousness (God hath purposely branded riches with that infamous adjunct, that we might not over-love them) that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations, that is, either the Angels, or the poor, or thy well-employed wealth, shall let thee into heaven. Only thou must draw forth not thy sheaf alone, but thy soul also to the hungry: shew bowels of mercy, as our Saviour did, Matth. 15. 32. to bleed in other mens wounds, and be deeply and tenderly affected in other mens miseries. This is better then alms; for when one gives an alms, he gives something without himself; but by compassion we relieve another by somewhat within, and from our selves. And this is properly the mercy to which mercy is here promised, and blessedness to boot. Ephes 4 28. Money-hoarders have no quick silver, no current coyn. Ward. Luke 16. 9. expounded. But mercy he shall be sure of, that sheweth mercy to those in misery. His soul shall be like a watered garden. The liberal soul shall be made fat, saith Solomon, and he that watereth shall be watered also himself. Or (as Kimchi expounds it) He shall be a sweet and seasonable shower to himself and others. His body also shall be fat and fair-liking. Thy health shall spring forth speedily, and thy bones shall be made fat, Isa. 58. 10, 11. Or if he be sick, the Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing; he will make all his bed in his sickness; as he did for that faithful and painful Preacher of Gods Word (while he lived) Master William Whately, Pastour of Banbury (whom for honours sake I here name) the most bountiful Minister to the poor, I think (saith a learned Gentleman, that knew him throughly) in England, of his means. He abounded in works of mercy (saith another grave Divine, that wrote his life) he set apart, and expended, for the space of many years, for good uses, the tenth part of his yearly comings in, both out of his temporal and ecclesiastical means of maintenance. A rare example: and God was not behind hand with him: for in his sickness, he could comfort himself with that precious promise, Psal. 41. 1, 3. Blessed is he that considereth the poor, Qui præoccupat vocem petituri, saith Austin, that prevents the poor mans cry; as he did, for he devised liberal things, seeking out to find objects of his mercy, and not staying many times, till they were offered. Therefore by liberal things he stood, as God had promised; his estate (as himself often testified) prospered the better after he took that course above-mentioned: For (in the next place) not getting, but giving is the way to wealth, as the Sareptan found it, whose barrel had no bottom; and as Solomon assureth it, Eccles. 11. 1. בקרבו Verse 8. Blessed are the pure in heart,] That wash their hearts from wickedness, that they may be saved, Jer.4.14. Not their hands only, with Pilate, but their inwards, as there; How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee? These, however the world censure them (for every fool hath a bolt to shoot at that purity, which yet they profess and pray for) are the Lords darlings, that purifie themselves (in some truth of resemblance) as God is pure.

Pura Deus mens est, purâ vult mente vocari:
Et puras jussit pondus habere preces.

He will take up in a poor, but it must be a pure heart; in a homely, but it must be a cleanly house: in a low, but not in a loathsom lodging. Gods Spirit loves to lie clean. Now the heart of man is the most unclean and loathsom thing in the world, a den of dragons, a dungeon of darkness, a stie and stable of all foul lusts, a cage of unclean and ravenous birds. The Ambassadours of the Council of Constance, being sent to Pope Benedict the XI, when he, laying his hand upon his heart, said, Hic est Arca Noæ, Here is Noahs Ark; they tartly and truly replyed, In Noahs Ark were few men, but many beasts, intimating, that there were seven abominations in that heart, wherein he would have them to believe, were lodged all the Laws of right and Religion. This is true of every mothers childe of us. The natural heart is Satans Throne, he filleth it from corner to corner, Acts 5.3. he sits abrood upon it, and hatcheth all noisom and loathsom lusts, Ephes. 2.2. There (as in the sea) is that Leviathan, and there are creeping things innumerable, crawling bugs and baggage vermine. Now as many as shall see God to their comfort, must cleanse themselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, and perfect holiness in the fear of God. This is the mighty work of the holy Spirit, which therefore we must pray and strive for: beseeching God to break the heavens and come down, yea to break open the prison doors of our hearts by his Spirit, and to cleanse this Augæan stable. He comes as a mighty rushing wind, and blows away those litters of lusts, as once the east-wind of God did all the locusts of Egypt into the red-Sea. And this done, he blows upon Gods garden, the heart, and causeth the spices thereof so to flow forth, that Christ saith, I am come into my garden, my sister, my spouse; I have gathered my myrrhe with my spice, Cant. 5.1.

Here, as in a glass obscurely, or as an old man thorow spectacles; but there face to face: Happier herein then Solomons servants, for a greater then Solomon is here. A good man is like a good Angel, ever beholding the face of God: He looketh upon them with singular complacency, and they upon him to their infinite comfort: He seeth no iniquity in them, they no indignation in him. He looketh upon them in the face of Christ; and although no man hath seen God at any time, yet God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, saith the Apostle, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Pure glass or crystal hath light coming thorow: not so stone, iron, or other grosser bodies. In like sort, the pure in heart see God, he shines thorow them: And as the pearl by the beams of the Sun becomes bright and radiant as the Sun it self: so we all with open face, beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image, from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord, 2 Cor 3..18.

cords, as Democritus imagined. But as Saint John ſpeaketh in another caſe, theſe are not of the Father, but of the world. He maketh great reckoning of a meek and quiet mind, becauſe it is like to his own mind, which is never ſtirred nor moved, but remaineth ſtill the ſame to all eternity. He loves thoſe that keep the ſtaff of binders unbroken, Zach. 11. 7,14. that hold the unity of the ſpirit, and advance the bond of peace among others as much as may be. The wicked are apt (as Dogs) to enter-tear and woory one another: and although there be not a diſagreement in hell (being but the place of retribution, and not of action) yet on earth there is no peace among the workers of iniquity, that are trotting apace towards hell by their contentions, Rom. 2. 8. But what pitty is it that Abraham and Lot ſhould fall out? that two Iſraelites ſhould be at ſtrife amid the Egyptians? that Johns Diſciples ſhould joyn with Phariſees againſt Jeſus? that Corinthians (for their contentions) ſhould bear carnal, and walk as men? that Lutherans and Calveniſts ſhould be at ſuch deadly fewd? Still Satan is thus buſie, and Chriſtians are thus malicious, that, as if they wanted enemies, they flee in one anothers faces. There was no noiſe heard in ſetting up the Temple: In Lebanon there was, but not in Sion. Whatever tumults there are abroad, 'tis fit there ſhould be all quietneſs and concord in the Church. Now therefore, although it be for the moſt part a thankleſs office (with men) to interpoſe, and ſeek to take up ſtrife, to piece again thoſe that are gone aſide and aſunder, and to ſound an Irenicum; yet do it for Gods ſake, and that ye may (as ye ſhall be after a while) called and counted (not medlers and buſie-bodies, but) the ſons of God. Tell them that jar and jangle (upon miſtakes for moſt part, or matters of no great moment) that it is the glory of a man to paſs by an infirmity, and that in theſe ignoble quarrels every man ſhould be a Law to himſelf, as the Thracians were; and not brother to go to Law with brother, becauſe he treads upon his graſs, or ſome ſuch poor buſineſs, ubi & vincere inglorium eſt, & atteri ſordidum. Now therefore there is utterly a fault amongſt you, becauſe ye go to law one with another, ſaith the Apoſtle. Not but that the courſe is lawful, where the occaſion is weighty, and the mind not vindictive. But the Apoſtle diſgraceth (in that Text) revenge of injuries, by a word that ſignifieth diſgrace, or loſs of victory: And a little before; I ſpeak to your ſhame, ſaith he, is it ſo, that there is not a wiſe man amongſt you? no, not one that ſhall be able to judge between his brethren, and compromiſe the quarrel? Servius Sulpitius (that heathen Lawyer) ſhall riſe up in judgement againſt us, Quippe qui ad facilitatem, æquitatemq́, omnia contulit, neq́, conſtituere litium actiones, quam controverſias tollere maluit, as Tully teſtifieth: Concedamus de jure, ſaith one, ut cæremus lite: And, ut habeas quietum tempus, perde aliquid. Loſe ſomething for a quiet life, was a common proverb (as now amongſt us) ſo of old among the Carthaginians, as S. Auſtin ſheweth. It were happy ſurely, if now, as of old, the multitude of believers were ἡ καρδία, καὶ ἡ ψυχὴ μία, of one heart, and of one ſoul. And, as in one very ancient Greek Copy it is added, that there was not one controverſie or contention found amongſt them.

For they ſhall be called the children of God] They ſhall both be, and be ſaid to be, both counted and called, have both the name and the note, the comfort and the credit of the children of God. And if any Atheiſt ſhall object: What ſo great honor is that? Behold, ſaith S. John, what manner of love the Father hath beſtowed upon us, that we ſhould be called the ſons of God. It was ſomething to be called the ſon of Pharoahs daughter, to be ſon in law to the King, with David, to be heir to the Crown, with Solomon: but far more, that God ſhould ſay of him, I will be his father, and he ſhall be my ſon; and I will eſtabliſh his Kingdom, 2 Sam. 7. 14. This is the happy effect of faith; for to them that believe on his name, gave he power and priviledge to become the ſons of God. Now faith ever works by love, and love covereth a multitude of ſins; not by any merit or expiation with God, but by ſeeking and ſetling peace among men. The like counsel gives St. Paul, and the Author to the Hebrews; for they felt by experience, how unable they were to bear crosses when they fell upon them. It was this Peter that denyed his master, upon the sight of silly a wench that questioned him: And this David, that changed his behaviour before Abimelech, and thereupon gave this advice to all that should come after him.

For righteousnes sake] This is it that makes the Martyr, a good cause and a good conscience. Martyrem facit causa, non supplicium, saith one Father; not the suffering, but the cause makes a Martyr. And, Multum interest, & qualia quis, & qualis quisq; patiatur, saith another: It greatly skilleth, both what it is a man suffereth, and what a one he is that suffereth. If he suffer as an evil-doer, he hath his mends in his own hands: but if for righteousnes sake, as here, and if men say and do all manner of evil against you (falsly and lyingly) for my sake, as in the next verse, and for the Gospels sake, as Mark hath it, this is no bar to blessedness: Nay, it is an high preferment on earth, Phil. 1. 20. and hath a crown abiding it in Heaven, beyond the which mortal mens wishes cannot extend. But let all that will have share in these comforts, see that they be able to say with the Church, Psal. 44, 21, 22. Thou knowest, Lord, the secrets of the hearts, that for thy sake, we are slain continually. Upon which words excellently St. Austin, Quid est, inquit, novit occulta? quæ occulta, &c. What secrets of the heart saith he, are those God that is here said to know? Surely these, that for thy sake we are slain, &c. slain thou mayest see a man; but wherefore, or for whose sake he is slain, thou knowest not, God only knoweth. Sunt qui causâ humanæ gloriæ paterentur, as that Father goeth on. There want not those that would suffer death (and seemingly for righteousnes sake) only for applause of the world, and vain-glory: As Lucian telleth of Peregrinus the Philosopher, that meerly for the glory of it he would have been made a Martyr. The Circumcellions (a most pernicious branch of the heresie of the Donatists) were so desirous to obtain (by suffering) the praise of Martyrdom, that they would seem to throw themselves down head-long from high places, or cast themselves into fire or water. Alexander the Copper-smith was near Martyrdom, Acts 19. 33. who yet afterward made shipwrak of the faith, and became a bitter enemy to the truth that he had professed, 1 Tim. 1. 19, 20. & 4. 14, 15. Felix Manzius, an Anabaptist of Helvetia, being put to death for his obstinacy and ill practices at Tigere, praised God that had called him to the sealing up of his truth with his blood, was animated to constancy by his mother and brother, and ended his life with these words, Lord, into thy hands I commend my spirit. What could any hearty Hooper, trusty Taylour, or sincere Saunders have said or done more in such a case? It is not then the suffering, but the suffering for righteousnes sake that proveth a man blessed, and entituleth him to heaven. The Philistims dyed by the fall of the house, as well as Sampson; sed diversa fine, at facto, as one saith: Christ and the theeves were in the same condemnation: Similis pœna, sed dissimilis causa, saith Austin; their punishment was all alike, but not their cause. Balthasar Gerardus the Burgundian that slew the Prince of Orange, 1584. June 30. endured very grievous torments: but it was pertinacy in him rather then patience, stupidity of sense, not a solidity of faith, a wretchless disposition, not a confident resolution. Therefore no heaven followed upon it, because he suffered not as a Martyr, but as a Malefactor.

For there is the Kingdom of Heaven] Surely if there be any way to heaven on horseback, 'tis by the cross, said that Martyr that was hasting thither in a fiery Chariot. The Turks account all them whom the Christians kill in battel, Mahometan Saints and Martyrs; assigning them a very high place in Paradise. In some parts of the West-Indies there is an opinion in grosse, that the soul is immortal; and that there is a life after this life, where, beyond certain hills (they know not where) those that dyed in defence of their Country, should remain after death in much blessedness; which opinion made them very valiant in their fights. Should not the assurance of heaven make us valians for the truth? should we not suffer with joy the spoiling of our goods? yea, the loss of our lives, for life eternal? should we not look up to the recompence of reward, to Christ the authour and finisher of our faith, who stands over us in the encounter, as once over Stephen, with a Crown on his head, and another in his hand, and saith, Vincenti dabo, to him that overcometh will I give this. Surely this Son of David will shortly remove us from the ashes of our forlorn Ziglag, to the Hebron of our peace and glory. This son of Jesse will give every one of us, not Fields and Vineyards, but Crowns, Scepters Scepters, Kingdoms, Glories, Beauties, &c. The expectation of this bleſſed day, this nightleſs day (as one calleth it) muſt (as it did with Davids ſouldiers all the time of their baniſhment) digeſt all our ſorrows, and make us in the midſt of miſeries for Chriſt, to over-abound exceedingly with joy, as Paul did. Q. Elizabeths Government was ſo much the more happy and welcome, becauſe it enſued upon the ſtormy times of Q. Mary. She came as a freſh ſpring after a ſharp winter; and brought the ſhip of England from a troublous and tempeſtuous ſea, to a ſafe and quiet harbour. So will the Lord Chriſt do for all his perſecuted people. Ye ſee (ſaid Bilney the Martyr, and they were his laſt words, to one that exhorted him to be conſtant, and take his death patiently) ye ſee, ſaith he, when the Mariner is entred his ſhip to ſail on the troublous ſea, how he, for a while, is toſſed in the billows of the ſame: but yet in hope that he ſhall once come to the quiet haven, he beareth in better comfort the troubles that he feeleth; So am I now towards this ſailing; and whatſoever ſtorms I ſhall feel, yet ſhortly after ſhall my ſhip be in the haven, as I doubt not thereof by the grace of God, &c. Lo, this was that that held the good mans head above water, the hope of heaven. And ſo it did many others, whom it were eaſie to inſtance. Elizabeth Cooper, Martyr, being condemned, and at the ſtake with Simon Miller, when the fire came unto her, ſhe a little ſhrank thereat, crying once, Ha. When Simon heard the ſame, he put his hand behind him toward her, and willed her to be ſtrong and of good chear: For, good ſiſter, ſaid he, we ſhall have a joyful and ſweet ſupper. Whereat ſhe being ſtrengthened, ſtood as ſtill and as quiet, as one moſt glad to finiſh that good courſe. Now I take my leave of you (writeth William Tims, Martyr, in a letter to a friend of his, a little before his death) till we meet in Heaven: And hie you after, I have tarried a great while for you; And ſeeing you be ſo long in making ready, I will tarry no longer for you: You ſhall find me merrily ſinging. Holy, holy, holy Lord God of Sabbath, at my journeys end, &c. And, I cannot here let ſlip that golden Paracleſis, wherewith thoſe forty Martyrs (mentioned by S. Baſil) comforted one another, when they were caſt out naked all night in the winter, and were to be burned the next morrow; Sharp is the winter (ſaid they) but ſweet is Paradiſe: painful is the froſt, but joyful the fruition that followeth it. Wait but a while, and the Patriarks boſom ſhall cheriſh us. After one night we ſhall lay hold upon eternal life. Let our feet feel the fire for a ſeaſon, that we may for ever walk arm in arm with Angels: Let our hands fall off, that they may for ever be lifted up to the praiſe of the Almighty, &c.

Verſe 11. Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall revile you, and perſecute you, and ſhall ſay all manner of evil againſt you, falſly, for my ſake.] There are tongue-ſmiters, as well as hand-ſmiters; ſuch as malign and miſlight Gods deareſt children, as well with their virulent tongues, as violent hands. Such as will revile you, ſaith our Saviour, twit and upbraid you with your profeſſion, bit you in teeth with your God (as they dealt by David, and that were as a murthering weapon to his ſoul) and lay your preciſeneſs and conſcientiouſneſs in your diſh: This is the force of the firſt word. Further, they ſhall perſecute you, eagerly purſue and follow you hot-foot, as the hunter doth his prey. The word betokeneth a keen and eager purſuit of any other, whether by law, or by the ſword, whether by word or deed. For ſcoffers alſo are perſecutors, as Iſmael, and for ſuch ſhall be arraigned, Jude 15. And cruel mockings, and ſcourgings are ſet together by the Authour to the Hebrews, as much of a kind, Chap. 11. 35. eſpecially when (as it follows in the text) they ſhall ſay all manner of evil againſt you, call you all to pieces, and think the worſt word in their bellies too good for you. This is collateral blaſphemy, blaſphemy in the ſecond table, and ſo it is often called in the New Teſtament. God, for the honour he beareth to his people, is pleaſed to afford the name of blaſphemy to their reproaches, as importing that he taketh it as if himſelf were reproached. Thus the Iſraelites were of old, called by the prophane Heathens, Apella, and Aſinarii, as if they worſhipped a golden Aſs-head, and in deriſion of their circumciſion; As afterward they called the Primitive Chriſtians, Murtherers, Church-Robers, Inceſtuous, Traytors to the State, &c. and if inundations, famine, or other publike calamities fell out, they preſently cryed out, Chriſtianos ad Leones. So in after-times, the Arians called the Orthodox thodox Christians, Ambrosians, Athanasians, Homousians, what not? The Pseudo-Catholicks (speaking evil of that they knew not) disgraced the professors of the truth, by the names of Wickliffists, Waldenses, Huguenots, poor men of Lyons, &c. Thus of old; as of late, Hereticks, New-Gospellers, Puritans, all manner of evil they speak against us, but (falsly) that's our comfort; not caring what they speak, nor whereof they affirm, so they may promote their Cacolick cause, and the Devils Kingdom, which as it began in a lye, so by lyes do they maintain it. A Fryer a lyar, was anciently a sound argument in any mans mouth (saith Thomas Walsingham) tenens tàm de forma, quam de materia. But the Jesuits have won the whetstone from all that went before them, for frontles and prodigious lyes and slanders. Eudaemon-Joannes, that demoniack, blusheth not to affirm, that these are our decrees and doctrines, That no God is to be worshipped, that we must shape our Religion according to the times, that gain is godliness, that we may make the publike cause a pretence to our private lusts, that a man may break his word whensoever he thinketh good, cover his hatred with fair flatteries, confirm tyranny by shedding innocent blood. Salmeron the Jesuit hath published to the world in his Comment upon the Gospels, that the Lutherans now make fornication to be no sin at all. And a little afore the Massacre of Paris, the Monks slanderously gave out, that the Huguenots met together for no other purpose, then that (after they had fed themselves to the full) they might put out the lights and go together promiscuously, as brute beasts. Cenalis Bishop of Anranches wrote against the Congregation of Christians at Paris, defending impudently, that their Assemblies were to maintain whoredom. The lives of Calvin and Beza were (at the request of the Popish side) written by Bolsecus a runnagate Fryer, their sworn enemy: and though so many lines, so many lies, yet are they in all their writings alledged as Canonical. Wickliff disallowed the Invocation of Saints, whom he called servants, not gods. For the word Knave, which he used, signified in those days, a child or a servant: not as it doth in our days, a wicked varlet, as his enemies maliciously interpret it; Bellarmine for one, a man utterly ignorant of the English tongue. Hereupon the people are taught to believe that the Protestants are blasphemers of God and all his Saints; that in England, Churches are turned into stables, the people are grown barbarous, and eat young children; that they are as black as Devils, ever since they were blasted and thunder-struck with the Popes Excommunication; that Geneva is a professed sanctuary of Roguery, &c. that the fall of Black-Fryers (where besides a 100 of his hearers slain, Drury the Priest had his Sermon and brains knockt out of his head together) was caused by the Puritans, who had secretly sawed in two the beams and other timber. With like honesty they would have fathered the Powder-Plot upon the Puritans, by their Proclamations, which they had ready, to be sent abroad immediately, had Faux but fired the powder. And a certain Spanish Author hath taken the boldness, since, to aver, that they were the Authors of that hellish conspiracy. There is a book lately published, and commonly sold in Italy and France, containing a relation of Gods judgments shewn on a sort of Protestant-Hereticks by the fall of a house in Black-Fryers, London, in which they were assembled to hear a Geneva-Lecture, Octob 26. 1623. And Dr. Weston doubted not to make his boasts to a Noble-man of England, that at the late Conference and Disputation between Fisher and Featly (with certain others of both sides) our Doctors were confounded, and theirs triumphed and had the day; insomuch, that two Earls, and a hundred others were converted to the Catholick Roman faith. Whereas he, to whom this tale was told, was himself one of the two Earls, continuing sound and orthodox, and knew full well that there were not a hundred Papists and Protestants (taken together) present at that disputation. But this was one of their pia fraudes, doubtless: much like their Legend of miracles of their Saints, which the Jesuit confessed to my self (saith mine Author) to be for most part, false and foolish; but it was made for good intention; and that it was lawful and meritorious to lie and write such things, to the end the common people might with greater zeal serve God and his Saints, &c. So long since, because freedom of speech was used by the Waldenses, in blaming and reproving the dissolute life and debauched manners of the Popish Clergy, Plures reformatæ affingebantur iis opiniones, à quibus omnino fuerant alieni, saith Girardus, They were cryed out upon for odious Hereticks and Apostates: Manichees they were said to be, and to make two first beginnings of things, viz. God and the Devil; And why? because they preached and maintained, that the

the Emperor depended not upon the Pope. Moreover, they were Arians too, and denyed Christ to be the Son of God, becauſe (forſooth) they denyed a cruſt to be tranſubſtantiated into Christ, as one ſpeaketh. But bleſſed be God, that although they have in all ages ſpoken all manner of evil againſt us, yet they have done it falſly, and for Christs ſake, wherefore we may take up their books written againſt us, and wear them as a Crown. Do well and hear ill, is written upon heaven gates, ſaid that Martyr. Christ himſelf (ſaith father Latimer) was miſreported, and falſly accuſed, both as touching his words and meaning alſo. Count it not ſtrange to be traduced, diſgraced, ſcandalized. Auſtere John hath a devil; ſociable Christ is a wine-bibber, and the Scribes and Phariſees (whoſe words carry ſuch credit) ſay as much. Contra ſycophantæ morſum non eſt remedium. It is but a vain perſwaſion for any child of God to think, by any diſcretion, wholly to ſtill the clamors and hates of wicked men, who when they think well, will learn to report well. In the mean, let our lives give them the lye confute them by a real Apology.

Verſe 12. Rejoyce and be exceeding glad] Leap and skip for joy, as wantizing young cattel uſe to do in the ſpring, when every thing is in its prime and pride. Thus George Kipper, at his coming to the ſtake, fet a great leap. So ſoon as the flame was about him, he put out both his arms from his body, like a rood, and ſo ſtood ſtedfaſt (the joy of the Lord being his ſtrength) not plucking his arms in, till the fire had conſumed and burnt them off. So Doctor Taylor going toward his death, and coming within a mile or two of Hadley (where he was to ſuffer) he leapt and fetcht a friſk or twain, as men commonly do in dancing. Why, Maſter Doctor, quoth the Sheriff, how do you now? He anſwered, well, God be praiſed, good Maſter Sheriff, never better; for now I know I am almoſt at home. I lack not paſt two ſtiles to go over, and I am even at my fathers houſe. Likewiſe Rawlins White, going to the ſtake, whereas before he was wont to go ſtooping, or rather crooked through infirmity of age, having a ſad countenance, and a very feeble complexion, and withal very ſoft in ſpeech and geſture; now he went and ſtretcht up himſelf bolt upright, and bare withal a moſt pleaſant and comfortable countenance, not without great courage and audacity, both in ſpeech and behaviour. It were eaſie to inſtance the exceeding great joy of the Apoſtles, Acts 5. 41. who went from the Councel rejoycing that they were ſo far honored, as to be diſhonored for the name of Jeſus; which Caſaubon calleth Elegantiſſimum oxymoron. So Bradford, God forgive me (ſaith he) mine unthankfulneſs for this exceeding great mercy, that, among ſo many thouſands, he chuſeth me to be one in whom he will ſuffer. And in a Letter to his mother; For Christ ſake I ſuffer ſaith he, and therefore ſhould be merry and glad; And indeed, good mother, ſo I am, as ever I was; yea, never ſo merry and glad was I, as now I ſhould be, if I could get you to be merry with me, to thank God for me, and to pray on this ſort, Ah, good Father, that doſt vouchſafe that my ſon, being a grievous ſinner in thy ſight, ſhould find this favour with thee, to be one of thy ſons Captains, and Men of War, to fight and ſuffer for his Goſpels ſake: I thank thee, and pray thee in Chriſts name, that thou wouldſt forgive him his ſins and unthankfulneſs, and make him worthy to ſuffer, not only impriſonment, but even very death for thy Truth, Religion, and Goſpels ſake, &c. Whether Bradfords mother did thus or no, I know not: But William Hunters mother (that ſuffered under Bonner) told him that ſhe was glad that ever ſhe was ſo happy, as to bear ſuch a child, as could find in his heart to loſe his life for Chriſts name ſake. Then William ſaid to his mother, For my little pain which I ſhall ſuffer, which is but for a little braid, Chriſt hath promiſed me a Crown of joy: May not you be glad of that mother? With that his mother kneeled down on her knees, ſaying, I pray God ſtrengthen thee, my ſon, to the end: yea, I think thee as well beſtowed, as any child that ever I bare. For indeed (as Mr. Philpot the Martyr ſaid) to dye for Chriſt, is the greateſt promotion that God can bring any in this vale of miſery unto; yea ſo great an honor, as the greateſt Angel in heaven is not permitted to have. This made John Clerks mother of Melda in Germany (when ſhe ſaw her ſon whipt and branded in the forehead for oppoſing the Popes Indulgencies, and calling him Antichriſt) to hearten her ſon, and cryed out, Vivat Chriſtus ejuſq; inſignia: Bleſſed be Chriſt, and welcome be theſe marks of his. Conſtantinus a Citizen of Rhone (with three other) being, for defence of the Goſpel, condemned to be burned, were put into a dung-cart, who thereat rejoycing, joycing, said, that they were reputed here the excrements of the world; but yet their death was a sweet odour to God. When the chain was put about Alice Driver's neck: Oh, said she, here is a goodly neckerchief, blessed be God for it. Algerius Christs Prisoner, thus dated his Letter, From the delectable Orchard of the Leonine prison And, I am in prison till I be in prison, said Saunders. And indeed, said Bradford, I thank God more of this prison, then of any parlour, yea, then of any pleasure that ever I had, for in it I find God, my most sweet God always. After I came into prison (saith Robert Glover, Martyr, in a letter to his wife) and had reposed my self there a while, I wept for joy and gladness my belly-full, musing much of the great mercies of God; and as it were, thus saying to my self, Lord, who am I, on whom thou shouldst bestow this great mercy, to be numbered among the Saints that suffer for thy Gopel-sake? And I was carried to the Cole-house, saith Mr. Philpot, where I and my six fellows do rouse together in the straw as chearfully we thank God, as others do in their beds of down. And in another Letter; I am now in the Cole-house, a dark and ugly prison as any is about London; but my dark body of sin hath well deserved the same, &c. And, I thank the Lord, I am not alone, but have six other faithful companions, who in our darkness do cheerfully sing hymns and praises to God, for his great goodness: We are so joyful, that I wish you part of my joy, &c. Good brethren (saith William Tims, Martyr) I am kept alone, and yet I thank God he comforteth me, past all the comfort of any man; for I was never merrier in Christ. You shall be whipt and burned for this gear, I trow (said one Mr. Foster to John Fortune, Martyr.) To whom he replied, If you knew how these words rejoyce mine heart, you would not have spoken them. Why, quoth Foster, thou fool, dost thou rejoyce in whipping? Yea said Fortune, for it is written in the Scripture, and Christ saith, Ye shall be whipt for my names sake. And since the time that the sword of tyranny came into your hand, I heard of none that was whipt: Happy were I, if I had the maiden-head of this persecution. William Walsey was so desirous to glorifie God with his suffering, that being wonderful sore tormented in prison with tooth-ach, he feared nothing more, then that he should depart before the day of his execution (which he called his glad day) were come. Anthony Person with a cheerful countenance embraced the stake whereat he was to be burned, and kissing it, said, Now welcome mine own sweet wife, for this day shall thou and I be married together in the love and peace of God. Lawrence Saunders took the stake, to which he should be chained in his arms, and kissed it, saying, Welcome the cross of Christ; welcome everlasting life. Walter Mill, Scot, being put to the stake, ascended gladly, saying, Introibo altare Dei. John Noyes, Martyr, took up a fagot at the fire and kissed it, and said, Blessed be the time that ever I was born to come to this. Denly sang in the fire at Uxbridge, so did George Carpenter the Bavarian Martyr: so did Wolfgangus Schuh, a Germane, when he entred into the place heaped up with fagots and wood, he sang, Lætatus sum in his quæ dicta sunt mihi, in domum Domini ibimus. Two Austin Monks at Bruxelles, anno, 1523. (the first among the Lutherans that suffered for Religion) being fastened to the stake to be burnt, sang, Te Deum, and the Creed. Others clapt their hands in the flames, in token of triumph; as Hawks and Smith, and five Martys burnt together by Bonner, Bainham at the stake, and in the midst of the flame (which had half consumed his arms and his legs) spake these words, O ye Papists, behold ye look for miracles: here you may see a miracle: For in this fire I feel no more pain, then if I were in a bed of down; but it is to me as a bed of roses. Now what was it else whereby these Worthies (of whom the world was not worthy) quenched the violence of the fire, and out of weakness were made strong? Was it not by their heroical and impregnable faith causing them to endure, as seeing him that is invisible, and having respect, as Moses, to the recompence of reward? Heb. 11. 26, 27.

For great is your reward in heaven.] God is a liberal pay-master, and no small things can fall from so great a hand as his. Oh that joy! O my God, when shall I be with thee? said a dying Peer of this Realm. So great is that joy, that we are said to enter into it, it is too full to enter into us. Elias, when he was to enter into it, feared not the fiery chariots that came to fetch him, but through desire of those heavenly happinesses, waxed bold against those terrible things, Atque hoc in carne adhuc vigens (it is S. Basils observation) and this he did, whiles he was as yet in the flesh. For he had oculum in metam (which was Ludovicus Vives his Motto) his eye upon the mark, He prest preſt forward toward the high prize, with Paul; and looking thorow the terror of the fire, ſaw heaven beyond it; and this made him ſo valiant, ſo violent for the Kingdom. A Dutch Martyr, feeling the flame to come to his beard: Ah, ſaid he, what a ſmall pain is this to be compared to the glory to come. Hellen Stirk, a Scotch-woman, to her husband at the place of execution ſpoke thus, Husband rejoyce; for we have lived together many joyful days, but this day in which we muſt dye, ought to be moſt joyful to us both, becauſe we muſt have joy for ever: Therefore I will not bid you good night, for we ſhall ſuddenly meet within the Kingdom of heaven. The ſubſcription of Miſtreſs Ann Askew to her confeſſion, was this, Written by me Ann Askew, that neither wiſheth for death, nor feareth his might, and as merry as one that is bound toward heaven. Oh how my heart leapeth for joy (ſaid Mr. Philpot) that I am ſo near the apprehenſion of eternal life. God forgive me mine unthankfulneſs and unworthineſs of ſo great glory. —— I have ſo much joy of the reward prepared for me, moſt wretched ſinner, that though I be in place of darkneſs and mourning, yet I cannot lament, but both night and day, am ſo joyful, as though under no croſs at all; yea in all the days of my life, I was never ſo merry, the Name of the Lord be praiſed therefore for ever and ever; and he pardon mine unthankfulneſs. The world wondereth (ſaith he another place) how we can be ſo merry, in ſuch extream miſery: but our God is omnipotent, which turneth miſery into felicity. Believe me, there is no ſuch joy in the world, as the people of Chriſt have under the croſs, I ſpeak by experience, &c. To this joy all other being compared, are but mournings, all delights ſorrows, all ſweetneſs ſowre, all beauty filth, and finally all things counted pleaſant, are tediouſneſs. Great then, we ſee, is their reward in earth, that ſuffer for Chriſt: They have heaven afore-hand, they rejoyce in tribulation, with joy unſpeakable and glorious, they have an exuberancy of joy, ſuch as no good can match, no evil over-match. For though I tell you (ſaid Mr. Philpot in a Letter to the Congregation) that I am in hell, in the judgement of this world, yet aſſuredly, I feel in the ſame, the conſolation of heaven. And this lothſom and horrible priſon, is as pleaſant to me, as the walks in the Garden in the Kings bench. What will it be then, when they ſhall have crowns on their heads, and palms in their hands, when they ſhall come to that general Aſſembly, *Heb.*12.23. and have all the Court of heaven to meet and entertain them, When they ſhall follow the Lamb whereſoever he goeth, Revel.14.4. and have places given them to walk among thoſe that ſtand by, Zech.3.7. that is, among the Seraphims (as the Chaldee Paraphaſt expoundeth it) among the Angels of heaven; Alluſively, to the walks and galleries that were about the Temple? Majora certamina, majora ſequuntur præmia, ſaith Tertullian. Quiſquis volens detrahit famæ meæ, nolens addit mercedi meæ, ſaith Auguſtine. The more we ſuffer with and for Chriſt, the more glory we ſhall have with and from Chriſt. Luther was wont to ſay, when any man ſpake evil of him, This will be accounted to my reckoning at the laſt day. Mihi maximè proſunt, ſaith he, qui mei peſſimè meminerunt. They are my beſt friends, who ſpeak worſt of me.

For ſo perſecuted they the Prophets which were before you.] Your betters ſped no better: Strange not therefore at it, ſtart not for it. Perſecution hath ever been the Saints portion. How early did Martyrdom come into the world? The firſt man that dyed, dyed for Religion. And although Cain be gone to his place, yet I would he were not ſtill alive in his ſons and ſucceſſors, who hate their brethren, becauſe they are more righteous, Et clavam ejus ſanguine Abelis rubentem circumferunt, as one ſpeaketh. But that is not to be wiſhed, or at leaſt, it is, Magis optabile quam opinabile, that ever a Prophet ſhall want a perſecutor, while there is a buſie Devil, and a malicious world. The Leopard is ſaid ſo to hate man, that he fleeth upon his very picture, and teareth it: ſo doth the Devil and his Imps, God and his Image. The Tigre is ſaid to be enraged with the ſmell of ſweet odours; ſo are the wicked of the world with the fragrancy of Gods graces. Noah roſe up and condemned them by his contrary-courſes, and therefore under-went a world of calamities. Puritan Lot was an eye-ſore to the ſinful Sodomites, and is caſt out, as it were by an Oſtraciſm. His father Haran, the brother of Abraham, dyed before his father Terah in Ur of the Caldees. plead for his life? And although Davids innocency triumphed in Sauls conscience, yet could he not be safe, but carried his life in his hand continually, as he complaineth in that hundred and nineteenth Psalm; which was made (as is thought) in the midst of those troubles, out of his own observations and experiments. As for the Prophets that came after, which of them have not your fathers slain? saith our Saviour to the Pharisees, whom he bids (by an Irony) to fill up the measure of their fathers, and fore-telling that they shall deal so by the Apostles (whom he there calleth, according to the custom of that Countrey, Prophets, Wise-men and Scribes.) He demandeth of those serpents and brood of vipers, how they can escape those treasures and hoards of wrath they have been so long in heaping? They had a little before delivered up John Baptist to Herod, and did unto him whatsoever they would, Matth. 17. 11. 12. Thereupon our Saviour departed out of Judea into Galilee, as John the Evangelist hath it, lest he should suffer the same things from them. For though Herod were Tetrarch of Galilee, and therefore it might seem a safer way for our Saviour to keep from thence (after John was beheaded) and to continue in Judea; yet forasmuch as he was but their slaughter-slave (as Bonner was to the rest of the Bishops of those days) Christ knew, that if he did decline their fury, there was no such cause to fear Herod. Therefore when some of the Pharisees (pretending good-will to him) bad him pack thence, for else Herod would kill him: he replyed, Go tell that fox, that I know both my time and my task, which he would be doing at to day and to morrow (that is, as long as he listed) without his leave. And the third day (when his hour was once come) he should be sacrificed; but it must be in Jerusalem, and by the Pharisees, for it befel not a Prophet to perish out of Jerusalem. There it was that Stephen was stoned, James slain with the sword, Peter imprisoned, and destined to destruction, Paul whipt and bound, many of the Saints punished oft in every Synagogue, and compelled by the High-Priests authority, either to blaspheme, or flee to strange Cities, as appeareth in many places of the Acts, or rather passions of the Apostles: for none (out of hell) ever suffered harder and heavier things then they. See what S. Paul witnesseth of himself, and think the like of the rest, 2 Cor. 6. 5.

Verse 13. Ye are the salt of the earth.] As salt keepeth flesh from putrifying, so do the Saints the world: and are therefore sprinkled up and down (here one and there one) to keep the rest from rotting. Varro. Suillo pecori anima pro sale data, quæ carnem servaret, ne putresceret, saith Varro. Swine and swinish persons have their souls for salt only, to keep their bodies from stinking above ground. Christ and his people are somewhere called the soul of the world. The Saints are called, all things; the Church, every creature. Tabor and Hermon are put for East and West: for God accounts of the world by the Church, and upholds the world for the Churches sake. Look how he gave Zoar to Lot, and all the souls in the ship to Paul; so he doth the rest of mankind to the righteous. Were it not for such Jehoshaphats, I would not look towards thee, nor see thee, said Elishai to Jehoram, saith God to the wicked. The holy seed is, stamen terræ, saith one Prophet, the earths substance or settlement: The righteous are fundamentum mundi, the worlds foundation, saith another. I bear up the pillars of it, saith David. And it became a common proverb in the primitive times, Absq; stationibus non staret mundus: But for the Piety and Prayers of Christians, the world could not subsist. It is a good conclusion of Philo, therefore, Oremus, ut tanquam columna in domo vir justus permaneat, ad calamitatum remedium. Let us pray that the righteous may remain with us, for a preservative, as a pillar in the house, as the salt of the earth. But as all good people, so good Ministers especially are here said, for their doctrine, to be the salt of the earth; and for their lives, The Light of the World. Ye are salt (not honey) which is bitter to wounds. Ye are light, which is also offensive to sores eyes. Salt hath two things in it, Acorem & saporem, sharpness and savourines. Ministers must reprove men sharply, that they may be sound in the faith, and a sweet savour to God, savoury meat, as that of Rebecca, a sweet meat-offering, meet for the Masters tooth, that he may eat and bless them. Cast they must their cruses full of this holy salt into the unwholsome waters, and upon the barren grounds of mens hearts, (as Elisha once of Jericho) so shall God say the word that all be whole, and it shall be done: No thought can pass between the receit and the remedy.

But if the ſalt have loſt his ſavour,&c.] A looſe or lazy Miniſter is the worſt creature upon earth, ſo fit for no place, as for hell. As unſavoury ſalt is not fit for the dunghil, but makes the very ground barren whereupon it is caſt. Who are now Devils, but they which once were Angels of light? Corruptio optimi peſſima, as the ſweeteſt wine makes the ſowreſt vinegar, and the fineſt fleſh is reſolved into the vileſt earth. Wo to thoſe dehoneſtamenta cleri, that, with Elies ſons, cover foul ſins under a white Ephod: that neither ſpin nor labour, with the Lillies, unleſs it be in their own vineyards, little in Gods; that want either art or heart, will or skill, to the work; being not able or not apt to teach, and ſo give occaſion to thoſe black-mouthed Campians to cry out, Miniſtris eorum nihil vilius; Their Miniſters are the vileſt fellows upon earth: God commonly caſteth off ſuch, as incorrigible; for wherewithal ſhall it be ſalted? there is nothing in nature that can reſtore unſavoury ſalt to its former nature. He will not only lay ſuch by, as broken veſſels, boring out their right eyes, and drying up their right arms; i.e. bereaving them of their former abilities; but alſo he will caſt dung upon their faces, Mal.2.3. ſo that, as dung, men ſhall tread upon them (which is a thing not only calamitous, but extremely ignominious) as they did upon the Popiſh Clergy: and the Devil ſhall thank them when he hath them in hell, for ſending him ſo many ſouls: as Matthew Paris telleth us he did thoſe in the days of Hildebrand. As for themſelves, it grew into a Proverb, Pavimentum inferni raſis ſacrificulorum verticibus, & magnatum galeis ſtratum eſſe, That hell was paved with the ſhaven crowns of Prieſts, and great mens head-pieces. Be as the ſtars at leaſt; which are ſaid to affect theſe inferiour bodies, by their influence, motion, and light. So good Miniſters (as fixed ſtars in the Churches firmament) by the influence of their lips feed; by the regular motion of their lives confirm; and by the light of both, enlighten many. And with ſuch orient ſtars this Church of ours (bleſſed be God) like a bright sky in a clear evening, ſparkleth and is beſpangled, though not in every part, yet in every zone and quarter of it.

A City that is ſet on a hill cannot be hid] As that City that's mounted on ſeven hills, Roma Radix Omnium Malorum; and cannot be hid, but is apparently diſcerned and diſcryed to be that great City Babylon: So Auguſtine and other writers call it: ſo Bellarmine and Ribera the Jeſuites yield it. Joannes de Columna in his Mare hiſtoriarum telleth us that Otho the Emperour was once in a mind to make Rome the ſeat of his Empire, as of old it had been. And having built a ſtately Palace there, where fomerly had ſtood the Palace of Julian the Apoſtate (the Romans being much againſt it) he gave over the work. Theophanes, Zonaras and Cedrenus report the like of Conſtans, nephew to Heraclius, 340 years before Otho. Now that theſe and the like attempts took not effect, Genebrard ſaith it was a ſpecial providence of God, to the end that the Kingdom of the Church foretold by Daniel, might have Rome for its ſeat. If he had ſaid, the Kingdom of Antichriſt foretold by S. Paul, and likewiſe by John the Divine, he had divined aright. (But to return from whence we are digreſſed) A Miniſter, whiles he lived a private perſon, ſtood in the croud, as it were: but no ſooner entred into his office, then he is ſet upon the ſtage: all eyes are upon him, as they were upon Saul, who was higher by head and ſhoulders then the reſt of the people. In him (as in a picture in a glaſs-window) every little blemiſh will be ſoon ſeen: And (as in the celeſtial bodies) every ſmall aberration will be quickly noted and noticed. Now therefore as the tree of life was ſweet to the taſte, and fair to the eye; and as in Abſolom there was no blemiſh, from head to foot: ſo ſhould it be with Gods Miniſters. Singular holineſs is required of ſuch; as thoſe that quarter arms with the Lord Chriſt, whom they ſerve in the Goſpel. The Prieſts of the Law were to be neither deformed nor defective. And the Ministers of the Gospel (for the word, Priest, is never used for such, by the Apostles, no not by the most ancient Fathers, as Bellarmine himself confesseth) must be τύποι stamps and paterns to the believers in word and conversation; every thing in them is eminent and exemplary. The world (though unjustly) looks for Angelical perfection in them: and as the least deviation in a star is soon noted, so is it in such. Thrice happy he, that (with Samuel, Daniel, Paul, and others) can be acquitted and approved by himself in private; in publike by others; in both, by God, that can by his spotless conversation slaughter envy, stop an open mouth and draw testimony, if not from the mouthes, yet from the consciences of the adversaries, of his integrity and uprightness. Mr. Bradford the Martyr was had in so great reverence and admiration with all good men, that a multitude, which never knew him but by fame, greatly lamented his death: yea, and a number also of Papists themselves wished heartily his life. And of Mr Bucer it is reported, that he brought all men into such admiration of him, that neither his friends could sufficiently praise him, nor his enemies in any point find fault with his singular life, and sincere doctrine. Bishop Hoopers life was so good, that no kind of slander (although divers went about to reprove it) could fasten any fault upon him. And the mans life (saith Erasmus, concerning Luther, whom he greatly loved not) is approved of all men; neither is this any small prejudice to his enemies, that they can tax him for nothing.

Ver. 15. Neither do men light a candle, to put it under a bushel, &c.] Nor doth God set up a Minister, and so light a link or torch (as the word here signifieth) amongst a people, but for the diffusing of the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ. The heavenly bodies illighten not their own orbs only, but send forth their beams far and near. The grace of God (that is, the doctrine of Grace) that bringeth salvation hath appeared (or shone forth, as a candle on a candlestick; or as a beacon on a hill) Teaching us to deny ungodliness, &c. The Priests lips must not only preserve knowledge, but also present it to the people, who shall seek it at his mouth. And John Baptist (that burning and shining light) was to give the knowledge of salvation, not by way of infusion (for so God only) but by way of instruction. The same word (in the holy tongue) that signifieth to understand, signifieth also to instruct and to prosper. They that teach others what they know themselves (as Abraham did those of his familiarity and family) shall know more of Gods mind, yea they shall be (as Abraham was) both of his Court and Councel. But the Lord likes not such empty vines, as (with Ephraim) bear fruit to themselves; such idle servants as thrust their hands into their bosoms, dig their talents into the earth, hide their candles under a bed or bushel; living and lording it as if their lips were their own; barrelling and hoarding up their gifts, as rich cormorants do their corn; refusing to give down their milk, as curst kine; or resolving to speak no more then what may breed applause and admiration of their worth and wisdom, as proud self-seekers. The manifestation of the spirit was given to profit withal; And the Philippians were all partakers (or partners) of S. Pauls grace; which he elsewhere calleth the gift bestowed on us, for many, that we may serve one another in love; yea make our selves servants to all, that we may edifie some. Certainly the gifts of such shall not perish in the use, or be the worse for wearing, but the better and brighter; as the torch by tapping: they shall grow in their hands, as the loaves in our Saviours, as the widows oyl, as that great mountain of salt in Spain, de quo quantum demas, tantum accrescit, which the more you take from it, the more it encreaseth: Or lastly, as the fountains or wells, which, by much drawing, are made better and sweeter, as S. Basil observeth, and common experience confirmeth.

And it giveth light to all that are in the house.] He that alloweth his servant a great candle, or two or three lesser lights, looks for more work. God sets up his Ministers, as candles on the candlestick of his Church, to waste themselves (wax and week) for the lighting of men into life eternal. Let them therefore see to it, that they work hard, while the light lasteth, lest their candlestick be removed, lest the night surprize them on the sudden, when none can work; lest they pay dear for those precious graces of his Spirit, in his faithful Ministers, spent, or rather spilt upon them: lest God cause the sun to go down at noon, and darken the earth in the clear day, Amos 8. 9.

friend in a conſpicuous place, that it may appear we rejoyce in it, as an ornament to us: ſo ſhould we the image of Chriſt and his graces. And as pearls (though formed and found in the water,) are like the heavens in clearneſs; ſo ſhould all, but eſpecially Miniſters: Their faces ſhould ſhine, as Moſes when he came from the Mount: their feet ſhould be beautiful, Rom. 10.15. their mouthes (as heaven in the Revelation) ſhould never open, but ſome great matter ſhould follow; their lives ſhould be (as one ſpeaketh of Joſephs life) coelum quoddam luce diſſimis virtutum ſtellis exornatum, a very heaven ſparkling with variety of vertues, as with ſo many bright ſtars. The High-Prieſt of the Law came forth to the people, in habit more like a God then a man. And Alexander the great took him for no leſs, but fell at his feet, meeting him upon his way to Jeruſalem. There are that hold, that by his linnens, he was taught purity; by his girdle, diſcretion; by his embroidered coat, heavenly converſation; by his golden bells, ſound doctrine; by his pomegranates, fruitfulneſs in good works; by his ſhoulder-pieces, patience in bearing other mens infirmities; by his breaſt-plate, continual eare of the Church; by his mitre, a right intention; and by the golden-plate upon it, a bold and wiſe profeſſion of Holineſs to the Lord. The Apoſtle alſo is exact, in forming a Miniſter of the Goſpel: For he muſt be 1. Blameleſs, ſuch as againſt whom no juſt exception can be laid. 2. Vigilant, pale and wan again with watching and working. 3. Sober, or temperate, one that can contain his paſſions, maſter his own heart, and keep a mean. 4. Modeſt, neat and comely in his bodily attire, neither curious nor careleſs thereof, but venerable in all his behaviour; and one that keepeth a fit decorum in all things. 5. Hoſpital and harberous. Quicquid habent Clerici, pauperum eſt, ſaith Hierome. 6. Able and apt to teach, as Biſhop Ridley, D. Taylor, and Mr. Bradford, who preached every Sunday and Holy-day ordinarily; and as Chryſoſtom, Origen, and ſome others, who preached every day in the week. 7. Not given to wine, no Ale-ſtake, as thoſe drunken Prieſts, the two ſons of Aaron, who dyed by the fire of God, for coming before him with ſtrange fire. 8. No ſtriker, neither with hand nor tongue, to the juſt grief or diſgrace of any. 9. Not greedy of filthy lucre, ſo as to get gain by evil arts, but honeſt, plain-dealing, and (as it follows in the Text) patient, or æquanimous, eaſily parting with his right for peace-ſake, and ever preferring equity before extremity of Law. 10. Not a brawler, or common barretter, a wrangler, as Iſmael. 11. Not covetous, not doting on his wealth, or truſting to his wedge. Not without money, but without the love of money. The Apoſtle here diſtinguiſheth, greedy of filthy lucre, which is in getting, from covetouſneſs, which conſiſts in pinching and ſaving. 12. One that ruleth well in his own houſe, &c. For the childrens faults reflect upon the parents, and the ſervants ſin is the maſters ſhame. Beſides, every man is that in Religion, that he is relativoly; and ſo much true goodneſs he hath, as he ſheweth at home. 13. Not a novice, a young Scholar, rude and ungrounded; or a tender young plant in Chriſtianity (as the word ſignifieth) that may be bent any way, but a well-grown oak, ſtable and ſteddy. 14. Laſtly, he muſt have a good report of them which are without; which he cannot but have, if qualified, as aboveſaid. The ſame God which did at firſt put an awe of man in the fierceſt creatures, hath ſtampt in the cruelleſt hearts an awful reſpect to his faithful Miniſters: ſo as even they that hate them, cannot chuſe but honour them, as Saul did Samuel; Darius Daniel; Nebuchadnezzar the three Worthies. Natural conſcience cannot but ſtoop and do homage to Gods image fairly ſtampt upon the natures and works of his people. So that when men ſee in ſuch that which is above the ordinary ſtrain, and their own expectation, their hearts ake within them many times; and they ſtand much amazed at the height of their ſpirits, and the majeſtie that ſhines in their faces. Either they are convinced, as Nebuchadnezzar, Darius and Dioclesian (who laid down the Empire, out of a deep diſcontent and diſpair of ever conquering the conſtancy of Chriſtians by any bloody perſecution:) or (which is better) they are converted, and ſeeing ſuch good works, they glorifie God our heavenly father, as Juſtine Martyr, who confeſſeth of himſelf, that by beholding the Chriſtians piety in life and patience in death, he gathered their doctrine to be the truth, and glorified God in the day of his viſitation. For there is no Chriſtian (ſaith Athanagoras in his Apology to the Heathens) that is not good, unleſs he be an hypocrite, and a pretender only to Religion. Verè magnus eſt Deus Chriſtianorum, ſaid one Calocerius a Heathen, beholding the ſufferings of the Primitive Martyrs. Verse 17. Think not that I am come to destroy the Law] As the Pharisees slandered him, only to bring him into hatred with the people. And, as to this day, they maliciously traduce him in their writings. Rabbi Maimonides in his Misnah, hath a whole Chapter concerning the punishment of the false Prophet, that teacheth that he came to destroy the Law: Calumniare audacter: aliquid saltem adhærebit, said Machiavel. A depraver (saith Plato) is mus nominis, a devil, saith Paul. It is the property of defamations, to leave a kind of lower estimation, many times, even where they are not believed.

καταλῦσαι. Gal. 3.

I am not come to destroy] Gr. to loose, dissolve, or untye the Law, as those Rebels, Psal. 2. 3. sought to do, but with ill success. For it tyeth and hampereth men with an Aut faciendum, aut patiendum, either you must have the direction of the Law, or the correction; either do it, or dye for it. Thus the Law is a Schoolmaster, and such a one, as that, that Livy and Florus speak of in Italy, that brought forth his Scholars to Hannibal; who had he not been more merciful then otherwise, they had all perished. The comfort is, that it is a Schoolmaster to Christ, who became bond to the Law to redeem us, that were under the Law, from the rigour, bondage, irritation and condemnation thereof. So that the use that now we have of it, is only to be as Pauls sisters son, to shew us our danger, and to send us to the chief Captain of our salvation, who came not to destroy the Law, but to fulfil it.

πληρῶσαι. John 17. 4.

But to fulfil it] To compleat and accomplish it, for he fulfilled all righteousness, and finished the work that was given him to do. A new Commandment also gave he unto us, that we love one another; which love is the complement of the Law, and the supplement of the Gospel. Besides, Christ is the end of the Law to every one that believeth, and commandeth us no more, then he causeth us to do; yea, he doth all his works in us and for us, saith the Church, Isa. 26. 12. Thus Christ still fulfils the Law in his people; into whose hearts he putteth a disposition answerable to the outward Law in all things; as in the wax is the same impression that was upon the seal. This is called the Law of the mind, Rom. 7. and answereth the Law of God without, as lead answers the mould, as tally answereth tally, as Indenture, Indenture, Heb. 8. 8, 9, 10. with 2 Cor. 3. 2, 3. Rom. 6. 17.

Till heaven and earth pass] And pass they must: The visible heavens being defiled with our sins (that are even glued unto them, as Babylons sins are said to be, Rev. 18. 5.) shall be purged with the fire of the last day, as the vessels of the Sanctuary were, that held the sin-offering. The earth also, and all the works that are therein shall be burnt up. And this the Heathens had heard of, and hammered at, that the world should at length be consumed with fire as, Ovid hath it, and Lucretius disputeth it according to the natural causes. But Ludolfus of the life of Christ doth better; when he telleth us, that of those two destructions of the world, the former was by water, for the heat of their lust, and the later shall be by fire, for the coldness of their love.

Or one tittle] Not a hair-ſtroke, an accent on the top of an Hebrew Letter, the bending or bowing thereof, as a little bit on the top of a horn. The Maſorites have ſummed up all the Letters in the Bible, to ſhew that one hair of that ſacred head is not periſhed.

Shall in no wiſe paſs from the Law.] The ceremonial Law was a ſhadow of good things to come, ſaith the Apoſtle: This good thing was Chriſt. When the Sun is behind, the ſhadow is before; when the Sun is before, the ſhadow is behind. So was it in Chriſt, to them of old (ſaith one.) This Sun was behind, and therefore the Law or ſhadow was before. To us under the Goſpel, the Sun is before, and ſo now the ceremonies of the Law (thoſe ſhadows) are behind, yea vaniſhed away. Before the paſſion of Chriſt (wherein they all determined) the ceremonies of the Law were neither dead nor deadly, ſaith Aquinas. After the paſſion, till ſuch time as the Goſpel was preached up and down by the Apoſtles, though dead, yet (for the time) they were not deadly. But ſince that, they are not only dead, but deadly to them that uſe them, as the Jews to this day. As for the Moral Law, it is eternal, and abideth for ever in heaven, ſaith David. And albeit ſome ſpecial duties of certain Commandments ſhall ceaſe when we come to heaven; yet the ſubſtance of every one remaineth. We live by the ſame Law (in effect) as the Saints above do: and do Gods will on earth, as they in heaven. God himſelf cannot diſpenſe with the breach of thoſe laws that be moral in themſelves (becauſe he hateth ſin by nature, not by precept only) ſuch are all the ten Commandments but the fourth. The fourth Commandment (ſay Divines) is moral by precept, not by nature; and ſo, the Lord of the Sabbath may diſpenſe with the literal breach of the Sabbath. Of all the moral Law, it is the opinion of ſome of our beſt Divines, that ſince the coming of Chriſt it bindeth us not, out of any fore-going inſtitution, as delivered to Moſes in the mount; but as it is agreeable to the Law of Nature, which is common to Jews and Gentiles; and as it was explained and confirmed by our Saviour Chriſt in the Goſpel. To conclude, the miniſterials of this Law ſhall paſs away, together with this life: the ſubſtantials ſhall paſs into our glorified natures, and ſhine therein, as in a mirror for ever. Verſe 19. Whoſoever therefore ſhall break one of theſe leaſt Commandments] So the Phariſees called and counted theſe weightier things of the Law, in compariſon of their tythings, Matth. 23. 23. and traditions, Matth. 15. 3. But albeit ſome Commandments are greater then ſome, as thoſe of the firſt table (in meet compariſon) then thoſe of the ſecond; yet that Phariſaical diminution of Commandments, that idle diſtinction of ſins into gnats and camels, venial and mortal, motes and mountains, is by no means to be admitted. The leaſt ſin is contrary to Charity, as the leaſt drop of water is to fire. The leaſt miſſing of the mark is an errour, as well as the greateſt; and both alike for kind, though not for degrees. Hence leſſer ſins are reproached by the name of the greater: Malice is called murther; luſtful looks, adultery; ſitting at Idolatrous feaſts (though without all intent of worſhip) Idolatry. See Job 31.27,28. Diſobedience in never ſo ſmall a matter (as eating a forbidden apple, gathering a few ſticks on the Sabbath-day, looking into, or touching the Ark) hath been ſeverely puniſhed. Though the matter ſeem ſmall, yet thy malice and preſumption is great, that wilt in ſo ſmall a thing incur the Lords ſo high diſpleaſure. What could be a leſs Commandment then to abſtain from blood? yet is their obedience herein urged with many words, and that with this reaſon, as ever they will have God to do any thing for them or theirs. The whole Law is (ſay the Schoolmen) but one copulative. Any condition not obſerved, forfeits the whole leaſe; and any Commandment not obeyed, ſubjects a man to the curſe. And as ſome one good action hath bleſſedneſs aſcribed and aſſured to it, as peace-making, Matth. 5.9. ſo he that ſhall keep the whole Law, and yet offend in one point, is guilty of all. When ſome of the Iſraelites had broken the fourth Commandment, God challengeth them for all, Exod. 16.28. Where then will they appear that plead for this Zoar, for that Rimmon? a merry lye, a petty oath, an idle errand on the Lords day, &c. the end. Jonathan had no sooner tasted of the honey with the tip of his rod only, but his head was forfeited. There is a deceitfulness in sin, a lye in these vanities; give them an inch, they'l take an ell. Let the Serpent but get in his head, he will shortly wind in his whole body. He plays no small game, but meaneth us much hurt, how modest soever he seemeth to be. It is no less then the Kingdom that he seeketh, by his maidenly insinuations, as Adoniah. As therefore we must submit to God, so we must resist the devil, without expostulation, 1 Pet. 5. 7. throw water on the fire of temptation, though but to some smaller sin, and stamp on it too. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth, saith S. James. A little poyson in a cup, a little leak in a ship, or breach in a wall may ruine all. A little wound at the heart, and a little sin in the soul may hide Gods face from us, as a cloud. Therefore as the Prophet, when a cloud as big as a mans hand only appeared, knew that the whole heaven would be over-covered, and willed the King to betake himself to his chariot; so let us to our shelter, for a company comes, as she said, when she bore her son Gad. After Jonathan and his Armour-bearer came the whole host; and when Dalilah had prevailed, came the Lords of the Philistims. He that is fallen from the top of a ladder, cannot stop at the second round. Every sin hardneth the heart, and gradually disposeth it to greater offences: as lesser wedges make way for bigger. After Ahaz had made his wicked Altar, and offered on it, he brought it into the Temple; first setting it on the brazen Altar, afterwards bringing it into the house, and then lastly, setting it on the North-side of Gods Altar: Withstand sin therefore at first, and live by Solomons rule, Give not water passage, no not a little. Silence sin, as our Saviour did the Devil, and suffer it not to sollicite thee. If it be importunate, answer it not a word, as Hezekiah would not Rabshakeh; or give it a short and sharp answer, yea the blew eye, that S. Paul did. This shall be no grief unto thee hereafter, nor offence of heart, as she told David; the contrary may. It repented S. Austine of his very excuses made to his Parents, being a child, and to his School-master, being a boy. He retracts his ironies, because they had the appearance of a lye, because they looked ill-favouredly. B. Ridley repents of his playing at Chess, as wasting too much time. Bradford bewaileth his dulness and unthankfulness. Davids heart smote him for cutting the lap of Sauls coat only; and that for none other intent, then to clear his own innocency; that in which Saul commended him for his moderation. There are some that would shrink up sin into a narrow scantling, and bring it to this, if they could, that none do evil, but they that are in Goals. But David approves his sincerity by his respect to all Gods Commandments, and hath this commendation, that he did all the wils of God. Solomon also bids, count nothing little that God commandeth, but keep Gods precepts as the sight of the eye. Those venturous spirits, that dare live in any known sin, aspire not to immortality, Phil. 2. 12. they shall be least, that is, nothing at all in the Kingdom of heaven.

And teacheth men so.] As the Pharisees did, and all the old and modern Heresiarches. In the year 1559. it was maintained by one David George (that arch Heretick) that good works were pernicious and destructory to the soul. The Anabaptists and Socinians have broached many doctrines of Devils, not fit to be once named amongst Christians. The Pneumatomachi of old, set forth a base book of the Trinity, under S. Cyprians name, and sold it at a very cheap rate, that the poorest might be able to reach it and read it, as Ruffinus complaineth. In those Primitive times, those capital heresies (concerning the Trinity, and Christs incarnation) were so generally held, that it was a witty thing then, to be a right believer, as Erasmus phraseth it. All the world in a manner was turned Arian, as S. Hierom hath it. Orosius telleth us, that the Goths being desirous to be instructed in the Christian Religion, requested of Valens the Emperour to send them some to preach the faith unto them. He being himself an Arian, sent them Arian Doctors, who set up that heresie amongst them. By the just judgement of God therefore, the same Valens being overthrown in battel by the Goths, was also burnt by them in a poor cottage, whether he had fled for shelter. Hereticks have an art of Pythanology, whereby they cunningly insinuate into mens affections, and many times perswade before they teach, as it is said of the Valentinians. It was therefore well and wisely done of Placilla the Empress, when her husband Theodosius senior desired to confer with Eunomius, she earnestly dissuaded him; lest being perverted by his speeches, he might fall into his heresie.

Shall be leaſt in the Kingdom of heaven] That is, nothing at all there; as *Matth.*20. 16. Either of theſe two ſins here mentioned, exclude out of heaven; how much more both? If ſingle ſinners that break Gods Commandments, and no more, ſhall be damned, thoſe that teach men ſo, ſhall be double damned: If God will be avenged on the former ſeven-fold, ſurely he will on the latter, ſeventy-fold ſeven-fold. When the Beaſt, and the Kings of the earth, and their armies ſhall be gathered together (toward the end of the world) to make war againſt Chriſt, the multitude ſhall be ſlain with the ſword, the poor ſeduced people, that were carried along, many of them (as thoſe two hundred that followed Abſolom out of Jeruſalem) in the ſimplicity of their hearts, and underſtood not the matter, ſhall have an eaſier judgement. But the Beaſt was taken, and the falſe Prophet, and were both caſt alive (not ſlain with the ſword, and ſo caſt to the infernal vultures to be devoured by them, as a prey; but) caſt alive, that they may feel thoſe moſt exquiſite pains, into a lake of fire burning with brimſtone, wherewith they are encompaſſed, as fiſh, caſt into a pond, are with water. 2 Sam.15. 11. Diriſſimum exitii genus, quo hiato præ reliquis devorabuntur. Parcus in loc. Rev.19.20,21

But whoſoever ſhall do, and teach them,] Firſt do, and thereby prove what that good, holy and acceptable will of God is; and then teach others what himſelf hath felt and found good by experience. Come, and I will tell you what God hath done for my ſoul. Come, children, hearken unto me, I will teach you the fear of the Lord. I will inſtruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou ſhalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye. I will teach tranſgreſſors thy ways, and ſinners ſhall be converted unto thee. Charity is no churl; but cryes, I would to God that all that hear me this day, were as I am. Andrew calleth Simon; and Philip Nathaniel; the Samariteſs, her neighbours; and thoſe good ſouls, one another, *Hoſ.*6.1. The love of Chriſt conſtrained the Apoſtles; they could not but ſpeak the things they had heard and felt; as little as the holy Virgin could conceal the joy ſhe had conceived upon the conception of God her Saviour. They could not but be as buſie in building ſtair-caſes for heaven, as theſe Phariſees were in digging deſcents to hell. Blind guides they were of the blind, and both fell into the ditch, but the guides fell undermoſt. By corrupt Teachers Satan catcheth men, as a cunning fiſher by one fiſh catcheth another, that he may feed upon both. Here they corrupted the Law by their falſe gloſſes, as our Saviour ſets forth. But where they kept Moſes chair warm, ſate cloſe and ſaid ſooth; All that they bid you obſerve, that obſerve and do, ſaith he; for a bad man may cry a good commodity, and a ſtinking breath ſound a trumpet with great commendation. Balaam, Satans Spel man, may be (for the time) Chriſts Spoke-man, and preach profitably to others, though himſelf be a caſt-away; as water, when it hath cleanſed other things, is caſt into the ſink. Hear ſuch therefore, ſaith our Saviour, but do not after their works, for they ſay and do not: they ſpeak by the talent, but work by the ounce; their tongues are bigger then their hands; their lives give the lye to their lips; they ſhun the way themſelves (with that Prieſt and Levite) which they ſhewed to others, when mercy ſhould be ſhewed to the wounded man: Out of their own mouthes therefore will God condemn them; and it is a fearful thing to fall into the puniſhing hands of the living God. As for thoſe burning and ſhining lights, that have Urim and Thummim, bells and pomegranates, trumpets of ſound doctrine in one hand, and lamps of good life in the other, as Gideons Souldiers; they ſhall be great in the Kingdom of heaven. He that holdeth them in his right hand here, ſhall ſet them at his right hand hereafter, and give them to hear, as Ezekiel did, the noiſe of a great ruſhing, ſaying, Bleſſed be the glory of the Lord. Mat.23.2,3. 1 Cor.5. ult. Odi homines ignavi operâ, philoſophi ſententiâ. Ennius. They were the moſt exact and accurate ſect of that Religion, as S. Paul (who once was one of them) beareth them witneſs. And ſo carried away the heart of the people, that there was no holy man that was not termed a Phariſee: and therefore among the ſeven kinds of Phariſees in their Talmud (whereof one ſort was Phariſæus. Quid debeo facere, & faciam illud, ſuch a one was he, Luke 18. 18.) they make Abraham a Phariſee of Love, Job a Phariſee of fear, &c. Yea, it was commonly conceited among the Jews, that if but two of all the world were to go to heaven, the one ſhould be a Scribe, and the other a Phariſee. selves, may be seen in that proud Pharisee, Luke 18. Like unto whom, how many civil Justiciaries are there amongst us? who if they can keep their Church, give an alms, bow their knee, say their prayers, pay their tythes, and once a year receive the Sacrament (it matters not how corrupt hearts, how filthy tongues, how false hands they bear) can thank God for their good estate to Godward, and take up their seats, as it were, in heaven aforehand. But our Saviour says nay to it in this text; yea, sets a double bolt upon heaven gates, to keep out such: And when they shall come knocking and bouncing, with Lord, Lord, open unto us, he shall say, Discedite, Depart ye; or as once he did to their fellow-Pharisees, ye are they which justified your selves before men, but God knew your hearts. And you shall now know (to your small comfort) that that which is highly esteemed amongst men, is abomination in the sight of God. Civility rested in, is but a beautiful abomination, a smooth way to hell. The world highly applauds it, because somewhat better then outragious wickedness; as a cab of Doves-dung was sold in Samaria's famine at a very dear rate, &c.

οὐμὴ εἰσέλθητε. Ye shall not enter. Matth. 7. Luke 16. 15.

Verse 11. Ye have heard that it was said by them of old] Antiquity 'tis venerable: and of witnesses, Aristotle witnesseth, that the more ancient they are, the more to be credited, as less corrupt. New things are vain things, saith the Greek proverb. And the Historian condemneth his Countrey-men, as despisers of old customs, and carried after new. But as old age is a crown, if it be found in the way of righteousness, Prov. 16. 31. and not otherwise: so may it be said of these Kadmônim or the old Rabbins, later then Ezra, whom our Saviour here confuteth. Much might have been attributed to their authority, had they not rested upon the bare letter of the Law, and wrested it sometimes to another meaning. Antiquity disjoyned from verity, is but filthy hoariness; and deserveth no more reverence then an old leacher, which is so much the more odious, because old. And as Manna, the longer it was kept against the command of God the more it stank; so do errors and enormities. Laban pretendeth antiquity for his God, in his oath to Jacob, The God of Abraham, saith he, and the God of Nahor, the God of their father judge between us. But Jacob sware by the fear of his Father Isaac. He riseth not higher then his father, and yet doubts not, but he worshipped God aright. Its no good rule to say, Wee'l be of the same Religion with our forefathers, unless we can approve it right by the holy Scriptures. Plus valet malum inolitum quam bonum insolitum: And that, Tyrannus, trium literarum mos, too often carries it against truth: The image that fell down from Jupiter (for which there was so much ado at Ephesus, Acts 19.) is said by the Town-Clerk, to be such as could not be spoken against with any reason. And why? because it was wonderful ancient (as Pliny telleth us.) For whereas the Temple of Diana had been seven several times re-edified, this image was never changed; and thence grew the so great superstition, by the covetousness of the Priests: As likewise the Ancilia among the Romans; and Pessinuntium among the Asians. But what saith a noble Writer, Antiquity must have no more authority then what it can maintain. Did not our predecessors hold the torrid Zone inhabitable? did they not confine the world in the Ark of Europe, Asia, and Africa, till Noahs Dove Columbus discovered land? &c.

Thou shalt not kill: and whosoever killeth shall be in danger of Judgement] That is, it shall be questioned whether it be fit he be put to death or not. Thus as Eve dallied with the command, saying, Ye shall not eat thereof, lest ye dye (when God had said, Ye shall surely dye, whensoever ye eat) and so fell into the Devils danger. In like sort, these Jew-Doctors had corrupted the very letter of the Law, and made that doubtful and questionable, which God had plainly and peremptorily pronounced to be present death. Before the flood indeed, some do guess and gather out of Gen. 9. that the punishment of murther, and such like hainous offences was only excommunication from the holy assemblies, and exclusion out of their fathers families, as Cain was cast out from the presence of the Lord; that is, from his fathers house, where God was sincerely served. Sure it is, that no sooner was the world repaired, then this Law was established, Who so sheddeth mans blood, by man shall his blood be shed; and this reason is rendred, for in the image of God made he him. That image (its true) is by the fall defaced and abolished; yet are there some reliques thereof still abiding, which God will not have destroyed. then ſhould the murtherer be deſtroyed, ſith he alſo is made in the image of God? The anſwer is eaſie, becauſe the murtherer hath deſtroyed the image of God in his neighbour, and turned himſelf into the image of the Devil. Beſides, God hath indiſpenſably and peremptorily commanded it: He that ſheddeth the blood of any perſon, haſteneth to the grave, let no man hinder him. Say he ſcape the ſtroke of humane juſtice, yet the Barbarians could ſay (as of Paul, whom they took for a murtherer) that divine vengeance will not ſuffer him to live; Bloody and deceitful men ſhall not live out half their days. Uſually either God executeth them with his own immediate hand, as might be eaſie to inſtance in many bloody perſecutors and others; or he maketh them their own deathſ-men, as Pilate: or ſetteth ſome other awork to do it for them. As (among other examples of Gods dealing in this kind) Anno 1586. Walſh Biſhop of Oſſerey in Ireland, a man of honeſt life, with his two ſervants, were ſtabbed to death by one Dulland an Iriſh old Souldier, whileſt he gravely admoniſhed him of his foul adulteries; and the wicked murtherer eſcaped away, who had now committed 45 murthers with his own hand. At length, revenge purſuing him, he was by another bloody fellow Donald Spaman, ſhortly after ſlain himſelf, and his head preſented to the Lord Deputy. Neither can I here omit (that which I had almoſt forgotten) the juſt hand of God upon that villanous parricide Alphonſus Diazius the Spaniard, who (after he had, like another Cain, killed his own natural brother John Diazius, meerly becauſe he had renounced Popery, and became a profeſſor of the Reformed Religion, and was not only not puniſhed, but highly commended of the Romaniſts for his heroical atchievements) deſperately hang'd himſelf at Trent, upon the neck of his own mule, being haunted and hunted by the furies of his own conſcience.

Verſe 22. But I ſay unto you.] This is his teaching with authority, and not as the Scribes. To their falſe gloſſes he oppoſeth his own ſole and ſingle authority. He delivers himſelf like a Law-giver: but I ſay unto you, and you ſhall take it on my bare word, without any further pawn or pledge. He that is αὐτόπιστος, is likewiſe αὐτόπιστος. The Phariſees Phylacteries were not ſo broad, but their expoſitions of the Law were as narrow; which therefore our Saviour letteth out and rectifieth, by taking away their viperine gloſſes that did eat out the bowels of the text: and here obſerve with me, that Chriſt taketh not upon him to be a new Law-giver, but to be an Interpreter of the old Law by Moſes. He maketh not new Commands or Counſels (as Popiſh Expoſitors dream) but throws away all that earth that the Philiſtims had tumbled into that ſpring.

That whoſoever is angry with his brother without a cauſe] Raſhly giving way to unruly paſſion, and not taking reaſon into counſel, as the word here ſignifieth. This is a degree of murther that the Phariſees dreamt not of, and a mortal ſin, though the Papiſts conclude it venial from this very text, becauſe not threatned (as calling fool) with hell-fire. But judgement, counſel, and Gehenna, note not here different puniſhments, but only divers degrees of the damnation of hell, which is the juſt hire of the leaſt ſin. There is a lawful anger, as that of our Saviour, Mark 3. 5. & Mat. 16. 22. And we are bid be angry, and ſin not. Now he that would be angry, and not ſin, muſt (for the matter) be angry at nothing but at ſin, and that not ſo much as it is an injury to us, as an offence to God. Next, for the meaſure, he muſt not be ſo tranſported with anger, as to be unfitted and indiſpoſed thereby, either for prayer to God, or pitty to men. Moſes was very angry at the ſight of the golden Calf, yet could pray. Our Saviour was heartily angry at the Phariſees, but withall grieved at the hardneſs of their hearts. Jonas on the other ſide, through anger, thought to have prayed, but fell into a brawl with God, quarrel'd him for his kindneſs; and had little pitty on ſo many poor Nineviteſ; though afterwards he yielded to better reaſon, and ſhewed his ſubmiſſion, by laying his hand upon his mouth, and ſaying no more. Anger is a tender vertue (ſaith one) and ſuch as, by reaſon of our unskilfulneſs, may be eaſily corrupted and made dangerous. The wrath of man (uſually) worketh not the righteouſneſs of God: nay it lets in the Devil, that old man-ſlayer, and is the murther of the heart (as here) making way to the murther of the tongue and hand. It is the match to receive the fire of contention, and the bellows to blow it up. Prov. 15. 18. Now where ſtrife is, there is confuſion, and every evil work, not murther excepted.

thou wilt fret thy self to do evil. And if thou hast done evil (or plaid the fool, as others read it) saith Agur, in lifting up thy self (and puffing against thy brother, against whom in thine anger thou hast devised some mischief) if thou hast thought evil against him, yet lay thy hand upon thy mouth: say not so much as Racha, utter not any so much as an inarticulate voyce, snuff not, snort not, spet not, as he Deut. 25 9. stamp not with clapping of the hands, as Balac, say not so much as fie, to thine offending brother, saith Theophylact; Thou him not, saith Chrysostome; call him not silly or shallow, one that wants brains, saith Irenæus, qui expuit cerebrum, as the word signifieth, if it signifie any thing. Surely (saith Agur, setting forth the reason of his former precept by a double similitude) the churning of milk bringeth forth butter, and the wringing of the nose bringeth forth blood: so the forcing of wrath (the giving it its forth and full scope, and not suppressing it when it first begins to boil in a mans breast) bringeth forth strife. Let therefore the first heat of passion settle, and that darkness pass, that hath clouded the mind. Ut fragilis glacies, occidat ira morâ. Walk into the garden with Ahashuerosh, into the field with Jonathan, when his father had provoked him to wrath: (against the Apostles precept.) Divert to some other company, place, business, about something thou canst be most earnest at. Give not place to wrath, no not a little; set God before thy tumultuating passions, and so silence them, else worse will follow. Quid tu diabole nequissime, ad hanc civitatem perturbandam accessisti? dicit Episcopus Genivensis. Gul. Farello. In Epist. ad Calvin.

But whosoever shall say, Thou fool, &c.] How much more, Rogue, Bastard, Devil, and other such foul aad opprobrious terms, not fit to be mentioned among Saints, yet common with many such as would he counted so. What makest thou here, thou arch-devil, troubling our City? said the Bishop of Geneva to Farellus, seeking to set up the Reformed Religion. And a Spanish Jesuit disputing with us about the Eucharist (saith Beza) called us vulpes, serpentes & simias, foxes, serpents and jackanapeses. Contrarily, it is observed of Archbishop Cranmer, that he never raged so far with any of his housholds-servants, as once to call the meanest of them varlet or knave in anger, much less to reprove a stranger with any reproachful word; least of all did he deal blows among them, as B. Bonner: who in his visitation, because the bells rung not at his coming into Hadham, nor the Church was dressed up as it should, called Dr. Bricket knave and heretick; and therewithal, whether thrusting or striking at him, so it was, that he gave Sir Thomas Josselin Knight (who then stood next to the Bishop) a good flewet upon the upper part of the neck, even under his ear; whereat he was somewhat astonied at the suddenness of the quarrel for that time. At last he spake and said, What meaneth your Lordship? have you been trained up in Will. Sommers his School, to strike him who standeth next you? The Bishop still in a rage, either heard not, or would not hear. When Mr. Fecknam would have excused him by his long imprisonment in the Marshalsey, whereby he was grown testy, &c. he replyed merrily, So it seems, Mr. Fecknam; for now that he is come forth of the Marshalsey, he is ready to go to Bedlam. Our Saviour here threatneth a worse place, tormenting Tophet, the Gehenna of fire, to that unruly evil, the tongue, that being set on fire of hell, fetcheth words as far as hell, to set on fire the whole course of nature.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1692.

James 3. 6.

Shall be in danger of hell fire] Gehenna, or the valley of Hinnom, was reputed a contemptible place, without the City, in the which they burnt (by means of a fire continually kept there) the carcases, filth and garbage of the City, so that by the fire of Gehenna here is intimated both the restless torments of hell (sc. by the bitter cryes and ejulations of poor infants there burnt to Moloch) and also the perpetuity and endlesness of them. The Idol Moloch or Saturn, was represented by a man-like brazen body, with the head of a Calf. The children offered, were inclosed within the arms of this Idol; and as the fire increased about it, the sacrifice with the noise of drums and other instruments filled the air, that the pitiful cryes of the children might not be heard.

Verse 23. Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the Altar] To Anger, our Saviour here opposeth Charity, which suffereth long, and is kind. Charity envieth not, nor is rash, &c. But beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, indureth all things. Strangers we must love as our selves, Luke 10. 27, 28. but brethren, as Christ loved us, with a preventing constant love, John 15. 15. notwithstanding provocations to the contrary.

That thy brother hath ought against thee] As justly offended by thee: See the like phrase, Luke 7.40. Rev. 2.4. If either thou have given offence carelesly, or taken offence causeleſly. And two flints may as soon smite together, and not fire come out, as people converse together, and not offences fall out: Now if it be a great offence, a considerable injury, to the just grief or disgrace of another, satisfaction must be given, and reconciliation sought (at least) ere the service can be accepted. For how can we look our father in the face, or ask him blessing, when we know that he knows, there is hatred or heart-burning between us and our brethren?

Verse 24. Leave there thy gift] The fountain of love will not be laded at with uncharitable hands. God appeared not to Abraham, till Lot and he were agreed. Jacob reconciled to his brother, first builds an Altar, &c.

And go thy way, first be reconciled.] Unless thou wilt lose thy labour, and worse, as Saul and Judas did. God prefers mercy before sacrifice, and is content his own immediate service should be intermitted, rather then reconciliation be omitted. Confess your trespasses one to another, saith S. James, your lapses and offences one against another, and then pray one for another, that ye may be healed; as Abraham after reconciliation, prayed for Abimelech, and the Lord healed him. St. Peter would have husbands and wives live lovingly together; or, if some household-words fall out between them at any time, to peece again, that their prayers be not hindred, as else they will be. Dissention and ill-will will lie at the well-head, and stop the current. The spirit of grace and supplication will be grieved by bitterness, anger, clamour; yea made thereby to stir with discontent, and to withdraw, as loathing his lodging.

Si quis est qui neminem in gratiam putat redire posse, non nostram is pervicaciam arguit, sed indicat suam. Cic. Epist. lib. 2. ep. 17. Menander tamen dicit, reconciliationes esse lupinas amicitias.

First be reconciled to thy brother.] And, as a bone once broken is stronger after well-setting, so let love be after reconcilement; that if it be possible, as much as in us lieth, we may live peaceably with all men. Let it not stick on our part howsoever, but seek peace and ensue it. Though it flee from thee, follow after it, and account it an honour to be first in so good a matter. I do not see (saith one) the Levites father in law make any means for reconciliation; but when remission came to his doors, no man entertaineth it more thankfully. The nature of many men is forward to accept, and negligent to sue for; they can spend secret wishes upon that which shall cost them no endeavour. But why should men be so backward to a business of this nature? Almighty God beseecheth sinners to be reconciled unto him. And, as when a man goes from the Sun, yet the Sun-beams follow him, shine on him, warm him; so doth the mercy of God follow us all the days of our lives. Our Saviour first sent to Peter that had denied him, and went to the rest that had forsaken him. Aristippus (though but a heathen) went of his own accord to Æschines his enemy, and said, Shall we not be reconciled, till we become a table-talk to all the Countrey? And when Æschines answered, he would most gladly be at peace with him: Remember therefore, said Aristippus, that although I were the elder and better man, yet I sought first unto thee. Thou art indeed, said Æschines, a far better man then I, for I began the quarrel, but thou the reconcilement. Guiltiness is commonly clamorous and implacable, and none so averse to reconciliation, as they that are most injurious; as he that wronged his brother, thrust away Moses, saying, Who made thee a Ruler? &c. Wilt thou kill me? &c. Acts 7. 27, 28.

Verse 25. Agree with thine adversary quickly.] Habent aulæ suum Citò, Citò. Gods work also must be done with expedition: opportunites are headlong, delays dangerous. Let not therefore the Sun go down upon your wrath, lest it grow inveterate, as it proves in many, who not only let the Sun go down, once or twice, but run his whole race, ere they can find hearts and means to be reconciled. Cursed be their wrath, for it is deadly. O my soul, come not thou into their secret. It were much to be wished, that as Livy hath it, Amicitiæ immortales, inimicitiæ mortales essent, enmities were mortal amongst us, amities immortal.

suit before it come to execution and judgement. Suffer it not, as ill husbands do, to run on, and charges to grow from term to term, lest we pay not only the main debt, but the arrerages too, the time of Gods patience, &c.

Thou be cast into prison.] Into hell, worse then any prison. Of Roger Bishop of Salisbury, the second man from King Stephen, it is storied, that he was so tortured in prison with hunger and other calamities accompanying such men, ut vivere noluerit, mori nescieret, live he would not, dye he could not. This and much worse is the case of those that are cast into hell, they seek death, but find it not, they desire it, but it fleeth from them, *Rev.*9.6.

Verse 26. Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till, &c.] i. Never come out. Let our merit-mongers first go to hell for their sins, and stay all eternity there; then afterward, if God will create another eternity, they may have liberty to relate their good works, and call for their wages. But the curse of the Law will first be served of such, as seeking to be saved by the works of the Law, are fallen from Christ, these shall never come out till they have paid the utmost farthing. And when will that be? We read of a miserable malefactor (John Chambone by name) who had lain in the dungeon at Lyons the space of seven or eight moneths. This thief, for pain and torment cryed out of God, and curst his parents that begat him, being almost eaten up with lice, and ready to eat his own flesh for hunger; being fed with such bread as dogs and horses had refused to eat: So it pleased the goodness of Almighty God, that Petrus Bergerius a French Martyr, was cast into the same dungeon; through whose preaching and prayers he was brought to repentance, learning much comfort and patience by the word of the Gospel preached unto him. Touching his conversion he wrote a very sweet Letter out of his bonds, declaring therein, that the next day after that he had taken hold of the Gospel, and framed himself to patience according to the same, his lice (which he could pluck out before by twenty at once betwixt his fingers) now were so gone from him, that he had not one. Furthermore, so the alms of good people were extended towards him, that he was fed with white bread, and that which was very good. His imprisonment, at utmost, lasted but while life; death as a Goaler knockt off his shackles, and set him into the glorious liberty of the Saints above. So the penitent Thief in the Gospel; and so that Robert Samuel, Martyr, abovementioned. But not so, those that are clapt up in the dark dungeon of hell. Their misery is as endless as easeless: A river of brimstone is not consumed by burning; the smoke of that pit ascendeth for ever. A child with a spoon may sooner empty the sea, then the damned in hell accomplish their misery. All that wicked men suffer here, is but a paying the use-money required for that dreadful debt, that must be paid at last by all, that make not timely composition.

Acts and Mon. fol. 828.

Verse 27. You have heard that it was said to them of old, Thou shalt not commit adultery.] This they corruptly restrained to the gross act, and made nothing of contemplative filthiness, hearts full of harlotry, hot as an oven with scalding lusts, very stews and brothel-houses, cages of unclean birds; besides eyes full of adultery, hands defiled with dalliance, tongues taught to talk obscænities and ribaldries, &c. But Seneca could say, Incesta est, & sine stupro, quæ stuprum cupit, she is a whore, that would be so, had she but opportunity; and the Romans put to death a vestal Virgin, for singing this verse only,

And Polybius attributeth the death of Antiochus to sacriledge only in his purpose and will. Josephus indeed derideth Polybius for so saying; but with as little reason, as his Countryman Kimchi (sowred with the leaven of the Pharisees) sets this strange sense upon Psal. 66. 18. If I regard iniquity only in my heart, so that it break not forth into outward act, the Lord will not hear me, that is (saith he) so as to impute it, or account it a sin.

ing is oft the fruit of looking; as in Josephs Mistress, who set her eyes upon Joseph; and David, who saw Bathsheba bathing: Lust is quick-sighted. How much better Job, who would not look, lest he should think upon a maid? And Nazianzen, who had learned (and he glories in it) to keep in his eyes from roving to wanton prospects. And the like is reported of that heavenly spark, the young L. Harrington; whereas those that have eyes full of adultery, cannot cease to sin, saith S. Peter. And fatli crimina lumen habet, saith another. Sampsons eyes were the first offenders that betrayed him to lust, therefore are they first pulled out, and he led a blind captive to Gaza, where before he had lustfully gazed on his Dalilah. It is true, the blindness of his body opened the eyes of his mind. But how many thousands are there that dye of the wound in the eye: Physicians reckon two hundred diseases that belong to it; but none like this. For by these loop-holes of lust, and windows of wickedness, the Devil windeth himself into the soul. Death entreth in by these windows, as the Fathers apply that text in Jeremiah. The eye is the light of the body, saith our Saviour, and yet by our abuse, this most lightsom part of the body draweth many times the whole soul into utter darkness. Nothing, I dare say, so much enricheth hell, as beautiful faces; whiles a mans eye-beams, beating upon that beauty, reflect with a new heat upon himself. Ut vide, ut perii? Looking and lusting differ (in Greek) but in one letter. When one seemed to pity a one-eyed man, he told him he had lost one of his enemies, a very thief, that would have stollen away his heart: Democritus (but in that no wise man) pulled out his eyes; and the Pharisee (little wiser) would shut his eyes when he walked abroad, to avoid the sight of women; insomuch that he often dashed his head against the walls, that the blood gushed out, and was therefore called Pharisæus impingens. How much better, and with greater commendation had these men taken our Saviours counsel in the following verses?

Verse 29. And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out] That is, if it be either so natural or habitual to thee to go after the sight of thine eyes (which Solomon assigneth for the source of all youthful outrages, Eccles. 11. 9.) that thou hadst as lieve lose thy right eye, as not look at liberty; out with such an eye, (though a right eye) pull it out, and rake in the hole where it grew, rather then that any filth should remain there. Pluck it out of the old Adam, and set it into the new man. Get that oculum irretortum, that may look forth-right upon the mark, without idle or curious prying into, or prone upon forbidden beauties. A Prætor (said the Heathen) should have continent eyes, as well as hands. And the Greek Orator wittily and worthily upbraided a certain wanton, that he had not pupils but punks in his eyes. And Archesilaus the Philosopher, observing one to have wanton eyes, told him, that the difference was not great, whether he plaid the naughty-pack with his upper parts or his nether. Lot might not look toward Sodom. And Peter Martyr observeth out of Nathans Parable, that lust, though it once prevailed over David, yet it was but a stranger to him; he had enough of that once, for it cost him hot water. His eye became a fountain, he washed his bed which he had defiled (yea his pallet or under-bed) with tears. So did Mary Magdalen, once a strumpet; her hands were bands, her words were cords, her eyes as glasses, whereinto while silly Larks gazed, they were taken, as in a day-net. She therefore made those eyes a fountain to bathe Christs feet in, and had his blood a fountain to bathe her soul in, Zech. 13. 1. To conclude, the sight is a deceitful sense, therefore binde it to the good abearance; call it in from its out-strays, check it, and lay Gods charge upon it for the future. Chast Joseph would not once look on his immodest mistress; she looked, and caught hold on him, and that when she was abed; but her temptation fell like fire upon wet tinder, and took not. It must be our constant care, that no sparkle of the eye flee out to consume the whole by a flame of lust: but upon offer of wanton glances from others, beat them back, as the North wind driveth away rain. A King that sitteth in the throne of judgement, (and so any other man that sets seriously upon this practice of mortification) scattereth away all evil with his eyes, Josephus saith, that Potipher and his servants were at a feast; she was at home as feigning her self sick, Prov. 25. 23.

Prov.20.8. And this is to pluck out, and cast away the right eye that offendeth us, as being an occasion of offence unto us. He that shall see God to his comfort, shuts his eyes from seeing of evil. For wanton and wandring eyes (like Spiders) gather poison out of the fairest flowers: and (like Jacobs sheep) being too firmly fixed on beautiful objects, they make the affections oft-times, bring forth spotted fruits.

Isa.33.14,15.

For it is profitable for thee that one of thy members perish] An eye is better lost then a soul. For every (unmortified) one shall be salted with fire, pickled up, as it were, and preserved for eternal torment: and every sacrifice (acceptable to God) shall be salted with salt of mortification and self-denyal, Mark 9.49.

Mark 9.49 expounded.

And not that thy whole body should be cast into hell] As otherwise it will be: For if ye live after the flesh ye shall dye, &c. In Barbary, 'tis present death for any man to see one of the Zeriffs Concubins; and for them too, if when they see a man, though but thorow a casement, they do not suddenly screek out. So here, a loose and lewd eye hazards the whole to hell fire. And is it nothing to lose an immortal soul? to purchase an everliving death? A man would be loth to fetch gold out of a fiery crucible, because he knows it will burn him. Did we as truly believe the everlasting burning of that infernal fire, we durst not offer to fetch either pleasures or profits out of those flames. Bellarmine is of opinion, that one glimpse of hells horrour, were enough to make a man not only turn Christian, and sober, but Anchorite and Monk, to live after the strictest rule that can be. And there is a story of one, that being vexed with fleshly lusts, laid his hands upon hot burning coles, to mind himself of hell fire, that followeth upon fleshly courses.

Rom.8.13. D.Heylins Geog.*pag.*156. Apuleius cum amicam disuaviaretur, ab illa hoc modo monitus est: Heus tu scholastice, dulce & anarum gustulum carpis: cave ne nimia mellis dulcedine diutinam bilis amaritudinem trahas. Principium dulce est, at finis amoris amarus.

Verse 30. And if thy right hand offend thee, &c.] By wanton touches, by unclean dalliance; a farther degree of this sin, and a greater incentive to lust; as we see in Josephs Mistress; wen she not only cast her eyes, but proceeded to lay hand upon him, she became much more inflamed towards him; and had not his heart been seasoned with the true fear of God, there was so much the greater danger of his being drawn thereby to commit, not that trick of youth, as the world excuseth it, but that great wickedness, as he there counts and calls it. Visus, colloquium, contactus, osculum, concubitus, are the Whore-mongers five descents into the chambers of death. Off therefore with such a hand by all means; cry out of it, as Cranmer did of his unworthy right hand, wherewith he had subscribed: And as John Stubbes of Lincolns-Inn, having his right hand cut off in Queen Elizabeths time, with a cleaver driven thorow the wrist with the force of a beetle (for writing a book against the marriage with the Duke of Anion, entituled, The gulf wherein England will be swallowed by the French match, &c.) he put off his hat with his left hand, and said with a loud voyce, God save the Queen: So when God strikes a parting blow between us, and our dilecta delicta, our right hand sins, let us see a mercy in it, and be thankful: let us say to these Idols, Get thee hence, what have I to do any more with Idols? that God may say, as there, I have heard him, and observed him, I am like a green fir-tree; from me is thy fruit found; when he shall see thee pollute those Idols that thou wast wont to perfume, *Isa.*30.22.

Læta venire Venus, tristis abire solet. Lascivis contrectationibus animi adulterium sæpe contrahitur. The archers shot at Joseph, but his bow abode in strength. Gen. 49.24. Castus erat, non solum continens ut Bellerophon, Scipio, *alii. Camd.Elizab. fol.*239. Isa 30.22. Hos. 14.8.

And not that thy whole body be cast into hell.] Our Saviour is much in speaking of hell. And it were much to be wished (saith S. Chrysostome) that mens thoughts and tongues would run much upon this subject, there being no likelier way of escaping hell, then by taking ever and anon a turn or two in hell by our meditations. A certain Hermite is said to have learned three leaves, a black, red and white one; that is, he daily meditated upon the horrour of hell, the passion of Christ, the happiness of heaven.

Vtinam ubique de gehenna discereretur. Non enim finit iam gehennam incidere gehennæ meminisse. Chrysost. Mors tua, mors Christi, flos mundi, gloria cœli, & dolor inferni sunt meditandatibi.

Verse 31. It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away his wife, &c.] This Moses permitted, as a Law-maker, not as a Prophet; as a Civil Magistrate, not as a man of God: meerly for the hardness of the mens hearts, and for the relief of the women, who else might have been misused and mischiefed by their unmannerly and unnatural husbands, *Mal.*2.13. Those hard-hearted Jews caused their wives (when they should have been chearful in Gods service) to cover the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping, and with crying out: so that he regarded not the offering any more. And as grace, ſo good nature, a courteous diſpoſition, is a thing to be eſpecially looked at in a wife, which Eleazar Abrahams ſervant underſtood, and therefore fingled out as a token of a meet mate for his ſon, Let her offer me drink, and my Camels alſo, ſaith he. But what if it prove otherwiſe, and men by leaping unadviſedly into the marriage eſtate, have drawn much miſery upon themſelves? *Quid ſi pro conjugio conjurgium contraxerint? As on the other ſide, where this meekneſs of wiſdom is not made uſe of by married folk, they are together in the houſe no otherwiſe then as two poyſons in the ſtomack, as live Eels in the pot, as two ſpanniels in a chain; their houſes are more like kennels of hounds, then families of Chriſtians; or as ſo many fencing-ſchools, wherein the two ſexs ſeem to have met together, for nothing, but to play their prizes, and to try maſteries. Job was not more weary of his boils, then they are of their bed-fellows, curſing their wedding-day as much, as he did his birth day; and thirſting after a divorce, as he did after death: which, becauſe it cannot be had, their lives prove like the ſojourning of Iſrael in Marah, where almoſt nothing could be heard but murmuring and mourning, conjuring and complaining.

Verſe 32. Saving for the cauſe of fornication] Taken in the largeſt ſenſe for adultery alſo. Adulterium eſt quaſi ad alterum, aut alterius locum. This ſin ſtrikes at the very ſinew, heart and life of the marriage knot, and diſſolves it. Further, it directly fights againſt humane ſociety (which the Law mainly reſpects) and was therefore to be puniſhed with death, as a moſt notorious theft. Maſter (ſay they) this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act. In the very theft, ſaith the original, to intimate, belike, the great theft that is in adultery, whiles the childe of a ſtranger carries away the goods or lands of the family. Neither may any conclude from our Saviours words to that woman, ver. 11. (Neither do I condemn thee) that adultery is not to be puniſhed; any more then he may, that inheritances are not to be divided, becauſe Chriſt (who was no Magiſtrate) would not divide them, Luke 12. 14. The marriage-bed is honourable, and ſhould be kept inviolable: Society and the purity of poſterity cannot otherwiſe continue amongſt men: which is well obſerved by Divines to be the reaſon why Adultery is named in the Commandment, under it all uncleanneſs being forbidden; when yet other violations are more hainous, as Sodomy and beſtiality.

Cauſeth her to commit adultery] Becauſe it is God that both maketh and keepeth the bonds of Wedlock; which is therefore called, The Covenant of God, Prov. 2. 17. Covenants are either, 1. Religious, as when a man tyeth himſelf by vow to God, to ſhun ſuch a ſin, or do ſuch a duty. 2. Civil, between man and man, as in our common Contracts, bargains and buſineſſes. Or, 3. Mixt, that are made partly with God and partly with man. And of this ſort is the Marriage-Covenant: The parties thereby tye themselves first to God, and then to one another. Hence it is that the knot is indissoluble, and cannot be undone or recalled at the pleasure of the parties that make it, because there is a third person engaged in the business, and that is God, to whom the bond is made; and if afterward they break, he will take the forfeiture. This David understood, and therefore upon his adultery, cryed out, Against thee, thee only (that is, chiefly) have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight, Psal. 51.4. A sin it is against the father, whose Covenant is broken; against the son, whose members are made the members of an harlot; and against the holy Ghost, whose temple is defiled, 1 Cor. 5.

Verse 33. Thou shalt not forswear thy self] An oath is ὅρκος quasi ἕρκος, a hedge which a man may not break. It must not be taken without necessity. Hence the Hebrew נִשְׁבַּע Nishbang is a passive, and signifieth to be sworn, rather then to swear. For if the doubt or question may be assoiled, or ended by Verily or Truly, or such naked asseverations, we are, by the example of our Saviour, to forbear an oath. But having sworn, though to his hurt, a man must not change, Psal. 15.4. upon pain of a curse, yea a book full of curses, Zech. 5.3,4. It is not for men to play with oathes, as children do with nuts; to slip them at pleasure, as Monkies do their collars; to snap them asunder, as Sampson did his cords. It was an impious and blaspemous speech of him that said, My tongue hath sworn, but my mind is unsworn. And who can but detest that abominable doctrine of the Priscillianists of old, and their heirs the Iesuites of late,

Jura, perjura, secretum prodere noli.

Laws, vows, oathes, all are soluble, and saleable at Rome.

God will be a swift witness against perjured persons, Mal. 3. as those that villanously abuse his Majesty, making him an accessary, yea a partner in their sin, thinking him like themselves, and therefore calling him to justifie their untruths. Had Shemei peace, that brake his oath to Solomon? Or Zedekiah, that kept not touch with the King of Babylon? Or Ananias and Zaphira, that but uttered an untruth, swore it not? God punisheth perjury with destruction, men with disgrace, saith a fragment of the twelve Tables in Rome. The Egyptians and Scythians punished it with death. So did Philip Earl of Flanders, and others. But where men have not done it, God hath hanged up such with his own hands, as it were, as our Earl Godwin. Rodolphus Duke of Suevia that rebelled against his master Henry Emperour of Germany, to whom he had sworn allegiance: Ladislaus King of Bohemia, at the great battel of Varna, where the raging Turk (provoked by his perjury) appealed to Christ: Michael Paleologus Emperour of Constantinople, who for his perjury, and other his foul and faithless dealings, lieth obscurely shrowded in the sheet of defame, saith the History. Richard Long, souldier at Calice, deposing falsly against William Smith, Curate of Calice, shortly after, upon a displeasure of his wife, desperately drowned himself. And within the memory of man, Feb. 11. 1575. Ann Aviries forswore her self at a shop in Woodstreet, London, and praying God she might sink where she stood, if she had not paid for the wares she took, fell down speechless, and with an horrible stink dyed soon after. Thus God hangeth up evil-doers in gibbets, as it were, that others may hear and fear, and do no more so.

But shalt perform unto the Lord thine oathes.] As David, I have sworn, and I will perform, &c. Psal. 119. 106. And yet David was not always as good as his oath, as in the case of Mephibosheth, &c. Nor did Jacob of a long time perform his vow, Genes. 28.21. though once (at least) admonished, Gen. 31.13. till he was frightfully arrouzed, by the slaughter of the Shechemites, and his own apparent danger to go up to Bethel, and do as he had promised. The font in baptism is Beersheba, the well of an oath, there we solemnly swear our selves to God, which Saint Peter calleth the stipulation of a good conscience. This oath we renew, when we come to the other Sacrament; and often besides, when the Lord layeth siege to us by some disease or other distress, what promises and protestations make we, as Pharoah and those votaries? Psal. 78. But sciapato il morbo, frandato il Dio, as the Italian Proverb hath it; the disease or danger once over, God is defrauded of his due. See it in those Jerem. 34. who forfeited their fidelity, though they had cut the calf in twain, and passed thorow the parts thereof (a most solemn way of sealing up Covenants) and are sorely threatned for it, that God would in like sort cut them in twain, and destroy them, which was the import of that Ceremony.

Verse 34. Swear not at all.] Not at all by the creatures (which the Pharisees held no fault) nor yet by the name of God in common talk; lightly, rashly and irreverently; for such vain oathes the land mourneth. Oathes (alas) are now become very interjections of speech to the Vulgar, and phrases of gallantry to the braver. He that cannot swear with a grace, wanteth his tropes and his figures, befitting a Gentleman. Not to speak of those civilified complements of Faith and Troth (which are counted light matters) Who hears not how ordinarily and openly ruffianly oathes and abhorred blasphemies are darted up with hellish mouths, against God, and our Saviour, whom they can swear all over, and seldom name, but in an oath? How can these pray, Hallowed be that Name, that they so daily dishallow? Some cannot utter a sentence without an oath, yea, a fearful one, an oath of sound, if enraged especially: O the tragedies, the blusters, the terrible thunder-cracks or fierce and furious language, interlaced with oathes, enough to make the very stones crack under them! Yea to such an height and habitual practise hereof are some grown, that they swear and foam out a great deal of filth, and perceive it not. Had these men such distemper of body, as that their excrements came from them, when they knew not of it, it would trouble them. So it would, I dare say, did they believe the holy Scriptures, threatning so many woes to them, yea, telling them of a large roll, ten yards long, and five yards broad, full of curses against the swearer, yea, resting upon his house, where he thinks himself most secure; Brimstone is scattered upon the house of the wicked, saith Job, as ready to take fire, if God but lighten upon it. They walk, as it were, upon a Mine of Gun-powder, and it may be just in God they should be blown up, when their hearts are full of hell, and their mouthes even big with hellish blasphemies. Surely their damnation sleepeth not: God hath vowed he will not hold them guiltless, sworn these swearers shall never enter into his rest. And for men, those that have but any ingenuity, abhor and shun their company. The very Turks have the Christians blaspeming of Christ in execration, and will punish their prisoners sorely, when as through impatience or desperateness, they burst out into them. Yea the Jews, as their conversion is much hindered by the blasphemies of the Italians (who blaspheme oftner then swear) so in their speculations of the causes of the strange success of the affairs of the world, they assign the reason of the Turks prevailing so against the Christians, to be their oathes and blaspemies, which wound the ears of the very heavens. They can tell that swearing is one of those sins, for the which God hath a controversie with a land. And I can tell what a great Divine hath observed, that the stones in the wall of Aphek shal sooner turn executioners, then a blaspemous Aramite shall scape unrevenged. So much doth a jealous God hate to be rob'd of his glory, or wronged in his Name, even by ignorant Pagans (how much more by profest Christians?) whose tongues might seem no slander. Those that abuse earthly Princes in their name and titles, are imprisoned, banished, or hanged as Traytors. And shall these go altogether unpunished? Hell gapes for such Miscreants, &c.

But they say better, that tell us, that the form of an oath is not at all to be indirect or oblique, in the name of the creature. But forasmuch as we must shun, and be shy of the very shew and shadow of sin, they do best and safest, that abstain from all oathes of this nature. They do very ill that swear by this light, bread, hand, fire (which they absurdly call Gods Angel) by S. Ann, S. George, by our Lady, &c. by the parts of Christ, which they substitute in the room of God. The barbarous souldiers would not break his bones, but these Miscreants with their carrion mouthes rent and tear (O cause of tears!) his heart, hands, head, feet, and all his members asunder. Let all such consider, that, as light a matter as they make of it, this swearing by the creature is a forsaking of God, Jer. 5. 7. a provocation little less then unpardonable, ib. an exposing Gods honour to the spoil of the creatures, which was the Heathens sin, Rom. 1. 23. D. reason of Gods Attrib. For it is Gods throne] We must not conceive that God is commensurable by a place, as if he were partly here, and partly there, but he is every where all-present. The heavens have a large place, yet have they one part here, and another there, but the Lord is totally present whersoever present. Heaven therefore is said to be his throne,

Iob 22. 14. Docuit Aristoteles providentiam Dei ad cælum lunæ usq; protendi, non ultra. and he is said to inhabit it, Isa. 66. 1. not as if he were confined to it; as Aristotle and those Atheists in Job conceited it; but because there he is pleased to manifest the most glorious and visible signs of his presence, and there in a special manner he is enjoyed and worshipped by the crowned Saints, and glorious Angels, &c. Here we see but as in a glass obscurely, his toe, train, back-parts, foot-stool: No man can see more and live; no man need see more here, that he may live for ever. But there we shall see, as we are seen, know as we are known, see him face to face. Oh how should this fire up our dull hearts, with all earnestness and intention of indeared affection, to long, lust, pant, faint after the beatifical vision! How should we daily lift up our hearts and hands to God in the heavens, that he would send from heaven and save us; send his Mandamus, and command deliverance out of Sion: yea, that himself would break the heavens and come down, and fetch us home upon the clouds of heaven, as himself ascended, that when we awake we may be full of his image, and as we have born the image of the earthly, so we may bear the image of the heavenly? S. Paul, after he had once seen God in his throne, being rapt up into the third heaven, (like the bird of Paradise) he never left groaning out, Cupio dissolvi, I desire to be dissolved and to be with Christ, which is far far the better. And Parens a little afore his death uttered this Swan-like Song,

They had taken up such a custom, of swearing by the creatures, that after conversion they could not easily leave it. It is a poor plea to say, I have gotten a custom of swearing, and must therefore be born with. Cretians, when they wished worst to any one, they wished that he might take delight in an evil custom. Break off therefore this ill use by repentance; and though you cannot suddenly turn the stream, yet swim against it, bite in thine oathes, and with bitterness bewail them: swear to God, as David did, thou wilt swear no more, and by degrees outgrow this ill custom.

For it is his footstool] And should be ours. For he hath put all things under our feet, Psal.8.6. He saith not, under our hands, but under our feet, that we might trample upon them in a holy contempt, as the Church is said to tread upon the Moon; and the way of the righteous is said to be on high, to depart from hell below. It is a wonder, surely, that treading upon these minerals, gold, silver, precious stones, &c. (which are but the guts and garbage of the earth,) we should so admire them. God hath hid them in the bowels of the earth, and in those parts that are farthest off from the Church. Where they grow, little else grows that is ought; no more doth grace in an earthly heart. But to return from whence we are digressed; Earth is Gods footstool. How ought we then to walk circumspectly, that we provoke not the eyes of his glory? There is an honour due even to the footstools of Princes, when they are in the throne especially. Oh, be thou in the fear of the Lord all day long, (saith Solomon) walk in the sense of his presence, and light of his countenance. He is not very far from any one of us, saith the Apostle, not so far as the bark from the tree, or the flesh from the bones. This one God and father of all, is not only above all, and from his throne beholdeth all that's done here below, but also through all, and in you all, Ephes.4.6. Therefore no corner can secret us, no crany of the heart can escape his eye; All things are (for the outside) naked, and (for the inside) open, dissected, quartered, and as it were, cleft thorow the back-bone (as the word signifieth) before the eyes of him with whom we deal.

Of the Great King] The Jews much admired the greatness of Herod, and especially of the Romans, whose Tributaries they were at this time. ed, by that sign giving leave to other Kings and Princes to go to dinner. These be the Grandees of the earth, and think no mean things of themselves. But compare them with the Great King here mentioned, and what becometh of all their supposed greatness? All Nations before him are but as the dust of the ballance, or drop of a bucket. Quantilla ergò es tu istius gutta particula? saith a Father: If all Nations are to God but as the drop of a bucket, O what a small pittance must thou needs be, how great soever, of that little drop? And as he is great, so he looketh to be praised and served according to his excellent greatness. We should, if it were possible, fill up that vast distance and disproportion that is betwixt him and us, by the greatness of our praises, and sincerity, at least, of our services, in presenting him with the best. For I am a Great King, saith God, and he stands upon his seniority: Offer it now to thy Prince, will he accept thy refuse braid-stuff? &c. It is verily a most sweet meditation of S. Bernard, whensoever we come before God in any duty, we should conceive our selves to be entring into the Court of heaven, wherein the King of Kings sitteth in a stately throne, surrounded with an host of glorious Angels, and crowned Saints. With how great humility therefore, reverence and godly fear, ought a poor worm, crawling out of his hole, a vile frog, creeping out of his mud, draw nigh to such a Majesty? The Seraphims clap their wings on their faces when they stand before God, Isa. 6. as men are wont to do their hands, when the lightning flasheth in their faces; The nearer any man draws to God, the more rottenness he findeth in his bones. Abraham is dust and ashes, Job abhorreth himself in dust and ashes, Isaiah cryes, Wo is me, for I am undone: Peter, Depart from me, I am a sinful man. All these had right conceptions of Gods greatness, and this is that that is required so oft in Scripture under the term of magnifying God; when we get him into our hearts in his own likeness, and enlarge his room there; when we take him into our thoughts under the notion of a great King, when we get so far, as to conceive of him above all creatures, far above all the glory that can be found in earthly Princes and Potentates. Think of God, as one not to be thought of, and when you have thought your utmost, as Tully affirmeth concerning Socrates described by Plato, and desireth of his Readers concerning Lucius Crassus, that they would imagine far greater things of them, then they find written: so assure your selves, your highest apprehensions of God fall infinitely short of his incomparable and incomprehensible greatness. And if he could add, If any think me over-lavish in their commendation, it is because he never heard them, or cannot judge of them; how much more may we say the same of this blessed and only Potentate, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light Which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen, nor can see, to whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen.

Verse 36. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head] That is, by thy health (which is the life of our lives) say some: by thy life, say others, which is a sweet blessing; for a living dog is better then a dead Lyon; yea, though full of crosses, yet why is living man sorrowful? q.d. it is a mercy, that amidst all his crosses, he is yet alive. Joseph is yet alive, I have enough, saith Jacob. They told him of his honour, he speaks of his life. Life is better then honour, and is not therefore to be laid to pawn upon every light occasion, as they that so often use, As I live, and As true as I live: whereof something before.

Because thou canst not make one hair, &c.] God is great in great things, saith St. Augustine, and not little in the smallest. What less then an hair, yet in making a hair white or black, Gods power appeareth. The Devil can as little create a hair of the head, as he could of old a louse in the land of Egypt. There are miracles enough in mans body to fill a volumn. It is the image of God, and a little world, an epitome of the visible world, as his soul is of the invisible. The idea or example of the great world, which was in God from all eternity, is as it were briefly and summarily expresst by God in man. Hence man is called every creature, Go preach the Gospel to every creature, Mark 16. 15. as if there were none to him, none besides him. A Philosopher could say, There is nothing great in earth, besides man. And an Orator, The greatest thing in the least room, is a good soul in a mans body. Man, saith the Poet, is the Master-piece of the wisest Workman; He is, saith the Historian, the fairest piece of the chiefest Architect, the very miracle of daring nature, saith Trismegist. Galen, a prophane Physician, after he had described the nature and parts of mans body, was forced to sing a hymn to that God that he knew not. And S. Augustine complaineth, that men can admire the height of the hills, the hugeness neſs of the waves, the compaſs of the ocean, and the circumvolution of the ſtars, and yet not once mark nor admire the power and goodneſs of God, ſhining in their own ſouls and bodies, as in a mirrour. Fearfully and wonderfully am I made, ſaith David, yea and curiouſly wrought in the loweſt parts of the earth; that is, in my mothers womb, Pſal. 139 13, 14, 15. A Councel was called in heaven when man was to be formed, Let us make man, Gen. 1. 26. And were not the birth of a child ſo common, ſhould it fall out but once in an age, people would run together to ſee it, as to a miracle. Pliny wondereth at the Gnat, ſo ſmall a creature, yet making ſo great a buzzing; and ſo alſo at the Butter-flye. He alſo maketh mention of one, that ſpent 58 years in ſearching out the nature of the Bee, and could not in all that ſpace attain to the full of it. What a ſhame is it for us, not to ſee God in every creature, in our ſelves eſpecially, and every the leaſt part of us? There is not a hair upon our heads white or black, but hath God for the maker, and God for the Maſter too. Let thoſe that pride themſelves in their hair, think what a heavy account Abſolom made to God for that ſin. Long hair in women is a token of modeſty. But modeſty grows ſhort in men, as their hair grows long, ſaith one. And Seneca ſpeaking of the curled and criſped youths of his time, telleth us, that they had more care of their locks then of their limbs, and had rather the Commonwealth ſhould be diſturbed, then their frizled treſſes diſheveled. Pompey was taxed for this neat nicety, Unico digitulo caput ſcalpit. And of Helen, too curious of her hair at her mothers funeral, the Poet bringeth in one that ſaith, ὅτιν᾽ ἡ πάλαι γύνη. This is old Helen ſtill, no changling in all this ſpace. The holy women of old, durſt not adorn themſelves with plaited or broided hair, as S. Peter teſtifieth, but truſted in God, and decked themſelves with a meek and quiet ſpirit. And doth not nature it ſelf teach us, ſaith S. Paul, that it is a ſhame to a man to wear long hair? It is objected, That the Apoſtle intends ſuch hair, as is as long as womens. But it is anſwered, That Homer uſeth the ſame word of the Greeks, calling them καρηκομόωντας Ἀχαιούς, and yet they did not wear their hair long as womens. But as it is a ſhame to wear it, ſo it is a ſin to ſwear by it, whether long or ſhort, white or black. Neither helps it to ſay, The matter is but ſmall we ſwear by. For firſt, it is a forſaking of God, and count you that a ſmall matter? Compare Jer. 5. . . with Jer. 2. 12, 13. Secondly, The more baſe and vile the thing is a man ſweareth by, the greater is the oath, becauſe he aſcribeth that to a vile creature, which is proper to God only, ſc. to know the heart, to be a diſcerner of ſecrets, and an avenger of falſhood. And if a man may not ſwear by his hairs, much leſs by his faith and troth, that are much more precious; and to ſwear by them ſo oft and ordinary, what doth it argue, but that we are low brought, and hardly driven? For who but a Bankrupt will lay the beſt jewel in his houſe to pledge for every trifle? Beſides, they are not ours to pledge; for we have plighted them already to God. Laſtly, he that pawneth them ſo oft, will eaſily forfeit them at length, as the pitcher goeth not ſo often to the well, but at laſt it comes broken home. A man may ſoon ſwear away his faith and troth; and it is marvel if he that oft ſweareth, doth not too oft forſwear, and ſo forfeit all. Swear not therefore at all in this ſort. Theſe petty oathes (as they count them) are great faults, and to be refuſed in our talk, as poyſon in our meat. The diſhonour of them redounds to God, though he be not named in them. But of this ſee more Verſe 35.

Verſe 37. But let your communication be, Yea, Yea, Nay, Nay.] That is, as S. Baſil interpreteth it, Yea in ſpeech, and Yea in heart; Nay in ſpeech, and Nay in heart: Or thus, let your common communication be plain, true and ſincere, that your bare word may be taken, without any further aſſeveration. Not but that aſſeverations may be lawfully uſed, as Verily, Truly, Indeed, &c. Sed, parciùs iſta tamen, not frequently or ſlightly, but adviſedly and ſeriouſly, as our Saviour. If thou be a creditable perſon, and haſt made faith of thy fidelity, with Quod dixi, dixi, thy word will be taken. Or if it will not, that credit is dear bought; that is got by ſin. Chriſt muſt be obeyed, though no man will believe us. But a good mans oath is needleſs, a bad mans, bootleſs; for he that feareth not an oath, neither will he ſcruple a lye, but credit will follow honeſty: Whiles therefore the communication is ours (as Chriſt here ſpeaketh) that is, in our own power, and of our own accord, let our yea be yea, and nay, nay; and let it appear that ordinarily and in common converſation, our word is as ſoon to be taken as our oath. But when, for the glory of God, and clearing of the truth, an oath is required of us, then then it is not our communication, but anothers. And in this case, for the manifestation or confirmation of a needful but doubtful truth, an oath may be safely and boldly taken, for an end of controversies, and satisfaction of neighbours, Heb 6.16. yea we may lay it up among our best services, and expect a blessing upon it (if rightly taken according to *Jer.*4.2.) as well as upon hearing or reading, because it is an Ordinance of God, *Deut.*10.20. Isa 65.16, &c. Some of the Ancients, I confess, as Hierom, Theophylact, Chrysostom, were in the errour, that the Lord did only permit swearing in the Old Testament (as he did divorcement that he approved not) and that in this Text our Saviour did quite take it away. But Christ came not to destroy the Law, but to fulfil it. Gods holy name is still to be sanctified by taking a Religious oath, upon just occasion, sc. when either the Magistrate imposeth it, or when some private person will not believe a necessary truth without an oath, and we cannot otherwise demonstrate it. Thus Jacob sware to Laban, Boaz to Ruth, Jonathan to David. And if it be lawful in private betwixt two or more to admit God as a Judge, why may he not as well be called as a witness? provided ever, that this be done warily and sparingly, using it not as food, but as physick, to help the truth in necessity. Our King Henry 6. was never heard to swear an oath; his greatest asseveration being, Forsooth, Forsooth, Verily, Verily. I my self have used (saith Latimer) in mine earnest matters, to say, yea S. Mary, which indeed is naught. Among the very heathens, Ex animi jussi sententia, In very deed, was instead of an oath.

For whatsoever is more, cometh of evil] That is, of the Devil That which S. Matthew calleth the wicked one, Chap. 13.38. (the self-same word with that in this Text) S. Mark calleth Satan, and S. Luke the Devil. Now can any good come out of such a Nazareth? Swearing is the Devils drivel, and swearers the Devils drudges, acted and agitated by that foul fiend: And though they be not always drunk when they swear, yet are they not their own men. For know ye not, saith that great Apostle, that his servants ye are to whom ye obey? His work swearers do (as those Jews did in the Gospel) and his wages they shall receive, for they fall hereby into hypocrisie, as some copies have it, Jam. 5.12. whiles they daily pray, But deliver us from that evil one, and yet entertain him by this sin. Or rather, as other Copies and our Translation have it, they fall into condemnation. And at the last day, when the master of the harvest shall gather out of his Kingdom all such botches and scandals, he will say to the reapers, Gather ye first the tares, and bind them in bundles (swearers with swearers, drunkards with drunkards, &c. sinners of a kind with their fellow-sinners) and cast them into the fire, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Good therefore is the counsel of S. James, Above all things my brethren, swear not, whatever ye do, look to that: 'tis a senseless sin, and that which maketh the tongue to become, not a City, not a Countrey, but a World of iniquity, James 3.6. It is the Devils hook without a bait, as having neither profit nor pleasure (many times) to draw to it, and that's no small aggravation. The Devils fell without a tempter, and are therefore left without a Saviour. Other sinners usually kill not till provoked, steal not till forced, whore not till intised. But what hath God done to these monstrous men, that they should thus fly in his face, chop (as much as they may) his heart in pieces, and upon every small occasion shoot such chain-shot, as if they would make the windows of heaven to shake and totter? When Naboth was said to have blasphemed, Jezebel proclaimed a fast. When our Saviour was accused of that sin, the High Priest rent his garments. When Rabshakeh had done it indeed, Hezekiah fell to his prayers, and humbled himself before God. Did these do thus for others, and wilt not thou do as much for thy self? God hath against thee, and is coming out armed with plagues and power. Oh meet him upon the way, with entreaties of peace, as Abigail did David; as Iacob did Esau: quench his flames with floods of tears. Learn of Shimei (when he had reproached David, and knew himself obnoxious) to be with God with the first, as he was with the King, 2 *Sam.*19.18,19,20. and as Iosephs brethren supplicated him for grace, whom they had reviled and misused, *Gen.*50.17. do you the like. This do, or you are undone for ever. This do, and do it seriously, and God must either forswear himself, or forgive thee thy swearing, if thou forgo it.

had abused and detorted from its proper sense of publike Justice, to private revenge: teaching the people to render evil for evil, to pay their enemies in their own coin, and to give them as good as they brought. This is a dictate of corrupt nature, and her chief Secretary Aristotle proclaimeth it. To be avenged of our enemies is held better in point of honour, then to be reconciled unto them. Flesh and blood suggesteth that it is matter of good mettal to be quick of touch, as forward in returning, as others are in offering wrong. For if a man find his enemy, will he let him go well away? said Saul. This is quite against the principles of nature and common policy. To turn again and revenge is counted courage; which yet the word of God calleth cowardlinesse, disgrace, and loss of victory. It is not manlinesse, but foolishnesse, Eccles.7.9. Its brutishnesse; Anger a dog, and hee'l fly in your face: touch an Asse, and hee'l kick and winch. Its basenesse so to be led by our passions, as to be able to bear nothing, as Simeon and Levi, brethren in iniquity, that in their anger slew a man, and in their self-will digged down a wall. Their father Jacob heard that Dinah was defiled, and held his peace; he reigned in his passions, by setting God before them; and so that Divine Proverb was made good in him; He that is slow to anger is better then the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit (as Jacob) then he that taketh a City (as his Sons.) It is a godly mans part, at sometimes, and in some places, to be deaf and dumb, as if he understood not; or as men in whose mouthes are no reproof. Which as David could skill of at some times, Psalm 38. 14. and in his carriage towards Shimei, so at other times (when the flesh prevailed) he could not, Psalm 39.2,3. and in his expedition against Nabal. But Peter must put up his sword, if he mean to be Christs Disciple. And Christians must not so much as grudge one against another, unless they will be condemned: for behold, the Judge standeth before the door, as ready to right us. As if we retaliate we leave him nothing to do, unless it be to turn his wrath from our enemy, on whom we have been avenged already, upon our selves, for our sin of self-revenge. We use to say, if the Magistrate be not present, we may offend another, to defend our selves: but if the Magistrate be present, there is no excuse. Now here the Judge standeth before the door, and cryeth out unto us with a loud voyce: Dearly beloved, avenge not your selves, but rather keep the Kings peace, and so give place to wrath: that is, to the wrath of God ready to seize upon thine adversary, if thou prevent it not by an over-hasty revenge of the wrongs offered thee: For it is written, Vengeance is mine, mine office and royalty. Is it safe to invade his part? to justle the chief Justice out of his seat? or is it fit that the same party should be both Accuser and Judge? Pope in his own cause? depose the Magistrate? at least appeal from God to himself, as if he would not sufficiently do his office? Shall not God avenge his own, that cry night and day unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you that he will avenge them speedily, saith our Saviour, I will repay it, saith the Lord: but upon this condition, that we wait his leisure, and pre-occupate not his executions, saith S. Augustine. Joseph accused by his lewd Mistress, either pleads not, or is not heard. He knew that though he suffered for a season, God would find a time to clear his innocency, and he was not deceived. Moses complained not, but was silent, when wronged by Aaron and Miriam; God therefore struck in for him, and struck Miriam with leprosie: Aaron escaped by his repentance. God is their Champion that strive not for themselves. I seek not mine own glory, but there is one that seeketh it, saith Christ. He, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatned not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously, and giveth to every transgression and trespass a just recompence of reward. S. Paul could not have wished worse to Alexander the Copper-smith, then the Lord reward him according to his works. This was not (saith an ancient Author) a cursing or a reviling of him, but a prediction, befitting an Apostle, that revenged not himself, but gave place to wrath, and delivered up his enemy to God, as David did his adversaries, as Simon Peter did Simon Magus, and the Primitive Church did Julian the Apostate. And surely it is a fearful thing, when the Saints shall say to God, concerning those that malign or molest them, as David sometimes said to Solomon, Thou knowest what Joab and Shimei did unto me: Do therefore according to thy wisdom, and let not their hoar heads go down to the grave in peace. If any hurt Gods zealous witnesses, there goeth a fire out of their mouthes to devour them, as the fire from heaven did the first and second Captain sent for Elisha: better anger all the witches in the

And in a matter of ſtrife or diſagreement, he hath the worſt that carries it, ſaith S. Baſil. Yea Ariſtotle himſelf he yieldeth, that of the twain, it is better to ſuffer the greateſt wrong, then to do the leaſt. And it was a heavy challenge and charge upon thoſe carnal Corinthians, that had ſtrife, diviſions, and lawſuits amongſt them; *Why do ye not rather take wrong? Why do ye not ſuffer your ſelves to be defrauded? Nay, you do wrong, and defraud, and that your brethren. Here by the way, Magiſtrates muſt be admoniſhed to take heed how they aggravate puniſhment upon a malefactor, out of private grudge; Parents alſo and Maſters, how they correct in a rage and fury. For although they be publike perſons, yet to give correction in a cholerick mood, is to eaſe their heart by way of revenge, it is a degree of reſiſting evil. But whoſoever ſhall ſmite thee on the right cheek] Socrates a Heathen, when he had received a box on the ear, anſwered, What an ill thing is it, that men cannot foreſee when they ſhould put on a helmet, before they go abroad? And when he was kicked by another, If an Aſs ſhould kick me, ſaid he, ſhould I ſpurn him again? But we have thoſe, that profeſſing to be Chriſtians, leſt they ſhould ſeem to be Anabaptiſts in taking two blows for one, will give two blows for one, yea for none, ſometimes: it is but a word and a blow with them, as it was with Cain, Lamech, Eſau, who ſaid, The days of mourning for my father are at hand, then I will ſlay my brother Jacob. In which words he either threatneth his father (as Luther thinketh) for bleſſing his brother, q.d. I will be the death of my brother, and ſo cauſe my father to mourn: Or elſe he threatneth his brother (as moſt Interpreters ſenſe it) after his fathers head is once laid, without any reſpect at all to his mother, whom he not ſo much as mentioneth. He took no great care how ſhe would take it; and his deferring till his fathers death, was more out of fear of a curſe, then conſcience of a duty. There are that read the words by way of a wiſh, Let the days of mourning for my father draw nigh, &c. And then it is a double parricide. Sure we are, that as concerning his brother, he comforted himſelf, purpoſing to kill him. He threatned him, ſaith the Septuagint, q.d. I will ſit upon his skirts, and be even with him. The nature of ungodly men is vindictive, and rejoycing in other mens hurt (which is the Devils diſeaſe) eſpecially if provoked by any injury or indignity, as ſmiting on the cheek: But God will ſmite them on the cheek bone ſo hard, as that he will break the teeth of the ungodly; ſmite them in the hinder parts, where we uſe to whip froward children, and ſo put them to a perpetual reproach. Neither only will he ſmite upon their loyns, but thorow them, yea he will crack their crowns, cleave their ſculs, wound their hairy ſcalps, be their locks never ſo buſhy, their looks never ſo lofty and terrible, that count it courage to turn again, and revenge, which every Turk and Heathen, nay every Bull and Boar can do. The Lamb of God gave his cheeks to the ſmiters, ſo did Michaiah the meek, Job the juſt, and Paul the patient; yet not ſo patient, but he could ſet forth his priviledge, when he was to be ſcourged, and clear his innocency with meekneſs of wiſdom; and ſo may we, yea, we may ſafely decline a likely danger; in ſome caſes eſpecially, as our Saviour did.

Patience is of continual uſe to us at every turn; it is as bread or ſalt, which we cannot make one good meal without. Its a cloak, to keep off all ſtorms; a helmet, to bear off all blows; a paring-knife, that cuts the croſs leſs and leſs, till it comes to nothing. As there be two kinds of Antidotes againſt poyſon; viz. hot and cold: ſo againſt tribulation and temptation, Prayer and Patience; the one, hot; the other, cold; the one, quenching; the other, quickning. Dan. 6.20. The King cryed unto Daniel with a lamentable voyce, ver. 21. Then Daniel talked with the King, &c. with a voyce not diſtreſſed, as that of the King was: for as by faith he ſtopped the mouthes of the Lyons: ſo by patience he poſſeſſed his own ſoul, Luke 21.19. he became maſter of himſelf; which is the only true manhood. So patience had her perfect work in Joſeph; therefore he became, as S. James hath it, perfect and entire, wanting nothing. Julius Ceſar beholding the Picture of Alexander in Hercules Temple at Gades, lamented that he had done no worthy exploit at thoſe years, wherein Alexander had conquered the whole world. Joſeph at thirty ſhewed more true vertue, valour, piety, patience, purity, policy, knowledge of ſecrets, skill in government, &c. then either of them. Giles of Bruſſels, a Dutch Martyr, when the Fryers at any time did miſcal him, he ever held his peace at ſuch private injuries, inſomuch that thoſe blaſpemers would ſay abroad, That he had a dumb Devil in him. And Caſſianus reporteth, that when a Chriſtian was held captive of infidels, and tormented with divers pains, and ignominious taunts, being demanded by way of ſcorn, Tell us what miracle thy Chriſt hath done? He anſwered, He hath done what you ſee, that I am not moved at all the cruelties and contumelies you caſt upon me. Godly people can bear wrongs beſt of any; and although corrupt nature in them buſtles eftſoons, and beſtir it ſelf, yet they ſoon club it down, they reaſon themſelves patient, as David, and pray down their diſtempers, as Paul. And albeit, with thoſe two ſons of thunder, they could find in their hearts to call for fire from heaven upon their adverſaries, yet they'll do nothing without leave. As they came to Chriſt, and ſaid, Wilt thou that we command fire from heaven? &c. which when Chriſt diſliked and denyed, they were ſoon ſatisfied. We muſt take up our Croſſes, and when God bids us yoke, he is the wiſeſt man that yields his neck moſt willingly. Our Saviour gave Judas his mouth to be kiſſed, when he came to betray him, leaving us a pattern of like equanimity and patience.

Verse 42. Give to him that asketh thee.] Yet with discretion, and choice of a fit object. Which having met with, be not weary of well-doing; for in due season ye shall reap, if ye faint not. Giving is compared to sowing, which, in good ground, is usually with increase. Therefore a worthy Minister, upon occasion, asking his wife, whether there were any money in the house, she answered, that she knew but of one threepence; well (saith he) we must go sow, that is, give something to the poor, knowing that to be the way of bringing in, Prov. 11. 24, 25. Deut. 15. 10. The mercy of God crowns our beneficence with the blessing of store. Happy was the Sareptan that she was no niggard of her last handfull. The more we give, the more we have: it increaseth in the giving, as the loaves in our Saviours hands did. Never did a charitable act go away without the retribution of a blessing. How improvident therefore are we, that will not offer a Sacrifice of alms, when God sets up an altar before us? It were an excellent course, surely, if Christians now, as they of old at Corinth, would lay up weekly a part of their gettings for pious and charitable uses; and that men would abound in this work of the Lord, as knowing that their labour is not in vain in the Lord (I speak of them that are able, for we may not stretch beyond our staple, and so spoil all.) We read of a Bishop of Lincoln, that never thought he had that thing, that he did not give. And of one Bishop of Rome (though that's a rare thing) that was so liberal to the poor, that when he was asked by certain Embassadors, whether he had any hunting-dogs to shew them, he answered, Yes. And bringing them to a great sort of poor people, whom he daily relieved at his table, These are the dogs (saith he) wherewith I hunt after heaven. Bishop Hooper also, had his board of beggers. Twice I was (saith M. Fox.) in his house in Worcester: where in his common-hall, I saw a table spread with good store of meat, and beset full of beggers and poor folk. And this was his daily custom. And when they were served and catechised, then he himself sate down to dinner, and not before. Queen Ann Bullin carried ever about her a certain little purse, out of which she was wont daily to scatter some alms to the needy: thinking no day well spent, wherein some man had not fared the better by some benefit at her hands. The Savoy, Bride-well, and another Hospital, founded by King Edward the sixt, upon a Sermon of B. Ridleys, do speak and testifie both his tender heart, and his bountifull hand. Bonfinius relateth of Stephen King of Hungary (and the same thing is reported of Oswald King of England) that his right hand rotted not for a long time after he was dead. And well it might be so (saith he) that that hand should be kept from corruption, that never suffered any to beg, to hunger, to lie in captivity, or any other misery. But these, alas, are the last and worst daies, wherein love is waxen cold: Mens hearts are frozen, and their hands wither'd up. A great deal of mouth-mercy there is, as in S. James his time, Go thy wayes and be fed, clothed, warmed: but with what? with a mess of words, a sute of words, a fire of words: these are good cheap: but a little handfull were better then a great many such mouth-fuls. We may now a dayes wait for some good Samaritan to come and prove himself a neighbour: And after all complain, There is no mercy in the land. Mercifull men are taken away, the liberal man faileth from among the children of men. Elias lacketh his hostess of Sarepta, and Elisha the Shunamite. Paul cannot find the Purpurist, nor Peter the Currier. Abraham we have not, and Job we find not. Captain Cornelius is a black-swan in this generation, that gave to him that asked, and from him that would borrow of him, turned not away, &c.

And from him that would borrow of thee, turn not away.] Some are ashamed to beg and take alms, who yet, being pressed with great necessity, could be glad to borrow. And a greater kindness it might be, to lend them a bigger summ, then to give them a lesser. Here therefore a good man is merciful and lendeth, he will lend, looking for nothing again: not looking that a poor neighbour should earn it out, or do as much for him some other way. Nay, we ought not in this case so to look for our own again, as that that be the chief thing we aim at, but to obey Christ, and to do a poor man a pleasure. And what if the wicked borroweth, and paieth not again: let not others fare the worse for their fault. The godly make great conscience of paying that they owe, as the son of the Prophets that was so sorry for the loss of the axe, Alas, master, it was but borrowed. And Elisha bad the widow first pay her debts with her oil, and then live of the reſt. Now from ſuch borrowers turn not away: plead not excuſe, make not delays when it is in thy hand to help them preſently. He that hideth his eyes (in this caſe) ſhall have many a curſe. Not to do good (in this kind) is to do hurt; not to ſave a life, or uphold a poor mans declining eſtate, is to deſtroy it. Carnal reaſon will here ſtand up and plead, as Nabal did, Shall I take my bread and my fleſh, that I have provided for my ſheerers, and give it to ſtrangers? So, ſhall I take my money, or my means, which I have provided for my children, and give it or lend it to ſuch and ſuch? Here then you muſt ſilence your reaſon and exalt your faith. Conſider how great an honor it is to be Almoner to the King of heaven; that by laying out upon ſuch, you lay hold upon eternal life; that the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 8. 2. ſetteth out liberality by a word that ſignifieth ſimplicity, in oppoſition to that crafty wilineſs that is in the covetous, to defend themſelves from the danger (as they think) of liberality: that the liberal man deviſeth liberal things, and by liberal things he ſhall ſtand: When a man would think he ſhould fall rather, he takes a right courſe to ſtand and thrive: He lays up for himſelf a ſure foundation.

Verſe 43. Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy.] This later they drew, as an inference from the former, by the rule of contraries. But Logick being the rule of reaſon, which now is corrupt, is it ſelf in ſome reſpect corrupt alſo. Sure we are, he it what Logick it will, is it but carnal Divinity. Sutable it is to our nature, but ſo much the more ſuſpicious. The Phariſees taught it, and were applauded. The Papiſts alſo little better (for the Phariſees are fled and hid in the Papiſts, as one ſaith the ancient hereticks are in the Monks) they teach, that in two caſes only we are bound to help our enemies, in the caſe of extremity, and of ſcandal. For other things, to love them, to pray for them, or do them good in other caſes, its but a counſel our Saviour gives, and no commandment. If men can do it, its well; but if they cannot, its not required. Thus ſay they, But what ſaith Chriſt the Lawmaker, and ſo the trueſt Interpreter thereof?

Verſe 44. But I ſay unto you, Love your enemies.] A hard task, I muſt needs ſay, but hard or not hard, it muſt be done, be it never ſo contrary to our foul nature, and former practice: The ſpirit that is in us luſteth after envy, but the Scripture teacheth better things. And what are thoſe? To go no further then the preſent text; 1. Love your enemies, for the inſide, be tenderly affected toward them, as heartily wiſhing their good every way; being glad of their welfare, and grieved when it falls out otherwiſe: Thus David was a ſorrowfull man when his enemies were in affliction, and put on ſack-cloth. 2. Seal up our love to them by all good expreſſions; which are here referred to theſe three heads. 1. Bleſs them, that is, ſpeak kindly to them, and of them, let them have your good word. 2. Do good, that is, be ready to help them and relieve them at all aſſayes. 3. Pray for them, that God would pardon their ſins, and turn their hearts. This is our Saviours precept, and this was his practice. He melted over Jeruſalem (the ſlaughter-houſe of his Saints and himſelf) and was grieved at the hardneſs of their hearts. Next (for words) he called Judas, Friend, not devil; and prayed, Father forgive them. And (for deeds) he not only not called for fire from heaven, or legions of Angels againſt them; but did them all good for bodies and ſouls; for he healed Malchus ear, waſht Judas his feet, &c. like that good Samaritan, he was at pains and coſt with them, inſtructing them with patience, and proving if at any time he might pull them out of the ſnare of the devil, by whom they were taken alive at his pleaſure: Which alſo he did. For he converted the thief on the croſs (who at firſt had reviled him,) and graciouſly received thoſe three thouſand ſouls that had embrued their villanous hands in his innocent blood, Acts 2. Thus our Saviour, full of grace and truth. And of his fulneſs (of redundancy, of his over-meaſure) we have all received, and grace for grace, as the child receiveth from the father limm for limm, part for part, &c. He is the father of eternity, and all his children, in all ages of the Church, have reſembled him (ſomewhat) in this ſweet property. Abraham reſcueth his nephew Lot, that had dealt ſo diſcourteouſly with him. Iſaac expoſtulates the wrong done him by Abimilech and his ſervants, and forgiveth and feaſteth them. Abſolom inviteth Amnon to a feaſt, and Alexander, Philotas, to kill them thereat: but good Iſaac doth it, to ſhew there was no grudge, or purpoſe of revenge. Jacob was faithfull to Laban, who changed his wages ten times, and ever for the worſe. Joſeph entertained his malicious brethren at his houſe. And whereas their guilty hearts miſgave them, that he rolled himſelf upon them thereby, he feaſted feasted them on purpose to be reconciled unto them: As the Romans had their χαριστια, to the which were invited none but kinsfolks to continue love, and to seek reconciliation, if there had been any breach. But to speak forward, Moses stands up in the gap for them that had so soon forgotten him. Josua marcheth all night, and fighteth all day for the Gibeonites that had deceived him. Samuel prayeth (and God forbid he should do otherwise) for an ungrateful people, that had rejected him. David put on sackcloath, he wept and fasted, when his enemies were afflicted; he spared Sauls life, and afterwards Shimei's, when Abishai's fingers even itched to be taking off their heads. Elishai set bread and water before the Syrians that came to surprize him: and provided a table for them, that had provided a grave for him. The Disciples were sollicitous of the salvation of the Pharisees that had accused them, at the same time to our Saviour, Mat. 15.12. S. Stephen prays heartily for his persecutors, and prevailed (as S. Austin thinketh) for Pauls conversion: And being reviled (saith he) we bless, being defamed we pray. Do my Lord of Canterbury a shrewd turn, and then you may be sure to have him your friend while he liveth: This was grown to a common proverb concerning Archbishop Cranmer. And Laurence Saunders the Martyr, being sent to prison by Stephen Gardner, Bishop of Wincheſter (who bad, Carry away this phrensie-fool, &c.) praised God for a place of rest and quiet, where to pray for the Bishops conversion. In the year of Grace, 1541. Robert Holgot obtained a benefice in a place where one Sir Francis Askew of Lincolnshire dwelt, by whom he was much troubled and molested in Law. Upon occasion of these suits, he was fain to repair to London; where being, he found means to become the Kings Chaplain, and by him was made Archbishop of York, and President of the Kings Councel, for the North. The Knight beforementioned, happened to have a suit before the Councel there, and doubted much of hard measure from the Archbishop, whose adversary he had been: But he remembring this rule of our Saviour, Do good to them that hate you, &c. yielded him all favour that with justice he might, saying afterward merrily to his friends, he was much beholding to Sir Francis Askew, &c. This Bishop in the beginning of Queen Mary, was committed to the Tower; where he lay a year and half, and was at last deprived.

Phil. 3. 15. Verse 45. That ye may be the children of your father] That ye may appear to be, and well approve your selves to be the sons of God without rebuke amidst a perverse and crooked nation: Whilest we resemble him, not in outward lineaments only, as an image doth a man, but in nature and disposition as a child doth his father. Now God to make known his power and patience, endureth with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction: such incarnate Devils, as march up and down the earth with heart and hands, as full as hell with all manner of mischief, lewdness and rebellion. Neither doth he bear with them only, but gives them the Gospel to call them to repentance, and strives with them by his Spirit, which they desperately resist, yea despite, hardning their hearts as the nether millstone, refusing to be reformed, hating to be healed; till at length they lose all passive power also, of escaping the damnation of hell, which is a conformity to the very Devils. This is his dealing with rebels and reprobates. Neither so only, but that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had before prepared to glory: He loved his elect not yet existing, nay resisting; and effectually called them, not only not deserving, but not so much as desiring it. For when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son. God so loved the world, the wicked and way-ward world, that he sent his only begotten Son, &c. Now, Qui misit unigenitum, immisit spiritum, promisit vultum; quid tandem tibi negaturus est? He that sent thee his Son, imparted unto thee of his Spirit, promised thee his favour; What will he deny thee? how shall he not with his Son give thee all things also? Rom. 8. Oh let his patience be our pattern, his goodness our president, to love and shew kindness to our greatest enemies. So shall we force a testimony, if not from the mouthes, yet at least the consciences of all, even the worst, that we are born of God, and do love him better then our selves, when to please him, we can so much cross our selves in the practise of this most difficult duty.

For he maketh his sun to arise on the evil] A sweet mercy, but not prized, because ordinary: as Manna was counted a light meat, because lightly come by. But should we be left in palpable darkness, as were the Egyptians for three days together, so that no man stirred off the stool he sate on, this common benefit would be better set by. The sun sun is (as it were) a vessel whereinto the Lord gathered the light, which, till then, was scattered in the whole body of the heavens. This David beheld with admiration, not with adoration, as those Idolaters that worshipped the Queen of heaven (not so Job Chap. 31. 16.) Truly (saith Solomon) the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun; and S. Chrysostome wondreth at this, that whereas all fire naturally ascendeth, God hath turned the beams of the Sun toward the earth, made the light thereof to stream downwards. It is for our sakes and service doubtless, whence also the Sun hath his name in the Hebrew tongue (Shemesh) a servant, as being the servant-general of mankind; while he shines indifferently upon the evil and the good, and to both imparteth light and heat. Gen. 1. Psal. 8. Ier. 44. Eccles. 11. 6. Hom. 8. ad Pop. Antioch. So the earth is not covered with water, that man may inhabit it. And his rain to fall] Not only upon flowers and fruit-trees, but also upon the bryars and brambles of the wilderness. Those bottles of rain, the clouds, are vessels (saith one) as thin as the liquour which is contained in them; there they hang and move, though weighty with their burthen; but how they are upheld, and why they fall here and now, we know not, and wonder. This we know (and may well wonder) that God maketh his sun to shine, and his rain to fall on the evil and unjust also. What so great matter is it then, if we light up our candle to such, or let down our pitcher that they may drink? This is our Saviours inference here. The dew we see falleth as well upon the days-eye, and thistle, as upon the rose and violet.

On the just, and on the unjust] Those whom S. Matthew calleth unjust, S. Luke calleth unthankful. Ingratitude is an high degree of injustice. God is content we have the benefit of his creatures and comforts, so he may have the praise of them. This is all the rent he looks for, and this he stands upon; he indents with us for it, Psal. 50. 15. and Gods servants, knowing how he expects and accepts it, do usually oblige themselves to it, as that which pleaseth him better then an ox that hath horns and hoofs: And they have been careful to return it, as the solid bodies that reflect the heat they receive from the Sun-beams, upon the Sun again. But most men are like the Moon, which the fuller it is of light, the further it gets off the Sun from whom it receiveth light: Like springs of water, that are coldest when the Sun shineth hottest upon them: Like the Thracian flint, that burns with water, is quenched with oyl; or the dead-sea, that swalloweth the silver streams of sweet Jordan, and yet grows thereby neither greater nor sweeter. Do ye thus requite the Lord, O ye foolish people and unwise? Do ye thus rob him of his praise, and so run away with his rent? Is this the best return we make him for his many matchless mercies and miraculous deliverances? Out upon our unthankfulness and unrighteous dealing! that can devour Gods blessings as beasts do their prey, swallow them as Swine their swill, bury them as the barren earth the seed; use them as homely as Rachel did her fathers gods, yea abuse them to his dishonour; as if he had hired us to be wicked; and fight against him with his own weapons, as Jehu did against Jehoram with his own men, as David against Goliah with his own sword, as Benhadad against Ahab with that life that he had given him. This injurious usage at the hands of the sons of men, was that that caused God to make a world, and unmake it again, to promise them 120 years respite, and to repent him, so that he cut them short twenty years of the former number; yea to perform the promised mercy, and to repent him of it when he hath done, as David did of the kindness he had shewed unworthy Nabal. Will not God take his own from such, and be gone? Hos. 3. 9. turn their glory into shame, Hos. 4. 7. blast their blessings, Mal. 2. 2. destroy them after he hath done them good, Jos. 24. 20. cause them to serve their enemies in the want of all things, that would not serve so good a Master in the abundance of all things, Deut. 28. 47. What should a Prince do, but take a sword from a rebel? what should a mother do, but snatch away the meat from the childe, that mars it? And what can the wise and just Lord do less, then cut off the meat from the mouthes, and take away his corn and his wine, his wool and his flax from such as not only not own him to it, but go after other sweet-hearts with it, paying their rents to a wrong Landlord? Thus he dealt by his unfruitful vineyard, Isa. 5. 5. by the unprofitable servant, Matth. 25. 28. by the foolish Philosophers, (for as the Chronicler speaketh of Sir Thomas Moor, I know not whether to call them, foolish Luke 6. 35. foolish wise men, or wise foolish men) that imprisoned the truth in unrighteousness; and made not the best of that little light they had: God not onely made fools of them, but delivered them up to a reprobate sense; and onely for their unthankfulness, which is robbing God of his due. O therefore what will become of us, that so ordinarily abuse to his daily dishonour our health, wealth, wit, prosperity, plenty, peace, friends, means, marriage, day, night, all comforts and creatures, our times, our talents; yea the very Scriptures, the Gospel of Truth, the rich offers of Grace, and our golden opportunities? Is not Religion turned by many into a meer formality and policy? our ancient fervour and forwardness, into a general lukewarmness and unzealousness? And (besides the love of many waxen cold) doth not iniquity abound in every quarter and corner of the land? which therefore even groaneth under our burthen, and longeth for a vomit to spue us out, as the most unthankful and unworthy people that ever Gods Sun shone upon, and Gods rain fell upon (the Sun of Christs Gospel especially, and the rain of his grace) so fair and so long together? If there be any unpardonable sin in the world, it is ingratitude, said that Peerless Q. Elizabeth in a Message to Henry 4. King of France. The very Heathens judged it to be the epitome of all evil: Call me unthankful, saith one, you call me all that naught is. Lycurgus would make no Law against it, because he thought no man would fall so far below reason, as not thankfully to acknowledge a benefit. Thus nature it self abhors ingratitude; which therefore carryeth so much the more detestation, as it is more odious even to them that have blotted out the Image of God. Some vices are such as nature smileth upon, though frowned at by divine Justice: Not so this. Wherefore have ye rewarded evil for good? Gen.44.4.

Verse 46. For if ye love them that love you, what reward have you?] The Greek and Latine word (say the Remists) signifieth very wages or hire due for work; and so presupposeth a meritorious deed. But what will they say to S. Luke, who calleth that χάρις, or grace, which S. Matthew here called μισθὸς, a reward? It is a reward, but of meer grace (see *Rom.*4.) that God will give to them that love their enemies. If thine enemy be hungry, feed him, &c. For thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head, and the Lord shall reward thee, saith Solomon, Prov.25.21,22. A double encouragement, and all little enough; 1. Thou shall heap coals on his head; those coals are (as Austin interprets it) urentes pœnitentiæ gemitus, the scorching sighs of true repentance: q.d. Thou shalt melt these hardest metals, (as many of the Martyrs did their Persecutors) thou shalt meeken their rancor, overcome their malice, cause them to turn short again upon themselves and upon sight of their sin, shame themselves, and justifie thee, as Saul did David. 2. The Lord shall reward thee. (And all his retributions are more then bountiful) yet not of merit (for what proportion betwixt the work and wages? but first of mercy. Reward and mercy are joyned together in the second Commandment, and Psal. 62.12. Secondly, of promise, for our encouragement,) sith our labour is not in vain in the Lord. Briefly, it is called a reward, not properly, but by similitude, because it is given after the work done. Next, it is a reward, not legall, but evangelical; promised in mercy, and in like mercy performed. Whence it is also called the reward of inheritance. Now an inheritance is not merited, but freely descendeth on sons, because they are sons. Let no son say, with profane Esau, What is this birth-right to me? or with the prodigal in the Gospel, Give me here the portion that belongeth unto me (such are those that love their friends only, here they have love for love, and that's all they are to look for) but look up to the recompence of reward, with Moses; and answer as Naboth, God forbid that I should so far gratifie the devil and mine own evil heart, as to part with my Partrimony, my hope of reward, for a little revenge, or whatsoever coyn, bearing Satans superscription.

Verse 47. What do ye more then others?] Singular things are expected and required of such as have received singular grace and mercy. As to be eminent in good works, to get above others, to have our feet where other mens heads are. The way of the righteous is on high, saith Solomon: he goes an higher way to work then ordinary, and walks ἀκριβῶς, accurately, exactly: he gets even to the very top of godliness, as the word importeth. He knows that more then the common stint is required of him, and that he must do that, that the world will never do: as to be hot in Religion, *Rev.*3.16. The carnal Gospeller saith, Religiosum oportet esse, non religentem; It is fit to be Religious, but not so conscientious. So, to be zealous of good works, *Tit.*2.14. but with discretion, saith the the worldling. The King of Navarr told Beza, he would launch no further into the sea, then he might be sure to return safe to the haven. Though he shewed some countenance to Religion, yet he would be sure to save himself. So, to abound in Gods work, to have a heart full of goodness, as those Romans, Chap. 15. 14. a life full of good works, as Tabitha, Acts 9. 33. But this is to be wise overmuch, saith the flesh. Philosophandum, sed paucis. What need this waste? said Judas. It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem to worship, said Jeroboam to the people, take a shorter cut rather to the golden calves. They are idle, they are idle, said Pharaoh of Gods busiest servants. So, God would have his to walk precisely. This the mad world mocks at: To pluck out their right eyes; this is a hard saying, saith the sensualist: To offer violence to Gods Kingdom; Fair and softly goes farr; and its good keeping on the warm side of the hedge, saith the Politician: to keep Gods Commandment as the apple of thine eyes; but how few are there that will not break the hedge of any Commandment, so they may shun a piece of foul way? Lastly, To love an enemy, do good to them that hate us, &c. But this seems to the most unreasonable and impossible. What? love those that hate and hurt them? that daily rage and rail at them, with such bitterness, as if they had been as far as hell for every word that tumbleth out of their mouthes against them? &c. Love this man? Nay then love the Devil himself. They will rather dye a thousand deaths, then endure such a one: if they could love him, yet they would not. They are prime Christians in these mens opinions, that ascend to Sauls measure, I will do thee no hurt, my son David. If they pass him by, when he is in their power, as the Priest and the Levite did the wounded man; if they fall not foul upon him with recriminations, and retaliate injuries, they have gone far and done fair: and such a measure of charity they hold little less then Angelical, hardly here attainable. This is the voyce and guise of flesh and blood. The spirit that is in us lusteth to envy, and prompteth us to requite taunt with taunt, suit with suit, blow with blow, and holds them fools that do not. But this is the wisdom from beneath, and is earthly, sensual, devilliſh: whereas that from above, is first pure, and then peaceable (well assured of pardon of sin, and peace with God, and thence) gentle or equable to men, and easily perswaded, full of mercy (to an offending brother) and good fruits (friendly expressions) without wrangling or lawing, and without hypocrisie: such as can be heartily reconciled, and love again without dissimulation, not in word, and in tongue, but in deed and in truth. Not covering a pot-sherd with silver dross, a wicked heart with burning lips. Seven abominations are in such a heart, and his wickedness shall be shewed before the whole Congregation, as Absaloms usage of Amnon. A godly man carries neither cruel hatred, a desire to hurt whom he hates, as Esau; nor simple hatred, where there is no desire to hurt, but a disdain to help: he forgives not only, but forgets, as Joseph, Gen. 50. 20. (For injuries remembred are hardly remitted.) And although he loves not his enemies sins, yet he doth their persons: striving to seal up his love, by all loving usage, both in word and deed. And herein he doth more then others; that which is singular, and in the worlds account, seraphical: that which (in truth) is extraordinary, and above vulgar possibility, it is an high point of Christian perfection: and let as many as are perfect, be thus minded. Benaiah was honourable among thirty, but he attained not to the first three. A natural man may be renowned for his patience and beneficence; but the child of God must herein go before all the wicked men in the world, and strive to be conformed to the first three, the blessed Trinity.

It were happy for us (and we must labour it) if we could pass into the likeness of the heavenly pattern. Our summum bonum consists in communion with God, and conformity to him; in keeping inward peace with God, that he abhor us not because of the provoking of his sons, and of his daughters, Deut. 33. 19. and in seeking and keeping (as much as may be) peace with all men, and holiness; purifying our selves as he is pure (in quality, though we cannot in an equality) from the love of every lust (the ground of all our wranglings, James 4. 1.) but especially from the passions and perturbations of the heart, possessing our selves in patience. For if patience have her perfect work, we shall be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. For (perfect) S. Luke hath it: Be merciful, &c. Cap. 6. 37.

CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. Take heed that ye do not your alms]

Your justice, saith the Syriack. For first, We do the poor but right when we relieve them; for they have an interest in our goods, by vertue of the communion of Saints, whereupon Solomon, Withhold not, saith he, good from the owners thereof; i.e. thy poor brethren. God, the great Author and owner of all, hath entrusted the rich (as his stewards, as his Almoners) with the wealth of this world. He hath entrusted them, I say, not lent it them (to speak properly, for that which is lent, is our own at least for a time) but put it into their hands only, for this end, that their abundance may be a supply for others wants, 2 Cor. 8. 9. that their full cups may over-flow into others lesser vessels, &c. which if it be not done, they can bring in no good bills of account. It is but justice then that we do the poor, and it is Rapine or Robbery (saith S. Chrysostome) not to relieve them. Secondly, Alms is called Justice, to teach, that alms should be given of things well gotten. In the reign of K. Henry 8. there was one accused (but very unjustly) of heresie, for saying that alms should not be given until it did sweat in a mans hand. The Jews called their Alms-box, Kupha shel tsedacha, the chest of Justice; and upon it they wrote this abbreviate צדקה A gift in secret pacifieth wrath. Selymus the great Turk, as he lay languishing (his incurable disease still increasing) leaning his head in the lap of Pyrrhus the Bassa, whom of all others he most loved, I see, said he, O Pyrrhus, I must shortly dye without remedy. Whereupon the great Bassa took occasion to discourse with him of many matters; and amongst others, that it would please him to give order for the well-bestowing of the great wealth taken from the Persian Merchants in divers places of his Empire, perswading him to bestow the same upon some notable Hospital for relief of the poor. To whom Selymus replyed; Wouldst thou, Pyrrhus, that I should bestow other mens goods, wrongfully taken from them, upon works of charity and devotion, for mine own vain-glory and praise? Assuredly I will never do it. Nay, rather see they be again restored to the right owners; which was forthwith done accordingly; to the great shame of many Christians, who minding nothing less then restitution, but making ex rapina holocaustum, do out of a world of evil-gotten goods, cull out some small fragments, to build some poor Hospitals, or mend some blind way: A slender testimony of their hot charity.

Before men to be seem of them.] As those are, that act their part on a stage, and would please the spectators, that they may be applauded: He that giveth, saith S. Paul, let him do it with simplicity, with ingenuity, accounting it enough that he hath God the witness of his heart: Not but that men may see our good works, and their praise be sought, modo tibi non quaras, sed Christo (saith one) so that you seek not your selves therein, but set up Christ. Let your end be, that the light may be seen, not your selves seen, Matth. 5. 16. A fool hath no delight in understanding (saith Solomon) but that his heart may discover it self, i.e. that he may have the credit of it: But he takes a wrong course. For honor (as a shadow) followeth them that seek it not; as the Hittites told Abraham, he was a Prince of God amongst them; when himself had said a little before, I am a stranger and a sojourner with you, &c. Gen. 23. 4, 5.

Otherwise ye have no reward of your father, &c.] Ye take up your wages all aforehand. Fruit by the way-side seldom resteth till it be ripe. The cackling Hen loseth her eggs, so doth the vain-glorious hypocrite his reward. He layeth up his treasure, his wages, in the eyes and ears of men; which is a chest that hath neither lock nor key to keep it.

Verse 2. Therefore when thou dost thine alms] Unless thou set light by thy reward, as Esau did by his birth-right; unless thou holdest heaven hardly worth having, and art of that carnal Cardinals mind, who preferred his part in Paris, before his part in Paradise. Card. Burbon.

Do not ſound a trumpet before thee] As the Phariſees did, under a ſhew of aſſembling the poor to take doal, but indeed to notifie their liberality. If they had been truly liberal, they had made no noiſe of it: Thoſe veſſels yield moſt ſound, that have leaſt liquor. Vaſa quæ magis continent, minùs ſonant. Sen.

As the hypocrites do] From whom as the Saints differ in nature, ſo they ſhould in practiſe: We ſhould have nothing common with them, no more then a chaſte Matron deſires to have with a baſe ſtrumpet, Cant. 2. 7. The Spouſe deſireth to know where Chriſt feedeth, that ſhe may repair to him; For why ſhould I be, ſaith ſhe, as one that turneth aſide (or, that is covered and vailed, which was the habit of harlots, Gen. 38. 15, 16.) why ſhould I be reputed a light houſwife, whileſt I turn aſide by the flocks of thy companions? ſhe would ſhun, and be ſhie of all appearance of diſhoneſty; ſo ſhould we of hypocriſie. Thoſe Chriſtians of Corinth, are much condemned by the Apoſtle, that carried themſelves ſo carnally, that a man could hardly diſcern them from other men. Richard Redman Biſhop of Ely, 1501. was not much to be commended, for looking ſo like a Phariſee in that practiſe of his, of cauſing a Bel to be rung wherever he came, to give notice to the poor of the place, that they ſhould have ſix pence a piece, as many as came to him. And why are Almſ-houſes commonly built by the high way ſides, &c. Goodw. Catal. page 279.

That they may have glory of men] As Jehu, Come, ſee what a zeal I have for the Lord of hoſts. Is thine heart upright as mine? &c. A gracious heart is not a blab of his tongue, but reſts and rejoyceth ſilently in the conſcience of a ſecret goodneſs. Not ſo the hypocrite, the Self-ſeeker, the Stage-player, for ſo the word (Hypocrite) properly ſignifieth; ſuch as though little better then rogues, yet ſometimes repreſent the perſons of Princes, and carry themſelves with other faces then their own, that they may have glory of men, that they may get a Plaudite. And herewith agree all the former expreſſions; whatſoever theſe men do is meerly theatrical (ὡς τὸ θεατρικὸν) hypocritical, hiſtrionical. They ſound a trumpet, as is uſual on ſtages; they do their devoir in the Synagogues, publike aſſemblies and ſtreets, as Stage-players act in open places, and by drums and out-cryes get as much company together as they can. And as they can act to the life thoſe whom they perſonate, yea out-ſtrip them in outward actions, ſo do hypocrites the true Chriſtian. Doth the Publican fix his eyes on the ground? thoſe hypocrites in Iſaiah will hang down their heads like bull-ruſhes. Doth Timothy weaken his conſtitution with abſtinence? the falſe Phariſee will not only weaken his conſtitution, but wither his complexion with faſting. Doth Zacheus give half of that he hath to the poor? the pretender to piety and charity will beſtow all his goods to feed the poor, and beſides give his body to be burned, as Servetus did at Geneva, Anno 1555. And all for a name, for a little glory among men, which is but a breath, and yet not able to blow ſo much as one cold blaſt upon hypocrites, when they ſhall be caſt into unquenchable flames, when God ſhall waſh off their varniſh with rivers of brimſtone. No natural face hath ſo clear a white and red, as the painted. No ruſh is ſo green and ſmooth, as the bullruſh. He is curious to a miracle, that can finde a knot in it; yet within is nothing but a uſeleſs and ſpongy pith. Over fair ſhews are a juſt argument of unſoundneſs.

But I aſſevere and aſſure you of it, in the word of Amen, the faithful and true Witneſs, Revel. 3. 14. all the words of whoſe mouth are in righteouſneſs, there is nothing froward or perverſe in them, Prov. 8. 8. that this is the very truth, and time will prove it ſo. They have their reward] Paid them down upon the nail in ready money, and have given their acquittance. They take up all their wages afore the years end, they receive it now, and leave none till hereafter. Its all they are ever like to have, and let them make them merry with it. Egregiam verò laudem, & ſpolia ampla refertis. A poor reward, God wot; but 'tis that they would have. 'Tis their own reward, not Gods, ſaith S. Hierom. As Judas went to his own place, a place of his own providing; ſo theſe have their own reward, much good may it do them: Here they have their conſolation with Dives: let them look for no further reward in the day of refreſhing, if they do, they are like to ἀπέχουσι, They receive it as their full pay: whence ἀποχὴ an Acquittance. to be disappointed, saith the Judge. To themselves they bore fruit, *Hos.*10.1. and shall therefore be turned off as empty vines, ib. when the faithful Spouse that lays up her fruit for Christ, *Cant.*7. ult. shall hear, Thou art like a green fir-tree, from me is thy Hos. 14.8. fruit found. And albeit in her works of charity in secret, and without hope of reward from men, she may seem to cast her bread upon the waters, down the river (as we say) or Eccles 11.1. on the sea to feed fishes; yet after many days she shall be sure to find it. That labour of love cannot best lost that we resolve to cast away (as the world accounts it) upon Christ.

Verse 3. But thou, when thou dost thine alms.] The godly Christian must walk in a divers way to a world of wicked people, as Noah did, really reproving their darkness by his light, their pride by his lowliness, their vain-glory by his modesty, their ostentation by his secret devotion; not only (Planet-like) keeping a constant counter-motion to the corrupt manners of the most, but also shining forth fair with a singularity of heavenly light, spiritual goodness, and Gods sincere service, in the darkest mid-night of damned impiety. Solus ipse diversa ambulavit via. Chry. de Noe.

Let not thy left hand know, &c.] A proverbial speech, q.d. Secret thy self as much as may be, cast away the vain affectation of humane applause. Let not thy left-hand (if it had so much skill) understand what thou giveſt, and to whom, how much, how oft, at what time, &c. God sets down every circumstance in his book of remembrance; as our Saviour (that true Arch-deacon, as well as Arch-shepherd) sate and viewed the estate, mind and gift of every one that cast money into the treasury; and as he took special observation of those that came to hear him, how far they had come, how long they had been there, how little opportunity they had of providing for themselves, and how soon they might faint, if sent away empty, &c. In pugillaribus suis omnia notat. Mal. 3.18. 1 Pet. 5. 4. Mark 12. 41. Mat. 15.32. Revel. 2. I know thy work, and thy labour, saith Christ to that Church, so to us; I know thine alms, and thy privacy. Many give much, and are little noted or noticed. It matters not, saith our Saviour, though thy left hand should not know what thy right hand doth; there's no loss in that. Some talents are best improved by being laid up. A treasure that is hid is safer from thieves. Steal we therefore benefits upon men, as Joseph did the money into the sacks. And as he made a gain of the famine, and bought Egypt; so may we of the poor we relieve, and buy heaven, Luke 16. 9. *Rom.*2.10. *Ex fama quæstum captabat Josephus, & benignitate sua emit Egyptum, nos cælum. Verse 4. Thy father that seeth in secret] And best accepteth of secret service, Cant. 2.14. O thou that are in the clefts of the rocks, let me see thy face, let me hear thy voyce. &c. He is all eye, he searcheth the hearts and tryeth the reins, those most abstruse and remotest parts of the body, seats of lust: And as he is himself a Spirit, so he loveth to be served like himself, in Spirit and in Truth. He sets his eyes upon such (as the word here signifieth) he looketh wishly, fixedly, steddily; he seeth thorow and thorow our secret services, not to find faults in them (for so he may soon do not a few, but those he winks at, where the heart is upright) but to reward them, as a liberal pay-master, rich to all that call upon him, or do him any other business. Who is there even among you, that shuts the door for nought; that kindleth fire upon mine altar for nought? Mal. 1. 10. that gives a cup of cold water, and hath not his reward? David would not serve God on free cost? but was he not paid for his pains, and had his cost in again with usury, ere the Sun went down? Let him but resolve to confess his sins, and God (or ere he can do it) forgiveth him the iniquity of his sin, that in it that did most gall and grieve him. Let him but purpose to build God a house, God promiseth thereupon (for his good intentions) to build David an house for ever. So little is there lost by any thing that is done or suffered for God. He sends away his servants (that do his work many times, and the world never the wiser) as Boaz did Ruth, with their bosome full of blessings; as David did Mephibosheth, with a royal revenue; as Solomon did the Queen of Sheba, with all the desire of her heart; as Caleb did his daughter Achsah, with upper and nether springs; or as once he did Moses from the Mount, with his face shining. He shone bright, but knew not of it, yea he hides his glorified face with a vail, and had more glory by his vail then by his face. How far are those spirits from this, which care only to be seen? And sleighting Gods secret approbation, wish only to dazle others eyes with admiration, not caring for unknown riches? Our Saviour (besides the vail of his humanity) says, See you tell no man. Its enough for him, that he can say to his father, I have glorified thee on earth: I have finished the work that John 17.4. thou

Oh therefore that rich men would be rithin good works, ready to diſtribute, willing to communicate (which was a piece of praiſe uſed to be aſcribed to the ancient Kings of Egypt.) This, this were the way, To lay up for themſelves a ſure foundation; yea, to lay faſt hold on eternal life; when thoſe that withhold their very crums, ſhall not obtain a drop with Dives, whom to vex and upbraid, Lazarus was laid in the boſom of liberal Abraham.

There may be good words and wishes found in a worldlings mouth, Who will shew us any good? But none but a David can with faith, feeling and fervency say, Lord, lift up the light of thy countenance upon me; &c. Balaam may break forth into wishes and woulds. O let me dye the death of the righteous, &c. But can he pray, as David in like case, Psal. 26. 9. Oh take not away my soul with sinners, nor my life with bloody men! An hypocrite may tell a perswasive tale for himself in earthly regards, or howl upon his bed in the want of outward comforts; Cry in extremity, as a prisoner at the barr, as a Pig under the knife; or importune God for grace, as a bridge to lead him to heaven; not for any beauty he seeth, or sweetness he finds in it. But will he pray always, will he delight himself in God? saith Job, Chap. 27. No surely; he neither doth nor can do it. When God defers to help at a pinch, as Saul; when grief and vexations encrease, he frets and meddles no more with calling upon God, but grunts against him, because he handles him not after his own mind, and betaketh himself to some other course. If God will not come at his call, and be at his beck, away to the witch of Endor; with Saul; to the god of Ekron, as Ahaziah to Baalim and Ashteroth, with the revolted Israelites. Wherein he is like to those barbarous Chinois, that whip their gods, when they answer them not: or that resolute Ruffus, that profanely painted God on the one side of his shield, and the Devil on the other, with this inscription, Si tu me nolis, iste rogitat: Or that desperate King of Israel, Behold (saith he) this evil is from the Lord, and what should I wait for the Lord any longer? Lo, this is the guise of a godless hypocrite. Either he calleth not upon God (which is the description David giveth of him) but is possest, as it were, with a dumb Devil, both in Church and Chamber. Or if by reading, or otherwise he have raked together some good petitions, and strive to set some life upon them in the utterance; that he may seem to be well-gifted; yet he doth it not to serve God, but meerly to serve himself upon God, He draweth not nigh with a true heart, Heb. 10. 13. uprightly propounding Gods service in prayer, and not only his own supply and satisfaction. He is not brought into Gods presence with love and desire, as Psal. 40. 8. He labours not with strife of heart to worship him with his faith, trust, hope, humility, self-denial, being well content that Gods will be done however, and truly seeking his glory, though himself be not profited, acknowledging the Kingdom, Power, and Glory to be his, Matth. 6. 13. Lastly, working not by a right rule, from a right principle, nor for a right end, he cannot undogo the strife of prayer, as Jacob, who wrestled by might and sleight (so much the Hebrew word importeth) much less can he continue long in it, as David, he is soon sated, soon tired. If men observe him not, applaud him not, he giveth over that course, as tedious and unsavoury, that wherein he he finds no more good relish, then in the white of an egg, or a dry chip. And in any extraordinary trouble, instead of calling upon God, he runs from him, Isa. 33. 14. as Saul did, 1 Sam. 28. 7.

It was commonly used among the Iews in the Temple, especially at the solemn feasts, what time there was such resort of people from all parts, that they could hardly stand one by another. The Primitive Christians also stood praying in their publique Assemblies, betwixt Easter and Whitsontide especially, in token of our Saviours standing up from the dead. Whence came that Proverb amongst them, Were it not for standing in prayer, the world would not stand. Other gestures and postures of the body in prayer we read of. David and Eliab sate and prayed. Peter and Paul kneeled and prayed. Moses and Aaron fell on their faces, and prayed. In secret prayer, there is more liberty to use that gesture that may most quicken us, and help the duty. Elias put his head between his knees in prayer (as one that would strain every vein in his heart. But in publike our behaviour must be such as may witness our communion and desire of mutual edification; there must be a uniformity, no rents or divisions; and special care taken, that our inward affections anſwer our external devotion; that we ſtand not in the Synagogues, as theſe, with deſire to be ſeen of men (as Saul was higher then the reſt by head and ſhoulders) for that is putid hypocriſie, hateful even amongſt Heathens. Tully taxeth Gracchus for this, that he referred all his actions, not to the rule of vertue, but to the favour of the people, that he might have eſteem and applauſe from them. Tuſc. quæſt. l. 3

That they may be ſeen of men.] This was the wind that ſet the wind-mill a-work, the poiſe that made the clock ſtrike. Pliny telleth us, that the Nightingale ſingeth far longer and better when men be by, then otherwiſe. If Jehonadab had not ſeen the zeal that Jehu had for the Lord of hoſts, he had been nothing ſo hot, nor (in his own conceit) ſo happy. But Chriſtian modeſty teacheth a wiſe man, not to expoſe himſelf to the faireſt ſhew, but rather to ſeek to be good, then ſeem to be ſo. Not ſo, every looſe and ungirt Chriſtian: Theſe, like Jeroboams wife, never put on demure apparel, but when they are to ſpeak with the Prophets; are never ſo holy, as at Church, and in the preſence of thoſe whoſe holineſs they reverence. Plin. nat. hiſt. l. 10. 29. G. Rhodig. l. 12. c. 66. Sed vox tua es, præterea nihil. Laco ad Philon. Falleris eſſe aliquid ſi cupis, eſſe nihil.

Verſe 6. But when thou prayeſt, enter into thy cloſet, &c.] The proper place for ſecret prayer (as the family is for private prayer, and the Church for publike, Luke 4. 16.) that being ſequeſtred from company, we may more fully deſcend into our own hearts, and be the freer from oſtentation and hypocriſie, and from diſcurſation and wandering of mind (Anima diſperſa fit minor:) As alſo for the demonſtration of our faith, whereby we believe the Omnipreſence of God, who ſeeth in ſecret, and rewardeth openly. Daniel indeed opened his windows, and prayed in an upper room, not to be more ſecret (as Pintus miſtaketh it) but to be more ſeen; and yet not of vain oſtentation, but of zealous and conſtant profeſſion. The King had forbidden it (ſo did Henry the third, King of France, forbid houſholders to pray with their families) Daniel did it notwithſtanding, as aforetime. God muſt be obeyed, rather then men, as not Scripture only, but nature teacheth. He kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed; that had been his cuſtom, and ſhould be. David alſo at morning, at evening, and at noon called upon God, and had his ſet times for ſuch devotions. But the Devil, as it is probable, 2 Sam. 12. 2. had cauſed him to come from his trench, and then did preſently wound him. He knows well enough that a Chriſtians ſtrength lies in his prayer (as Sampſons did in his hair) that it buckleth all our ſpiritual armour cloſe to us, and makes it uſeful, that a Chriſtian can never want help, whiles he can pray; as they were wont to ſay, the Pope can never want money, ſo long as he can hold a pen in his hand, to command and ſend for it: That ſecret prayer is a ſoul-fatting exerciſe, as ſecret meals, we ſay, feed the body. The old Serpent feels himſelf charmed and diſabled to do hurt by theſe kind of duties. They have poured forth a charm, when thy chaſtening was upon them, Iſa. 26. 16. Yea, he is deeply wounded and driven out of the field, by theſe arrows of deliverance, as the King of Syria was, 2 King. 13. 17. which therefore he keeps (what he can) from being multiplyed and enlarged. Fervent prayers are the pillars of ſmoke, wherein the Church aſcendeth to God out of the wilderneſs of this world, and by an humble familiarity converſeth, yea parleth with him, as Abraham and Moſes did (eſpecially when Satan, Sin and Conſcience accuſe) and ſtandeth, as it were, upon interrogatories; ſuch as are thoſe, Rom. 8. 33, 34, 35. Polon. in Dan. 6. 10. Acts 5. 29. Sic Socrates in Apologia, reſponſens, ἐγω ὦ ἀνδρες Αθηναιοι ἀπολυσω ὑμας ἢ μη πεισθω ὑμιν ἢ τῳ Θεῳ μαλλον ἢ ὑμιν. Acts 10. 9. Acts 10. 3. And when thou haſt ſhut thy door] So to ſhut out diſtractions, which yet will grow upon us, do what we can. For though the Spirit is willing to wait upon God, all the while of the duty, yet the fleſh is weak. It being but partly mortified, draws away our thoughts many times; and putteth us to St. Pauls complaint, When I would do good evil is preſent with me. Satan alſo will be jogging and interrupting us; and will needs be talking to us, when we are moſt buſily ſpeaking to God, as the Pythoniſs troubled St. Paul as he went to prayer, Acts 16. 16. Worldly things likewiſe are ſo natural to us, and ſo near our ſenſes, heavenly things are ſo ſupernal and ſupernatural, that we cannot without watching our ſenſes, and travel of ſoul, ſtay our ſpirits long upon them. For help herein, S. Auguſtine telleth us, that the ancient Chriſtians of Ægypt were wont to uſe only ſhort and pithy prayers and ejaculations: ſuch as was that of Elias, when he contended with the Prieſts of Baal, charging God (in two words) with the care of his Covenant, of his truth, and of his glory. Many other helps there are for the curing and caſting out (in a comfortable meaſure) theſe by-thoughts, theſe birds that would rob Abraham of his ſacrifice; theſe ſwarms of Ægypt, that our hearts may be as ſo many Rom. 7. 22. Fratres Ægiptiaci breviſſimis & raptim ejaculatis orationibus utivoluiſſent, ne per moras evaneſceret & hebetaretur intentio.

Goſhens, theſe creeping things innumerable, as David hath it. This among the reſt, that our Saviour here preſcribeth, to retire into a ſecret place, as Abraham did into his grove at Beerſheba planted for the purpoſe (though that was afterwards abuſed by the heathens, and therefore forbidden the Iſraelites, Deut. 12. 3.) Iſaac had his Oratory in the fields, where he prayed with deep meditation or ſoliloquie, as the word there ſignifieth. Rebeccah upon the ſtrugling of the babes, went to enquire of the Lord, Gen. 25. 22. that is, ſhe went to ſome ſecret place to pray, and receive ſome revelation from God, ſay Calvin, Muſculus, Mercer, others. Jacob had viſions of God, when he was all alone upon the way; Elias prayed under the Juniper, our Saviour in the garden of Gethſemane, and many times in the mount: Cornelius in ſome corner of his houſe, Peter on the leads, where alſo he fell into an extaſie or trance, and ſaw heaven open. His ſoul was ſeparated (after a ſort) from his body for the time, whileſt he was talking with God, he was ſo tranſported and carried out of himſelf, ut caro eſſet panè neſcia carnis, as S. Jerome teſtifieth of certain devout women of his time. For the place we pray in, no matter how mean it be, ſo it be ſecret. Where there is a Jeremy, a Daniel, a Jonas, a Dungeon, a Lyons Den, a Whales belly are goodly Oratories. Shut the door to thee, remembring the weakneſs of thy fleſh, and the malice of the Devil, watching how to diſtract thee. Covenant with thy ſenſes, and bind them to the good abearance all the while: look God full in the face, as David did, Pſal. 57. 7. call in, and concenter thy thoughts, as men do the Sun-beams into a burning glaſs: ſerve God with thy ſpirit, as Paul did, Rom. 1. 9. ſay, All that's within me praiſe his holy name. Have thy heart at thy right hand, with Solomons wiſe-man, lay Gods charge upon it to attend upon him; when it roves and wanders, call it in, and chide it; judge and ſhame thy ſelf for thy diſtractions, and ſtrive to do better, ſo ſhall they never be imputed unto thee. To be wholly freed from them, is a priviledge proper to the eſtate of perfection. Some diſeaſes will not be cured near home, but men muſt repair to the Bath, or City for help. This infirmity is not to be healed, til we come to heaven. No ſhutting of the door will do it, nor any thing elſe, till the everlaſting doors be opened unto us, till we enter in by the gates into the City of the living God.

Pray to thy father which is in ſecret] There are no dumb children in Gods houſe; the leaſt he hath can ask him bleſſing. All are not alike gifted, but every godly man prayeth unto thee, ſaith David; S. Paul was no ſooner converted, but he was praying preſently, Acts 9. 11. The ſpirit of grace, is a ſpirit of ſupplication, and teacheth to cry, Abba Father, or Father, Father. And this very naming of the Name of God in prayer (though it be no more,) ſo it be done in faith, entitles a man to heaven, 2 Tim. 2. 19. if withal he depart from iniquity; when ſuch as have the gift of Prophecy, and of doing miracles ſhall miſcarry, and be turned off at the laſt day, becauſe workers of iniquity, Mat. 7. And albeit Gods weaker children cannot utter their mind unto him in wel-couched words, and variety of expreſſions, yet, if their broken language come from a broken heart, it avails more then affectation of rhetorick, without affection of prayer. Men are better pleaſed with the ſtammering and liſping of their own little ones, then with all the plain ſpeech of all the children in the Town beſides. Yea, becauſe the ſoul is ſick, the ſervice is twice welcome. As, if a ſick child reach us up a thing, we count it more then to ſend another of a laborious errand. I wil ſpare them, ſaith he, as a man ſpares his own ſon that ſerveth him. The buſineſs of prayer is more diſpatched by ſighs then ſpeeches, by deſires and groans of the heart, to our father which is in ſecret, whether we can expreſs them in words or no. The Spirit alſo helpeth our infirmities (he lifteth with us, and before us, as the word ſignifies) and maketh interceſſion in us and for us with groans unutterable. And he that ſearcheth the hearts, knoweth what is the mind of the ſpirit. As he heareth us without ears, ſo he underſtandeth us without our words. If we can but groan out, Ah father, it is an effectual prayer. The voyce is not ſimply required, John 4. 24. There is great diſpute (ſaith one) among the Schoolmen, about the ſpeech of Angels; but this they agree in, that one Angel ſpeaketh thus to another, when any one hath a conceit in his mind of any thing, with a will that another ſhould underſtand it, and that God ſhould underſtand it, that's enough for the expreſſion of it. So is it with the ſpirit of man in ſpeaking to God: for the ſpirit agreeth to the Angels. Yet we muſt pray for fit words alſo, Hoſ. 14. 2. and ſtrive to be enriched in all utterance, and in all knowledge, 1 Cor. 1. 5. get an habit of heavenly-mindedneſs, let the heart meditate a good matter, and then the tongue will be as the pen of a ready writer, Pſal. 45. 1. firſt prepare the heart, and then ſtretch out the hands, Job 11. 13. should be praying a good while before the tongue; as before the seven Trumpets were sounded at the opening of the seventh seal, there was half an hours silence in Heaven. And surely if there be an honest heart, and a good intention, an ability of prayer usually is in us, though we know it not; as a man may have money about him, and not know so much, till necessity make him willing to search, and glad to finde it: Remember, however, the promise of the Spirits assistance, and Gods acceptance, and know, that as in singing, so in praying, the pleasing melody is in the heart. The voyce which is made in the mouth, is nothing so sweet as that which comes from the depth of the Breast. As the deeper or hollower the belly of the Lute or Viol is, the pleasanter is the sound: the fleeter, the more grating and harsh in our ears.

Col. 3. 16.

And thy father which seeth in secret,] And heareth too: as he did Moses when he cryed to God, but said nothing; and Hannah, when she moved her lips, but uttered not her self in an audible voyce: and Nehemiah, when he lift up his heart to God, as he spake to the King: and as he doth still his praying people. His ears are into their prayers, saith S. Peter, after David: that though their prayers are so weak, they cannot ascend to him, he will descend to them. He harkned and heard, those good souls in Malachi, chap. 3. 16. as loth to lose any part of their precious language. Thus the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous (when they are praying especially) and his ears are open to their prayers. He seeth his Church when she is in the Clefts of the Rocks, when she is gotten into a corner and praying, he looks upon her with singular delight, and with special intimations of his love (as Ahashueroth dealt with Esther) and saith unto her, as he, what is thy petition, and it shall be given thee? And oh that every faithfull soul, whiles it is sitting and feasting with God by secret prayer, and other holy duties, would bethink it self what special boon it hath to beg, what Haman to hang up, what corruption to be subdued, what grace to be encreased, &c. How should they be gratified, and their request granted, even to the whole of Gods Kingdom? The truth is, they might have any thing: and that which Zedekiah said to his Courtiers flatteringly, God performeth to his people really, The King is not he that can do any thing against you. Luther was wont to say, that prayer was after a sort omnipotent: for whatsoever God can do, that prayer can do. Of Luther himself, for his wrestling with God and prevailing (as he was mighty and happy that way) it was said, That man can have any thing at Gods hands.

Will reward you openly,] Here in part, hereafter in all perfection. He never said to the house of Israel, Seek ye me in vain. This poor man (for instance) prayed, saith David, pointing to himself, and the Lord heard him, and delivered him out of all his distresses. God is known by hearing of prayers, 'tis one of his Titles, Psal. 65. 3. 'tis his praise above all Heathen gods, Isa. 45. 19, 20. By this Manasses knew him to be God, 2 Chron. 33. 15. and all Israel, 1 King. 18. 37, 39. when it came to a matter of competition: Verily, verily I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask the father in my name, he will give it you. If we can finde a praying heart, he will finde a pitying: if we open our mouthes, God will fill them: and he is worthily miserable, that will not make himself happy by asking. Of some Heathen Princes it is said, that they never sent away their suitors sad or discontented: this is most true of God; let a man bring right petitions, a clear conscience, faith in the promises, and hope to wait the accomplishment, and he shall not fail of the thing he asketh, or a better: As when God denyed David the life of the child, but assured him of his salvation, I shall go to him, &c. So he denyed his Mother her particular request for that time: and when his Disciples asked him a curious question, Wilt thou at this time restore the Kingdom to Israel, &c? That's not for you to know, saith he; but a better thing I can tell: you shall receive power after that the holy Ghost is come upon you. But many times God is graciously pleased, not onely to grant a mans prayer, but also to fulfill his counsel; that is, in that very way, and by that very means that his thoughts pitch on. But say he do neither of these; yet the very ability to pray in the holy Ghost, is a sweet and sure sign of salvation, Rom. 10. 13. And a very grave Divine writeth thus: I cannot but prefer faithful prayers for some temporal mercy, far before that mercy for which I pray. Yea, I had rather God should give me the gift of prayer, then (without that gift) the whole world besides. As for those that are ita congregabiles (saith another Divine of good note,) so very good-fellows, that they cannot spare so much time out of company, as to seek God apart, and to serve him in secret, they sufficiently shew themselves thereby, to have little followship or friendship with God, whom they so seldom come at.

Verse 7. But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions,] Babble not: bubble not, saith the Syriack, as water out of a narrow-mouthed vessel. Do not iterate or inculcate the same things odiously & ad nauseam, as Solomons fool, who is full of words (saith he:) and this Custom of his expressed μωμηκῶς, in his vain tautologies. A man cannot tell what shall be, and what shall be after him who can tell? Such a one also was that Battus (to whom the Evangelist here hath relation, an egregious babbler. In common discourse its a sign of weakness, to lay on more words upon a matter then needs must: how much more in prayer? Take we heed we offer not the sacrifice of fools; God hath no need of such, 1 Sam. 21.15. with Psal. 5.5. He is in Heaven, and thou upon Earth, therefore let thy words be few, Eccles. 5.2. Prayers move God, not as an Orator moves his Hearers, but as a child his Father, (your Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things, vers. 8.) Now a child is not to chat to his father, but to deliver his minde, humbly, earnestly, in few, direct to the point. S. Peter would have men to be sober in prayer, that is, to pray with due respect to Gods dreadful Majesty, without trifling or vain babling. He that is fervent in spirit, prayes much, though he speak little, as the Publican, Luk. 18. and Elias, 1 King. 20. 36. But as a body without a soul, much wood without fire, a bullet in a gun without powder; so are words in prayer without spirit. Now long prayers can hardly maintain their vigor: as in tall bodies, the spirits are diffused. The strongest hand long extended will languish, as Moses hand slacked against Amalec: Its a praise proper to God, to have his hand stretcht out still. Our infirmity suffers not any long intention of body or minde. Our devotion will soon lag and hang the wing: others also that joyn with us, may be tired out, and made to sin by wearines and wandrings. In secret indeed, and in extraordinary prayer with solomn fasting; or so, when the heart is extraordinarily enlarged, our prayers may and must be likewise. Solomon prayed long at the dedication of the Temple, so did those godly Levites, Neh. 9. Our Saviour prayed all night sometimes, and rising up a great while before day, he went apart and prayed, Mar. 1. 35. Of Luther it is reported, that he spent constantly three hours a day in prayer, and three of the best hours, and fittest for study. It was the saying of a grave and godly Divine, that he profited in the knowledge of the word, more by prayer in a short space, then by study in a longer. That which our Saviour condemneth, is needless and heartless repetitions, unnecessary digressions, tedious prolixities, proceeding not from heat of affection, or strength of desire (for so, the repetition of the self-same petition, is not onely lawful, but useful. See Psal. 142. 1. and 130.6.) but either out of ostentation of devotion, as Pharisees, or opinion of being heard the sooner, as Heathens, when mens words exceed their matter, or both words and matter exceed their attention and affection. See that these be matches, and then pray and spare not.

For they think they shall be heard for their much speaking,] As Orpheus, in his hymns, and other Pagans: calling, as the Mariners in Jonah, every man upon his God: and lest they should not hit the right, closing their petitions with that Diiq; Deaq; omnes. And as this was the folly and fault of Pagans, so is it also still of the Papists, whom the holy Ghost calleth Heathens, with whom they symbolize, as in many things else, so in their Battologies or vain repetitions: which are so gross, that the devil himself (had he any shame in him,) might well be ashamed of them. In their Jesus-Psalter (as they call it) there are fifteen of these prayers, Jesu, Jesu, Jesu have mercy on me. Jesu, Jesu, Jesu help me. Jesu, Jesu give me love my purgatory. Every of which petitions are to be ten several times at once said over for a task. So on their Church and Colledge-doors, the English Fugitives have written in great golden Letters, Jesu, Jesu, converte Angliam, Fiat, Fiat. These be their weapons, they say, Prayers and Tears. But the truth is, the Jesuits (the Popes blood-hounds) trust more to the prey, then to their prayers: like Vultures, whose nests, as Aristotle saith, cannot be found, yet they will leave all games to follow an Army, because they delight to feed upon Carrion. Their faction is a most agile sharp sword, whose blade is sheathed, at pleasure in the bowels of every Common-wealth, but the handle reacheth to Rome and Spain: They strive under pretence of long prayers, and dissembled sanctity (which is double iniquity) to subdue all to the Pope, Pope, and the Pope to themselves. Satan, they say, sent Luther, and God sent them to withstand him. But that which Vegetius said of Chariots armed with sithes and hooks, will be every day more and more applyed to the Jesuits : at first they were a terrour, afterward a scorn. Lib. 1. cap. 24.

Verse 8. Be not ye therefore like unto them;] God would not have his Israel conform to the Heathens Customs, nor so much as once name their Idols, Exod. 23. 13. Psal. 16. 4. No more should Christians (as some are of opinion.) That of Cardinal Bembus is somewhat grosse, concerning their S. Francis, quòd in numerum Deorum ab Ecclesia Romana sit relatus. But this is like the rest : For if we may believe Baronius, we may see their lustrall water, and sprinkling of Sepulchers in Juvenals sixth Satyr : lights in Sepulchers, in Suetonius his Octavius : lamps lighted on Saturday, in Seneca's 96. Epistle ; distribution of Tapers among the people, in Macrob. Saturnals, &c. Pasor. praefat. ad Lexicon. In Histr. Venet. Non malè dixit Tertullianus, Philosophos esse Haereticorum Patriarchas. Baro. Annal. ad annum. 44.

For your heavenly Father knoweth what things ye need, &c.] And therefore answereth many times before we ask : as he did David, Psal. 32. He prevents us with many mercies we never sought him for ; that our prayses may exceed our prayers. I am found of them that sought me not, saith God : but yet in the same place it is said, I am sought of them that asked not for me. Importing, that we never seek to him for grace, till effectually called by his grace. Howbeit no sooner is any truly called, but he presently prayeth. Say not then, If God know our needs, what need we open them to him ? The truth is, we do it not to inform him of that he knows not, or to stir up mercy in him, who is all bowels, and perfectly pitieth us : But 1. Hereby we acknowledge him as a childe doth his father, when he runs to him for food. 2. We run that course of getting good things that he hath prescribed us, Jer. 29. 11, 12. Which Moses and Elias knew, and therefore the former turned Gods predictions, the later his promises into prayers. 3. Hereby we prepare our selves holily to enjoy the things we crave : for prayer both sanctifieth the creature, and encreaseth our love and thankfulness, Psal. 116. 1. 4. Prayer prepareth us, either to go without that we beg, if God see fit, as David, when he prayed for the childs life, and was fitted thereby to bear the loss of it ; or else to part with that we have got by prayer, for the glory of God the Giver of it. Those that make their requests known to God with thanksgiving, shall have (at least) the peace of God that passeth all understanding, to guard their hearts and minds in Christ Jesus. They shall have strength in their souls, the joy of the Lord shall be their strength, the glory of the Lord shall be their rereward. In their marching in the Wilderness, at the fourth Alarm, arose the Standard of Dan, Asher, and Nepthali ; these were the rereward of the Lords host ; and to these were committed the care of gathering together the lame, feeble and sick, and to look that nothing was left behind. Unto this the Prophet Isaiah seems (in that Text) to allude, and so doth David ; Psal. 27. 10. When my father and mother forsake me, the Lord will gather me ; And this comfortable assurance was the fruit of his prayer. Non sanè ut Deus instruatur ; sed ut mens nostra construatur. Luk. 11. 13. Exod. 9. 1 King. 18. φρουρήσει. Phil. 4. 6, 7. Psal. 138. 3. Nehe. 8. 10. Isa. 58. 8.

Verse 9. After this manner therefore pray ye,] Forms of wholesome words are profitable. A set from of prayer is held fittest for the publike ; and for such weak Christians as are not yet able to express their own desires in their own words. The utterance of wisdom is given to some Christians onely, 1 Cor. 12. 8. yet are all to strive unto it, that the testimony of Christ may be confirmed in them, 1 Cor. 1. 5, 6. God will take that at first, that afterwards will not be accepted. If words be wanting, pray that God, that commands thee to take words and come before him, to vouchsafe thee those words, wherewith thou mayest come before him. Speak, as the poor man doth, supplications : so did the Prodigal : Forecast also (with him) what thou wilt say : Premeditate of the matter, disposing it in due order (as one would do that is to speak to a Prince : God is a great King, Mal. 1. 23.) Some think we must never pray but upon the sudden, and extraordinary instinct and motion of the spirit. This is a fancy, and those that practise it, cannot but fall into idle repetitions, and be confused ; going forward and backward, like hounds at a loss (saith a good Divine) and having unadvisedly begun to speak, they know not how wisely to make an end. This to prevent, premeditate and propound to thy self fit heads of prayer : gather catalogues of thy sins and duties by the decalogue ; observe the daily straits of mortal condition, consider Gods mercies, As the just must live by his own faith, so must he get his living by his own prayers, 1 Pet. 3. 7. Your prayers, Hos. 14. 2. Prov. 18. 23. Parres Abba, Father.

your own infirmities, troubles from Satan, pressures from the world, crosses on all hands, &c. And as you cannot want matter, so neither words of prayer. The Spirit will assist, and God will accept, if there be but an honest heart and lawfull petitions. And albeit we cannot vary them as some can; our Saviour in his agony, used the self-same words thrice together in prayer; and so may we, when there is the same matter and occasion. He also had a set form of giving thanks at meat; which the two Disciples at Emaus hearing, knew him by it. A form then may be used, we see, when it is gathered out of the holy Scriptures, and agreeable thereunto. Neither is the spirit limited hereby: for the largeness of the heart stands not so much in the multitude and variety of expressions, as in the extent of the affection. Besides, if forms were unlawful, then neither might we sing Psalms, nor joyn in prayer with others, nor use the forms prescribed by God.

Luk. 24. 30, 31.

Our Father which art in heaven.] Tertullian calls this prayer, a breviary of the Gospel, and compend of saving doctrine: It is framed in form of the decalogue: the three former Petitions respecting God, the three latter, our selves and others. Every word therein hath its weight. Our, there's our charity: Father, there's our faith: In heaven, there's our hope. Father is taken sometimes personally, as in that of our Saviour, My father is greater then I; sometimes essentially, for the whole Deity, so here. Now, that God is in Heaven, is a notion that Heathens also have by nature: and do therefore in distress, lift up eyes and hands thither-ward. And lest man should not look upward, God hath given to his eyes peculiar nerves, to pull them up towards his habitation; that he might direct his prayer unto him, and look up, Psal. 5. 3. that he might feelingly say with David, Whom have I in Heaven, but thee? Unto thee I lift up mine eyes, O thou that dwellest in the Heavens. Behold, as the eyes of servants look to the hand of their Masters, &c. Psal. 123. 1, 2. It is reported of Farellus, that he preached so powerfully, that he seemed to thunder, and prayed so earnestly, that he seemed to carry his hearers with him up into heaven. But how oft (alass) do graceless men approach God with their leaden lips; and indeed reproach him in their formal prayers with that appellation, Our Father which art in Heaven? Those brain-sick disciples of Martin Steinbach of Selestad in Germany, who would needs mend magnificat (as they say) correct the Lords Prayer as not well composed, are not worth mentioning.

His glory is, as himself, eternally infinite; and so abideth, not capable of our addition or detraction. The Sun would shine, though all the world were blind, or did wilfully shut their eyes. Howbeit to try how we prize his glory, and how industrious we will be to promote it, God lets us know that he accounts himself, as it were, to receive a new being by those inward conceptions of his glory, and by those outward honours we do him: when we lift up his Name as a Standard, saying, Jevovah Nissi, The Lord is my banner, Exod. 17. 15. When we bear it up aloft (as the word used in the third Commandment, whereunto this petition answers, signifieth, as servants do their Masters badges upon their shoulders; Being confident (with S. Paul) of this very thing, that in nothing we shall be ashamed (whilest we hallow this holy God, Isa. 5. 16.) but that with all boldness, or freedom of speech, as always, so now Christ shall be magnified in our bodies, whether it be by life or death, Phil. 1. 20.

Verse 10. Thy Kingdom come.] Thy Kingdom of power and providence: but especially, enlarge thy Kingdom of grace, and hasten thy Kingdom of glory. The Jews pray almost in every prayer, Thy Kingdom come, and that Bimheroth, Bejamenu, quickly, even in our dayes. But it is for an earthly Kingdom: that which the Apostles also so deeply dreamt of, that our Saviour had very much ado to dispossess them. For most absurdly and unseasonably many times, they would ask him foolish questions that way, when he had been discoursing to them of the necessity of his own death, and of their bearing the cross. Yea, S. John very wisely interrupts him, one time among the rest, as weary of such sad matter, and laying hold on something our Saviour had said said by the by, tels him a story of another business. They were besotted with an odd conceit of honours and offices to be distributed here among them, as once in Davids and Solomons reign. And what shall we think of their opinion, that not content to affirm, that after the fall of Antichrist, the Jews shall have a glorious conversion, and the whole Church such a happy Halcyon, as never before; but also that the Martyrs shall then have their first resurrection, and shall raign with Christ a thousand years? Piscator holdeth, they shall so raign in heaven. Alstedius not onely saith, they shall raign here on earth, but beginneth his millenary about the year of our Lord, 1694. Let our hearts desire and prayer to God for Israel be, that they may be saved. Let us also pity and pray for such poor souls in Asia and America, as worship the devil: not inwardly onely (for so too many do amongst us) but with an outward worship. And this we should the rather do, because Divines think, that when all Israel shall be called, and as it were raised from the dead, Rom. 11. 15, 26. when those two sticks shall be joyned into one, Ezek. 37. 16. then shall many of those deceived souls, that never yet savingly heard of God, have part and portion in the same resurrection.

This they ground on Revel. 20. 4. Rom. 10. 1.

Thy will be done.] Gods will must be done of thee, ere his Kingdom can come to thee. If thou seek his kingdom, seek first his righteousness, If thou pray, Thy Kingdom come, pray also, Thy will be done. Pray it and do it; for otherwise, Thou compassest God with lies, as Ephraim did. Now the will of God is two-fold, Secret and Revealed, whatever Siguardus blasphemeth to the contrary. His revealed will again is four-fold, 1. His determining will concerning us, what shall become of us, Ephes. 1. 5. 2. His prescribing will, what he requires of us, Ephes. 1. 9. 3. His approving will, by the which he graciously accepts, and tenderly regards those that come to him in Faith and repentance, Matth. 18. 14. 4. His disposing will, and this is the will of his providence, 1 Cor. 1. 1. Rom. 1. 10. Now we should resign our selves over to his determining will, as the highest cause of all things: rest in his approving will, as our chiefest happiness: obey his prescribing will, as the absolutest and perfectest form of holiness; and be subject to his disposing will, being patient in all trials and troubles, because he did it, Psal. 39. 9. David hath this commendation, that he did all the Wills of God. And it is reported (saith Mr. Bradford) that I shall be burned in Smith-field, and that very shortly. Fiat voluntas Domini, Ecce ego, Domini, mitte me. The will of the Lord be done, said those good souls in the Acts, when they saw that Paul was peremptory to go up. This third petition, Thy will be done, &c. was the last Text that ever Mr. Beza handled, and thereupon died; and departed (rather then deceased) to do Gods will more perfectly in heaven, as he had done to his power on earth. They that thus do, and suffer the will of God, are his Hephtsibah, Isa. 62. 4. And it should be our constant care so to apply our selves thereunto, that God may take pleasure in us, as in men after his own heart, and say of us, as he did of Cyrus, He is the man of my will, that executeth all my counsel. This is to set the crown upon Christs head, Cant. 3. 11. Yea, this is to set the crown upon our own heads, 2 Tim. 4. 8, 9.

In earth, as it is in heaven.] By those heavenly Courtiers: The crowned Saints have no rest (and yet no unrest,) crying, Holy, holy, holy, &c. Which words also were Mr. Calvins symbolum, that he frequently sighed out, in the behalf of the distressed Churches. As for the glorious Angels, though they excel in strength, yet they do Gods Commandments, hearkning to the voyce of his Word. They rejoyce more in their names of service, then of honour, and ever stand before the face of our heavenly Father, as waiting a command for our good: and so willing of their way, that Gabriel is said to have come to comfort Daniel with weariness of flight. They do the will of God: 1. Chearfully; whence they are said to have wings, six wings a piece, Isa. 6. 2. 2. Humbly; therefore with two they cover their faces. 3. Faithfully, without partiality; with two they covered or harnessed their feet. 4. they do. 1. Justly; whence they are said (there) to be clothed in pure White linnen. 2. Diligently, and constantly; therefore they have their brest girded. 3. Verse 11. Give us this day.] We have not a bit of bread of our own earning, but must get our living by begging. Peter himself was to obtain his very bread by humble petition, how much more his salvation? He that shall go to God, as the Prodigal did, with, Give me the portion that pertaineth to me, shall receive the wages of sin, which is eternal death. God giveth meat in abundance (saith Elihu) That thou giveſt, they gather, saith David. And again, Thou giveſt them their meat in due ſeaſon. Now what more free then gift? Beggers also pay no debts, but acknowledge their insufficiency, and speak supplications in a low language, as broken men: so must we. Oh lie daily begging at the beautiful gate of heaven: look intently upon God, as he did, Act 3. upon Peter and John, expecting to receive something. And because Beggers must be no chusers, ask as our Saviour here directs, 1. for quality, bread onely, not manchet or junkets, but down-right household bread (as the word imports) the bread of carefulneſs or ſorrows, Psal. 127. 2. which the singing Psalms interpret, brown bread. Our Saviour gave thanks for barley-bread: and his Disciples were glad to make a Sabbath-dayes-dinner of a few ears of corn rubbed between their fingers. A very Philosopher could say, He that can feed upon green herbs, need not pleaſe Dionyſius, need not flatter any man. And Epicurus himself would not doubt to content himself as well as he that hath most, might he but have a morsel of course meat, and a draught of cold water. The Israelites had soon enough of their quails: they had Quails with a vengeance, because Manna would not content them. They died with the meat in their mouthes: and by a hasty testament, bequeathed a new name to the place of their burial, Kibroth-hattaavah, the graves of lust: Cibus & potus ſunt divitiæ Chriſtianorum, saith Hierom: Meat and drink are the Christian mans riches. Bread and Cheese (saith another) with the Gospel, is good chear. Nature is content with a little, grace with less, saith a third. A godly man as he asketh but for bread; so (2) for the quantity, but for daily bread, the bread of the day for the day, enough to bring him home with Jacob, so much onely as will bear his charges, till he return again to his fathers house. He passeth thorow the world, as Israel thorow the wilderness, content with his Omer by the day, with his Statute-measure, with his Fathers allowance. As he journeyeth to the promised Land, he bespeaks the world, as Israel did Edom, thorow whose Countrey they would have passed: Let me paſs thorow thy land. We will not turn aſide into the fields nor vineyards: neither will we drink of the water of thy Wells: we will go by the Kings-high way, until we be paſt thy countrey. And as a traveller when he cometh to his Inn, if he can get a better room or lodging, he will: as if not, he is content, for he considereth it's but for a night: So the Christian pilgrim. If God send him in a plentiful estate, he gladly makes use of it; as if otherwise he can live with a little: and if his means be not to his minde, he can bring his minde to his means, and live upon reversions. Give him but necessaries, he stands not upon superfluities. Give him but daily bread, that is, bread for neceſſity, saith the Syriack, so much as will hold life and soul together, saith Brentius. Sufficient to uphold and sustain nature, saith Beza (with the Greek Scholiast) that wherewith our nature and constitution may be content, and he is well apaid and satisfied: he cries out with Jacob, I have enough; and with David, The lines are fallen unto me in a fair place. A little of the creature will serve turn to carry him thorow his pilgrimage: in his Fathers house he knows is bread enough, Luk. 16. And on the hope of that he goes on as merrily, and feeds as sweetly as Sampſon did of his Honey-comb, or Hunniades, when he supped with he Shepheards.

Verſe 12. And forgive us our debts, &c.] Looſe us (ſaith the Original) and let us go free; for unpardoned ſinners are in the bond of iniquity, as Simon Magus; and remiſſion is called a relaxation, Rom. 3. 25. The guilt of ſin is an obligation, binding us over to condign puniſhment. God hath againſt us, Mat. 5. 23. even our hand-writing, which is contrary to us, Coloſſ. 2. 14. This David confeſſed againſt himſelf, Pſal. 32. 5. and upon his prayer obtained pardon. He onely acknowledged the debt, and God croſſed the book. God croſſed the black lines of his ſins with the red lines of his Sons blood. Thou forgaveſt me (ſaith David) the iniquity of my ſin; the malignity of it, the worſt thing that was in it. For this ſhall every one that is godly pray unto thee, by mine example, and obtain like favour. For our God is a ſin-pardoning God, Nehem. 9. 31. none like him, Micah 7. 18. He forgiveth ſin naturally, Exod. 34. 6. abundantly, Iſa. 55. 7. conſtantly, Joh. 1. 27. He doth take away the ſins of the world. Its a perpetual act of his, as the Sun doth ſhine, as the ſpring doth run, Zech. 13. 1. The eye is not weary of ſeeing, nor the ear of hearing: No more is God of ſhewing mercy. All ſins, yea, and blaſpemies ſhall be forgiven to the ſons of men, ſaith our Saviour: as the Sea covers not onely ſmall ſands, but huge rocks. Chriſt is the propitiation or covering for our ſins, are they how many, and how great ſoever, as was ſweetly ſhadowed of old by the Ark covering the Law, the mercy-ſeat covering the Ark, and the Cherubims over them, both covering one another. In alluſion whereunto, Bleſſed, ſaith David, is the man whoſe tranſgreſſion is forgiven, Whoſe ſin is covered. Bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth not ſin. A metaphor from Merchants, who when they will forgive a debt, do not put it into the reckoning, and ſo, do not impute it. Sin caſteth men deep into debt and arrerages with God. It is called a debt of ten thouſand Talents. It caſts a man into a comfortleſs condition, makes him hide his face for ſhame, as Adam, cauſeth a continual ſound of fear in his ears: ſo that he thinks every buſh a Bailiff, every ſhrub a Sergeant, &c. An evil conſcience hunts him, follows him up and down ſo cloſe, like a bloud-hound, hot-foot, that he ſometimes, ſerves himſelf, as that Jeſuite in Lancaſhire, followed by one that had found his glove, with a deſire to reſtore it to him; but purſued inwardly with a guilty conſcience, leaps over a hedge, plunges into a Marlepit behinde it unſeen and unthought of, wherein he was drowned. This and worſe is the caſe of a poor Bankrupt ſinner, he is caught and clapt up in priſon, laid faſt in bonds and chians of darkneſs; and what can he give in exchange for his ſoul? There's no ſeeing the Sergeant, nor ſhifting off the arreſt: ſooner or later, conſcience will ſerve him with a Writ to appear, and anſwer at the great Aſſizes, before Gods Tribunal. Neither doth ignorance excuſe him: for debt is debt, whether a man know of it or not, and will light ſo much the more heavily, by how much the execution is done upon him more unexpectedly. Now there is no way in the world of diſcharging this debt, but by the ſatisfaction of Chriſt our ſurety, who hath paid the utmoſt farthing for his Elect. This good Samaritan hath diſcharged all for us: and God for Chriſts ſake accounts of our ſins, as if they had never been committed. He binds them in a bundle, ſeals them up as in a bag, Dan. 9. 24. and caſteth them behinde him, as old evidences into the bottom of the Sea, and all, becauſe mercy pleaſeth him, Mica. 7. 19. This he doth at firſt converſion, when he juſtifieth a ſinner, Rom 3. And whereas in many things we ſin all, we have a pardon of courſes for thoſe weakneſſes, that are of daily incurſion, included in that general pardon, which we have upon our general repentance. Only he looketh we ſhould ſue out our pardon, by daily prayer for it. Intreat we God to remit our debts; and ſith he muſt be ſatisfied, to take it out of his Sons coffers, who is become ſurety for us; and ſaith unto his Father in effect, as Paul to Philemon, If this Oneſimus of mine hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account, ſo long as he prayes in my name for daily pardon. But whether ſhall we think leſs excuſable, thoſe Anabaptiſts in Germany that omit this Petition, Forgive us our treſpaſſes, (as conceiving themſelves to be pure, and to have no more need of remiſſion of ſins.) Or thoſe Atheiſts in Father Latimers dayes, who being not willing to forgive their Enemies, would not ſay their Pater Noſter at all. See the Note on verſe 15.

As we forgive our debtors.] Not as if God should therefore forgive us, because we forgive others; but this is the argument. We do and can, by Gods grace, forgive them, therefore God can and will much more forgive us; sith all our goodness is but a spark of his flame, a drop of his ocean. No Article of our Creed is so much opposed by Satan, as that of the foregiveness of sin by Christs merits, which is the very soul of a Church, and the life of a good soul. All the former Articles of the Creed are perfected in this, and all the following Articles are effects of this. Now one main means of settling us in the found assurance of the pardon of our own debts, is, if we can forgive our debtours. He that can put away all purpose of revenge, and freely forgive his brother, may with boldness ask and expect foregiveness at Gods hands. For mercy rejoyceth against judgment; and our love to others is but a reflex of Gods love to us. It is a fruit of justifying faith, Luke 17.4.5. It is also a sweet seal of our election, Col. 3. 12, 13. and an effectual expression of our thankfulness. For hereby our unrighteousness shall commend the righteousness of God, Rom. 3.5. both in respect of his admirable goodness in pardoning so great sins, and our thankful acknowledging of that grace in walking worthy of it.

James 2.13.

Quest. Now if any ask, Why the Petition for pardon of sin, is set after that for daily bread? It is answered, Answ. 1. In the four former Petitions we pray for good things, In the two later we pray against evil.

2. Our Saviour condescends herein to our infirmity, who can sooner trust God for pardon then provision, for a Crown then a crust.

3. That by an argument from the less to the greater, we may the more boldly beg spirituals.

Verse 13. And lead us not into temptation] Here we beg sanctification, as in the former Petition, Justification; and are taught after forgiveness of sins, to look for temptations, and to pray against them. Temptations are either of Probation (and so God tempts men) or of perdition, and so the Devil. Both Abrahams great temptations began with one strain, לך לך, Get thee gone, Gen. 12.1. Gen. 22.2. Here God led Abraham into temptation, but he delivered him from evil; yea, he tempted him and proved him, to do him good in his latter end. His usual way is, to bring us to heaven by hell-gates, to draw light out of darkness, good out of evil: As the skilful Apothecary maketh of a poysonful viper, a wholsom triacle; as the cunning Artificer with a crooked unsightly tool, frameth a streight and beautiful piece of work; as the Egyptian birds are said to pick wholsom food out of the Serpents eggs: or as the Athenian Magistrates by giving to Malefactors hemlock (a poysonous herb) preserved the Commonwealth. The Devil tempts either by way of seducement, James 1. 15. or grievance, 2 Cor. 12.7. In the former he excites our concupiscence, rubs the fire-brand, and makes it send forth many sparkles, carries us away by some pleasing object, as the fish by the bait. Yet hath he only a perswading sleight, not an enforcing might: our own concupiscence carrieth the greatest stroke. In the latter (those temptations of buffeting or grievance, horrid and hideous thoughts of Atheism, Idolatry, Blasphemy, Self-murther, &c.) himself, for most part, is the sole doer, to trouble us in our Christian course, and make us run heavily toward heaven. The Russians are so malicious one toward another, that you shall have a man hide some of his own goods in his house whom he hateth, and then accuse him for the stealth of them. Such is the Devils dealing oft-times with Gods dearest children: He darts into their hearts his detestable injections, and then would perswade them, that they are accessary to the act. Here our victory is, not to give place to the Devil, but to resist stedfast in the faith. Which that we may, pray we always with all prayer and supplication, Ephes. 6.18. pray as our Saviour did, Father keep them from the evil, or from wickedness, John 17. 15. Pray as our Saviour bids, Lead us not, &c. that is, either keep us from occasions of sin, or carry us over them. Either preserve us from falling into sin, or help us to rise out of sin by repentance: grant us to be either innocent or pertinent. Deliver us from those devoratory evils (as Tertullian calleth them,) such sins as might frustrate perseverance, 2 Thess. 3.3. And from that evil or wicked one, that he touch us not, 1 John 5. 18. that is, actu qualitativo (as Cajetan expounds it) with a deadly touch, so as to alter us from our gracious disposition. Howbeit, sin and temptation come both under one name in this petition, to warn us and teach us, that we can no further ſhun ſin, then we do temptation thereunto.

For thine is the Kingdom,] That is, all ſoveraignty is originally and tranſcendently inveſted in thee. Other Kings are but thy ſervants and feudataries, by thee thy raign, Prov.8.15. and of thee they receive their power, *Rom.*13.1. Where then will they appear, that ſay to the King Apoſtata, Job 34.18. that ſend meſſages after him, ſaying, We will not have this man to raign over us: that beſpeak him, as that Hebrew did Moſes, Who made thee a Prince and a Judge amongſt us? ſhould they not rather ſend a Lamb to this Ruler of the Earth? and bring a preſent to Fear? ſhould they not ſubmit to his Scepter, and confeſs his Soveraignty? Luk. 19.14. Exod.2.14. Iſa.16.1. Pſal.76.11.

And the power,] Some have Kingdoms, that yet want power to help their ſubjects: as that King of Iſrael that anſwered her, that had ſodden her child, in that ſharp famine of Samaria; where an Aſſes head was worth four pounds: If the Lord do not help, whence ſhall I help? But the King of heaven is never at ſuch a Non-plus, He can do whatſoever he will; and he will do whatſoever is meet to be done, for the good of his ſervants and ſuppliants. Peter wanted power to deliver Chriſt, Pilate wanted will, but God wants neither: what a comfort's that? Let us reſt on his mighty arm, and caſt the labouring Church into his everlaſting arms. He is able to do more then we can ask or think, and will not fail to keep that which we have committed unto him againſt that day, 2 Tim.1.14. 2 King.6.27. Deut.33.27. Eph.3.21.

And the glory,] To wit of granting our requeſts. Praiſes will follow upon prayers obtained, *Pſal.*50.15. what a man wins by prayer, he will wear with thankfulneſs. Now who ſo offereth praiſe, he glorifieth me, ſaith God: And the Gentiles did not glorifie God, neither were thankful, Rom. 1.21,28. But the 24 Elders aſcribe unto him glory and honour. And this is a moſt powerful Argument in Prayer, as are alſo the two former. And it pleaſeth God well, to hear his children reaſon it out with him luſtily, as Jacob did, and the woman of Cannan. Becauſe by ſhewing ſuch reaſons of their requeſts, as our Saviour here directs us, they ſhew proof of their knowledge, faith, confidence, &c. And beſides they do much confirm their own faith, and ſtir up good affections in prayer. Pſal. 50. ult. Rev.4.11. Gen.32.9,10, 11,12. Mat. 15. 25, 28.

Amen.] This Hebrew word, that remaineth untranſlated in moſt Languages, is either prefixed or prepoſed to a ſentence, and ſo it is a note of certain and earneſt aſſeveration; or elſe it is affixed, and oppoſed, and ſo it is a note either of aſſent or aſſurance. Of aſſent; and that either of the underſtanding to the truth of that that is uttered, as in the end of the Creed and four Goſpels; or of the will and affections, for the obtaining of our petitions, 1 Cor. 14.16. how ſhall he ſay Amen at thy giving of thanks? Of aſſurance next, as in this place, and many others. It is the voyce of one that believeth and expecteth that he ſhall have his prayers granted. It is as much as ſo be it, yea, ſo it ſhall be. It is uſed in all languages to betoken unity of Faith and ſpirit. Ainſw. Chriſtus Amen utitur quinquagies. Gerard.

Verſe 14. For if ye forgive men their treſpaſſes,] Our Saviour reſumeth, and inculcateth the fifth petition with a repetition; becauſe upon charity (which is chiefly ſeen in giving and forgiving) hangeth, after a ſort, the reſtfull ſucceſs of all our ſuits, 2 *Tim.*2.8. Malice is a leaven that ſwels the heart, and ſowres the Sacrifice, 1 Cor. 5.7,8. Out with it therefore, that we may keep the feaſt or holy-day; that we may (as we ought to do) keep a conſtant jubilee, nexus ſolvendo, & noxas remittendo. This fleſh and blood will not eaſily yield to. But We are not debters to the fleſh; we owe it nothing, but the blew eye that S. Paul gave it. When Peter heard that he might not recompenſe to any evil for evil, but muſt ſtudiouſly ſeek his converſion and ſalvation. Lord, ſaith he, how oft ſhall my brother ſin againſt me, and I forgive him? till ſeven times, this he thought a mighty deal; a very high pitch of perfection. Our Saviour tells him, till ſeventy times ſeven times, that is, infinitely, and without ſtint: yet he alludes to Peters ſeven, and as it were, illudes it, and his raſhneſs in ſetting bounds to this duty, and preſcribing, how oft, to him that was the wiſdom of the Father. Ἑορτάζωμεν. Rom.8.12. 1 Cor.4.27. Χαρισάμενοι.

This is when my brother returneth, and ſaith, It repents me: But what if he do not? Object.

In forgiving an Offendor, ſay Divines, there are three things. 1. The letting fall all wrath and deſire of revenge. 2. A ſolemn profeſſion of forgiveneſs. 3. Re-acceptance into former familiarity. repent; I must say, I remit, Luk. 18. To the third, a man is not bound till satisfaction be given.

Your heavenly Father will also forgive you.] Yet is not our forgiving men, the cause of his forgiving us, but a necessary antecedent. The cause is onely the free mercy of God in Christ. He puts away our iniquities for his own sake, Isa. 43.25. Nevertheless, forasmuch as he hath made us this promise here, our forgiving others (saith learned Beza) seemeth to have the nature of an intervenient cause, a cause, sine qua non, of his forgiving us.

Annot in Luk. 11.4.

Verse 15. But if ye will not, &c.] This is a matter much to be observed, therefore so often inculcated. Judgement without mercy, shall be to them that shew no mercy. There's but a hairs bredth betwixt him and Hell, that hath not his sins pardoned in Heaven. Such is the case of every one that doth not from his heart forgive his offending brother, Mat. 18.35. or that saith, I will forgive the fault, but not forget the matter, or affect the person. Men must forbear one another, and forgive one another, as Christ forgave them; and that if any man have a quarrel against any, Col. 3.13. for else what thanks is it? The glory of a man is to pass by an infirmity. It is more comfortable to love a friend, but more honourable to love an enemy. If thou reserve in thy minde any peece of the wrong, thou provokest and daily prayest God to reserve for thee a peece of his wrath; Which burneth as low as the nethermost Hell. Neither will it help any, to do as Latimer reporteth of some in his dayes, who being not willing to forgive their enemies, would not say their Pastor-noster at all: but instead thereof, took our Ladies-Psalter in hand; because they were perswaded, that by that, they might obtain forgiveness of their sins of favour, without putting in of so hard a condition as the forgiveness of their enemies into the bargain.

Jam. 2.13. Μεμφὴν. Prov 19.11. Deut. 32.22. Latym. Serm.

Neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.] And if he do not, who can give pardon or peace, saith he in Job? The Rhemists talk much of one that could remove Mountains, God onely can remove those mountains of guilt that lie upon the soul. Men may forgive the trespass, God onely the transgression. Against thee, thee onely have I sinned, saith David: And, to the Lord our God belongeth mercies and forgivenesses, saith Daniel. Ministers remit sins ministerially, as Nathan did; God onely authoritatively, and by his own power. If the Son set us free, we are free indeed, Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods pardoned ones? It is God that justifieth. Or as S. Austin readeth the words interrogatively, shall God that justifieth? No verily; that were to do and undo: he keepeth no back-reckonings. Fear not therefore, though the Devil or his Imps, or our own misgiving hearts condemn us: as the Prisoner careth not though the Goaler or his Fellow-prisoners condemn him, so long as the Judge acquiteth him.

Psal 51.4. Dan. 9.9.

Verse 16. Moreover, when ye fast.] Fast then they must, yea even after the Lords Ascension, when Gods Grace and Spirit was poured upon them in all abundance, Luk. 5.35. This exercise hath still the warrant and weight of a duty, as well from precepts as examples of both Testaments, And he that blamed the Pharisees here for fasting amiss, will much more blame those that fast not at all, The Israelites (besides other occasional) had their annual fast appointed them by God, Lev. 23.27. It was called a day of Expiations or Attonements in the plural; because of their many and sundry sins they were then to bewail and get pardon for. God had appointed them sundry Sacrifices for several sins: But forasmuch as it might not be safe to confess some sins to the Priest (as those that might bring them, by the Law, in danger of death) of his Grace he vouchsafed them this yearly fast, for expiation of their secret sins, and making their peace with their Maker, by a general humiliation. Now, albeit the circumstance of time be abolished, the equity of the duty abideth, and tieth us no less (if not more) then it did the Jews. Heathen Niniveh practised it: so did, in their superstitious way, the Ægyptian Priests, the Persian Magi, Indian Wizzards, Priamus in Homer, &c. The Turks at this day have their solemn fasts, (as before the fatal assault of Constantinople) wherein they will not so much as taste a cup of water, or wash their mouthes with water all the day long, before the Stars appear in the Skie: which maketh their fasts (especially in the Summer, when the dayes be long and hot,) to be unto them very tedious. In the year of grace 1030. there arose a Sect of Fasters, that affirmed, that to fast on Saturdaies with bread and water (as they called it) would suffice to the the remiſſion of all ſins; ſo that men bound themſelves to it by oath. And many French Biſhops voted with them: But Gerardus Epiſcopus Cameracenſis withſtood and abandoned them. So great ignorance was there, even then, of the merits of Chriſt among the Governours of the Church. The Papiſts ſlander us, that we count faſting no duty, but only a moral temperance, a faſting from ſin, a matter of meer policie: And out-brave us, as much as the Phariſees did the Diſciples with their often faſting. But, as we cannot but finde fault with their Faſts in that; Firſt, They ſet and appoint certain faſting-dayes howſoever, to be obſerved, upon pain of damnation, be the times clear or cloudy, &c. Secondly, They faſt from certain meats onely, not all; which is a meer mock-faſt, and a doctrine of devils, 1 Tim. 4.3. Thirdly, They make it a ſervice of God, yet conſecrate it to the Saints. Fourthly, They make ſhameful ſale of it. Fifthly, They aſcribe (as thoſe older Hereticks) merit unto it, even to the meer outward abſtinence, as theſe Phariſees did, and thoſe hyprocrites in Iſaiah, chap. 58. 3. Now as we cannot but condemn their ſuperſtition, ſo neither is our forlorn oſcitancy and dulneſs to this duty to be excuſed. God hath given us, alate eſpecially, many gracious opportunities of publike Humiliations, more, I think, then ever before, ſince the Reformation: But alaſs, how do many faſt, at ſuch times, for faſhion, fear of Law, or of meer form; ſo that they had need to ſend, as the Prophet ſpeaketh, for mourning Women, that by their cunning they may be taught to mourn, Jer. 9.17? And for private faſting, whether domeſticall with a mans family, Zech. 12.12. 1 Cor. 7.5. Acts 10.30. or perſonal by himſelf, as here, Matth. 6.17. We may ſeem to have dealt with it, as the Romans with the Tarquins: they baniſhed all of that name for Superbus his ſake. And as the Nicopolites are ſaid ſo to have hated the braying of an Aſs, that, for that cauſe, they would not endure the ſound of a Trumpet: So many are departed ſo far from Popiſh Faſts, that they faſt not at all; and ſo open the mouthes of the Adverſaries. But acquaint thy ſelf with this duty, thou that wouldeſt be acquainted with God. It is a fore-taſt of eternal life, when in holy practiſes we taſt the ſweetneſs of that heavenly Manna, this Angels food, thoſe ſoul-faſting viands, that makes us for a time, to forbear our appointed food. It is a help to the underſtanding of heavenly myſteries, as Daniel found it, Dan. 9. 20. It fits us for converſion, Joel 2. 12. and furthers it, Acts 9.9. Hence it is called a day of Humiliation, or of humbling the ſoul, Lev. 16. becauſe God uſually by that Ordinance gives an humble heart, to the which he hath promiſed both grace, 1 Pet. 5.5. and glory, Prov. 15.33. It ferrets out corruption, and is to the ſoul as waſhing to a room, which is more then ſweeping; or as ſcouring to the veſſel, which is more then ordinary waſhing. It ſubdues rebel-fleſh, which with fulneſs of bread will wax wanton, as Sodom, Jeſhurun, Ephraim. It teſtifies true repentance, by this holy revenge, 2 Cor. 7.11. whiles we thus amerce and puniſh our ſelves, by a voluntary for-going of the comforts and commodities of life, as altogether unworthy, Pſal. 35.13. What ſhall I ſay more? Hereby we are daily drawn to more obedience, and love to God, faith in him, and communion with him; a more holy frame of ſoul, and habit of heavenly-mindedneſs: Whence our Savionr, after this direction for faſting, immediately ſubjoyns that of laying up for our ſelves treaſure in heaven, ver. 19,20. And laſtly our prayers ſhall be hereby edged, winged, and made to ſoar aloft, which before flagged, fainted, and as it were groveled on the ground. Therefore our Saviour, here, next after matter of prayer, adds this of faſting, which is a neceſſary adjunct of prayer (that which is extraordinary eſpecially) as that which very much fits the heart for prayer, and the ſevere practiſe of repentance. Hence it is, that elſewhere, theſe two faſting and prayer go coupled, for moſt part, as Luk. 2.37. Matth. 17.21. 1 Cor. 7.5, &c A full belly, neither ſtudies, nor prayes willingly. Faſting enflames prayer, and prayer ſanctifies faſting; eſpecially, when we faſt and weep, Joel 2.13. faſt and watch, watch and pray, and take heed to both, Mark 13.33.

Be not as the hypocrites,] For they faſt not to God, Zech. 7.5, 11, 12. but to themſelves, they pine the body, but pamper the fleſh, they hang down their heads, Iſa. 58.5. but their hearts ſtand bolt upright within them. Their faſting is either ſuperſtitious or ſecure; whiles they reſt in the work done, or with opinion of merit; whereas the Kingdom of Heaven is not in meat and drink. And whether we eat or eat not, we are neither the more nor the leſs accepted of God; They faſt for ſtrife and debate, and to make their voyces to be heard on high: Whereas ſecrecy in this duty, is the beſt argument of ſincerity. They looſe not the bands of wickedneſs, nor break off their ſins by repentance: therefore therefore God regards not (which they repine at) but rejects their confidence, and answers them according to the idols of their hearts. When they fast, saith he, I will not hear their cry, Jer. 14. 1, 2. they are not a button the better for all they can do. Displeasing service proves a double dishonour; their outsideness is an utter abomination: they present the Great King with an empty cask, with a heartless sacrifice, with a bare carkass of Religion, as the Poets feign of Prometheus.

Of a sad countenance,] Make not a sowre face, look not grim and gastly, as the word signifieth; so that one would be afraid to look on them, they do so disfigure their faces, so wanze and wither their countenances, so deform, and (as S. Jerom rendreth it) demolish their natural complexions; pining themselves, to make their faces pale and meager, that they may be noted and noticed for great Fasters. Such a one was that Nonsuch Ahab, and those spungy bull-rushes, Isa. 58. 5. those hollow Hypocrites, Jer. 14. 12. that proud Patriarch of Constantinople, that first affected the stile of Universal Bishop; and is therefore pointed at by Gregory the Great, as the fore-runner of Antichrist: yet by his frequent fasting, this proud man merited to be sirnamed Johannes Nesteutes, John the Foster. Such pains men will put themselves to for a Name, so far they will trouble themselves to go to hell with credit. The Jesuits had set forth a Psalter, a little afore the Powder-Plot should have been acted, for the good success of a wicked counter-Parliament. And to encrease the iniquity, with wicked Jezabel, they would colour it with a fast: yea, with blasphemous Rabshakeh, they would by their hypocritical practises, bear the world in hand, that they came not up against us without the Lord.

That they may appear unto men to fast.] There is a great deal of seemingness, and much counterfeit grace abroad. The Sorcerers seemed to do as much as Moses, the Pharisees to do more, this way, then the Disciples. But bodily exercise profiteth little. Somewhat it may get at Gods hands, as Ahab, for a temporary repentance, had a temporal deliverance; such is Gods munificence, he is rich in mercy, to all that do him any duty. But if the leaves of this exercise be so medicinable, what is the fruit? If the shadow thereof be so soveraign, what the substance? If the shell so profitable, what the kernel? Oh let us rather seek to be good, then seem to be so: lest the Lord say of our outward shews, as Jacob said of Josephs Coat, Gen. 37. 33. the Coat is the Coat of my Son, some evil beast hath devoured him. So the outward form of their fasting, praying, practising, is the form of my Sons and Daughters, but some evil spirit hath devoured them, that use it in hypocrisie. Lest men also say unto such, as John Capocius did to Pope Innocent the Third, preaching peace, and sowing discord; You speak like a God, but do like a Devil. You are fair Professors, but foul sinners. And when the filthy sinner goes damned to Hell, what shall become of the seeming Saint? As the clown said to the Bishop of Cullen praying in the Church like a Bishop, but as he was Duke, going guarded like a Tyrant, Whither thinkest thou the Bishop shall go, when the Duke shall be damned?

Verse 17. But thou When thou fastest, anoynt thine head, &c.] Not but that a man is bound at such a time, to abridge himself of the comforts and delights of life, whence it is called a day of restraint, Joel 2. 15. and of afflicting the soul. biddeth, anoynt the head, at such a time, and wash the face, it is, as he expounds himself, that we may not appear to men to fast: In a private fast, eschewing wholly the shew: in a publike, not performing to the shew, or to this end, that we may be seen.

Verse 18. That thou appear not unto men to fast, &c.] Hypocrites fitly resemble the glow-worm, which seems to have both light and heat; but touch it, and it hath neither indeed. In the History of the World encompassed by Sir Francis Drake, it is recorded, that in a certain Island to the Southward of Celebes, among the Trees, night by night did shew themselves, an infinite swarm of fiery-seeming worms, flying in the Ayr, whose bodies no bigger then an ordinary Flie, did make a shew, and give such light, as if every Twig on every Tree had been a lighted Candle, or as if that place had been the Starry Sphear. This was but a semblance, but an appearance: no more is that of Hypocrites, but a flaunt, but a flourish. A sincere man is like a crystal-Glass with a light in the midst, which appeareth through every part thereof, so as that truth within, breaketh out in every parcel of his life. There is in his obedience to God, 1. An universality, he doth every as well as any part and point of Gods revealed will, so far as he knows it. 2. An uniformity, without prejudice or partiality, 1 Tim. 5. 21. without tilting the ballance of one side. Inequality of the leggs causeth halting, and an unequal pulse argues bodily distemper; so doth an unsuitable carriage an unsound soul. 3. Ubiquity: he is the same at home as abroad; in the closet as in the Congregation; and minds secret as well as open holiness: Joseph was one and the same in his Masters House, in the Prison and at Court; no changeling or Chamelion, not like the Planet Mercury, that is good in conjunction with good, and bad with bad. The godly mans faith is unfained, 1 Tim. 1. 5. his love cordial, 1 Joh. 3. 18. his wisedom undissembled, Jam. 3. 17. his repentance, a renting of the heart, Joel 2. 12. his fasting, and afflicting of the soul, with voluntary sorrows, till his heart be as sore within him as the Shechemites bodies were the third day after circumcision, Lev. 16, 31. & 23. 37. He truly ayms at pleasing God, and not at by-respects. This is truth in the inwards, Psal. 51. 6. this is that sincerity and truth, 1 Cor. 5. 8. that simplicity and godly sincerity, 2 Cor. 1. 12. A dainty word: It is a Metaphor (saith one) from such things as are tried by being held up against the beams of the Sun (as chap-men do in the choyce of their wares) to see what faults or flaws are in them. It is properly used (saith B. Andrews) of uncounterfeit wares, such as we may φέρειν εἰς ἥλιον, bring forth, and shew them in the Sun. And as a godly man is sincere, without wax, or gross matter, as he is unmingled, and true of heart, so he doth truth, Joh. 3. 21. he will not lye, Isa. 63. 9. that great real lie especially. Hypocrites in doing good, they do lies (by their delusion, as gross Hypocrites; by their collusion, as close Hypocrites.) Thus Ephraim compassed God with lies. His knowledge was but a form, his godliness a figure: his zeal a flash, all he did, a semblance: as these Pharisees onely appeared to fast and do other duties. But every fowl that hath a seemly feather, hath not the sweetest flesh; nor doth every Tree that beareth a goodly leaf, bring good fruit. Glass giveth a clearer sound then silver, and many things glister besides Gold. A true Christian cares as well to approve his inside to God, as his outside to the world: And it is a just question, whether the desire of being, or dislike of seeming sincere, be greater in him. He shews his worst to men, and best to God, as Moses did, when going to the Mount he pulled off his veil; and shents himself oft before God for that, which the world applauds in him. God he knows, seeth in secret, there's no tempting him with Ananias and Saphira, to try whether he tryeth the hearts or not. His sharp nose easily discerneth, and is offended with the stinking breath of rotten lungs, though the words or outward actions be never so sented and perfumed with shews of holiness.

Thy Father, which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly,] He is the rewarder of all that diligently seek him in this soul-fasting exercise: which as it was seen and allowed by the Lord Christ, Luk. 5. 33. so it was never rightly used without effect: It is called the day of Reconciliation or Attonement, and hath most rich and precious promises, Joel 2. 13. to the 21. Its sure, God will pardon our sins, and that carries meat in the mouth of it, Psal 42. 1, 2. Its probable, that he'l leave a blessing behind him (and the rather, that we may therewith chearfully serve him) even a meat-offering and a drink-offering to the Lord our God: according to that of the Psalmist; There is mercy with thee that thou thou mayest be feared, i.e. served. Fulness of bread was Sodoms sin, and in those sacrificing Sodomites, Isa.1.10. it was noted for an inexpiable evil, *Isa.*22.14. They that fast not on Earth, when God calls to it, shall be fed with gall and wormwood in hell: they that weep not among men, shall howl among devils: whereas those that sow in tears shall reap in joy, they that mourn in time of sinning, shall be marked in time of punishing: and as they have sought the Lord with fasting, so shall he yet again be sought and found of such with holy feasting; as he hath promised and performed to his people in all Ages of the Church, not an instance can be alledged to the contrary. Those three great Fasters met gloriously upon Mount Tabor. The Israelites fasting (and not till then) were victorious, *Judg.*20. Jehosaphat was delivered, Esther and her people reprieved, Daniel had visions from heaven, Ezra help from heaven. And surely if with fasting and prayer we can wrestle with God, as Jacob, we need not fear Duke Esau, with his 600 cut-throats coming against us. Si Deus nobiscum, quis contra nos. Numa being told that his enemies were coming upon him as he was offering Sacrifices, thought it sufficient for his safety, that he could say, At ego rem divinam facio, but I am about the service of my God. When Jehosaphat had once established a preaching Ministery in all the Cities of Judah, then, and not till then, the fear of the Lord fell upon the neighbour Nations, and they made no war; albeit he had before that placed forces in all the fenced Cities. Leotine Prince of Wales, when he was moved by some about him to make war upon our Henry the third, Replyed thus: I am much more afraid of his Alms then of this Armies. Fredrick the Elector of Saxony, intending war against the Archbishop of Magdeburg, sent a spy to search out his preparations, and to hearken out his designs. But understanding, that the Archbishop did nothing more then commit his cause to God, and give himself to fasting and prayer, Alius, inquit insaniat, &c. Let him fight, said he, that hath a minde to it: I am not so mad as fight against him, that trusts to have God his defender and deliverer. It is reported, that at the siege of Mountabone, the people of God, using daily humiliation, as their service would permit, did sing a Psalm after, and immediately before their sallying forth; with which practice the enemy coming acquainted, ever upon the singing of the Psalm (after which they expected a sally) they would so quake and tremble, crying, They come, they come, as though the warth of God had been breaking out upon them. The Souldiers that went against the Angroginans (where God was sincerely serv'd amidst a whole Kingdom of Papists) told their Captains they were astonished, they could not strike. Some others said, that the Ministers, with their fasting and prayer, conjured and bewitched them, that they could not fight. It was the custome of this poor people, so soon as they saw the enemy to approach, to cry altogether for ayd and succour to the Lord, &c. while the Souldiers fought, the rest of the people with their Ministers, made their hearty prayer to God, with sighs and tears, and that from the morning to the evening: when night was come, they assembled again together. They which had fought, rehearsed Gods wonderful ayd and succour, and so all together rendred thanks. Alway he turned their sorrow into joy. In the morning, trouble and affliction appeared before them, with great terrour on all sides: but by the evening they were delivered, and had great cause of rejoycing and comfort.

Verse 19. Lay not up for your selves treasures upon earth.] This is the fourth common-place handled here by our Saviour, of casting away the inordinate care of earthly things, which he presseth upon all, by nine several arguments, to the end of the Chapter. By treasures here are meant worldly wealth in abundance, precious things stored up, as silver, gold, pearls, &c. All these are but earth, and it is but upon earth that they are laid up. What is silver and gold, but white and yellow earth? And what are pearls and precious stones, but the guts and garbage of the earth? Dan. 2.45. The stone brake in pieces, the iron, the brass, the clay, and silver, &c. The Prophet breaks the native order of speech, for clay, iron, brass, silver, &c. to intimate (as some conceive) that silver is clay, by an elegant allusion in the Chaldee, should we load our selves with thick clay? Surcharge our hearts with cares of this life, Luke 21.34? *Gen.*13.2. It is said, Abraham was very rich in cattel, in silver and in gold. There is a Latine translation that hath it, Abraham was very heavy. And the Original indifferently beareth both: to shew (saith one) that riches are a heavy burthen, and a hinderance many times to heaven and happiness. They that have this burthen upon their backs, can as hardly hardly get in at the ſtraight gate; as a Camel or Cable into a needle, and that becauſe they truſt in their riches (as our Saviour there expounds himſelf) and here plainly intimates, when he ſpeaketh of laying up treaſures; providing thereby for hereafter, for to morrow (ſo the word ſignifieth) and thinking themſelves ſimply the ſafer, and the happier for their outward abundance, as the rich fool did, The rich mans wealth is his ſtrong City, ſaith Solomon, his wedge, his confidence, his gold, his god; therefore S. Paul calleth him an Idolater, S. James an Adulterer, becauſe he robs God of his flower, his truſt; and goeth a whoring after lying vanities: he ſoweth the winde, and reapeth the whirlwind: he treaſureth up wealth, but withall wrath, Jam. 5. 3. and by counting all fiſh that cometh to Net, he catcheth at length, the Devil and all. Hence it is that S. James bids ſuch (and not without cauſe) Weep and howl for the miſeries that ſhall come upon them. He looks upon them as deplored perſons, and ſuch as the Philoſopher could call and count incurable and deſperate. For the heart that is firſt turned into earth and mud, will afterwards freeze and congeal into ſteel and adamant, The Phariſees that were covetous derided Chriſt, and periſhed irrecoverably. And Reprobates are ſaid by S. Peter to have their hearts exerciſed with covetous practices, which they conſtantly follow, as the Artificer his Trade, being bound Apprentices to the Devil, 2 Cor. 2. 11. Leſt Satan ſhould get an advantage againſt us, or over-reach us, as covetous wretches do ſilly Novices. Theſe as they have ſerved an ill Maſter, ſo they ſhall receive the reward of unrighteouſneſs, and periſh in their corruptions, 2 Pet. 2. 12, 13. Their happineſs hath been laid up in the Earth, nearer Hell then Heaven, nearer the Devil then God, whom they have forſaken, therefore ſhall they be written in the Earth, that is, in Hell, as it ſtands oppoſed to having their names written in Heaven. Thoſe that are earthly minded have damnation for their end. God to teſtifie his diſpleaſure, knocks his fiſts at them, Ezek. 22. 13. as Balac did at Balaam. And leſt they ſhould reply, Tuſh, theſe are but big words, deviſed on purpoſe to affright ſilly people: we ſhall do well enough with the Lord; he addeth, verſ. 14. Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be ſtrong in the days that I ſhall deal with thee? I the Lord have ſpoken it, and will do it. Oh that our greedy muck-moles (that lye rooting and poring in the earth, as if they meant to dig themſelves thorow it, a nearer way to hell) would conſider this before the cold grave holds their bodies, and hot Tophet burn their ſouls! the one is as ſure as the other, if timely courſe be not taken, O ſæculum nequam, ſaith S. Bernard; O moſt wretched and miſerable world, how little are thy friends beholding to thee; ſeeing thy love and friendſhip expoſeth them to the wrath and vegeance of God, which burneth as low as the nethermoſt Hell! How fitly may it be ſaid of thee, as Solinus of the River Hipanis: they that know it at firſt commend it, they that have experience of it at laſt, do not without cauſe condemn it? Thoſe that will be rich, are reſolved to get rem rem, quocunq; modo rem, as he ſaith, theſe fall neceſſarily into many noiſom luſts that drown men in deſtruction: deſperately drown them in remedileſs miſery (as the word ſignifieth) Chriſt muſt be prayed to be gone, ſaith that Martyr, leſt all their Pigs be drowned. The Devil ſhall have his dwelling again in themſelves, rather then in their Pigs: Therefore to the Devil ſhall they go, and dwell with him, &c. They feed upon carrion, as Noahs Raven; upon duſt, as the Serpent; upon the worlds murthering-morſels, as thoſe in Job, They ſwallow down riches, and are inſatiate, as the Phariſees, Luk. 11. 41. but they ſhall vomit them up again, God ſhall caſt them out of their bellies. Their mouths that cryed, Give, Give, with the horſe-leech, ſhall be filled ere long with a ſhovelful of mould, and a cup of fire and brimſtone poured down their wide gullets. It ſhall be worſe with them, then it was once with the covetous Chaliph of Babylon, who being taken, together with his City by Haalon, brother to Mango the great Chan of Tartary, was ſet by him in the middeſt of the infinite treaſure which he and his Predeceſſors had moſt covetouſly heaped up together, and bidden of that gold, ſilver and precious ſtones take what it pleaſed him to eat, ſaying, by way of deriſion, That ſo gainful a gueſt ſhould be fed with the beſt, whereof he willed him to make no ſpare. The covetous Caitiff, kept for certain dayes, miſerably died for hunger, in the midſt of thoſe things whereof he thought he ſhould never have had enough, whereby he hoped to ſecure himſelf againſt whatſoever dearth or danger. God loveth to confute carnal men in their confidences. They ſhall paſs on hardly beſtead and hungry; and it ſhall come to paſs, that when they ſhall be hungry, they ſhall fret themſelves, and curſe their King, and their their God, and look upward. And they shall look unto the Earth (where they have laid up their happiness, but now lost their hopes) and behold trouble and darkness, dimness of anguish: and they shall be driven into darkness, Isa.8.21,22. utter darkness; where their Never-enough shall be quitted with fire enough, but a black fire, without the least glimpse of light or comfort.

Where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where Thieves, &c.] A powerful dissuasive from earthly-mindedness, by the uncertainty of Riches, ever subject to a double danger or waste. 1. Of vanity in themselves. 2. Of violence from others; rust or robbery may undo us. As the fairest flowers or fruit-trees breed a worm oftentimes, that eats out the heart of them. As the Ivie killeth the Oak that beareth it; so, of the matter of an earthly Treasure grows moth or rust that rots it. All outward things are of a perishing nature, they perish in the use, they melt away betwixt our fingers. S. Gregory upon those words in Job, Qui ingreditur in thesauros nivis? Who hath entered into the Iob 38. 22. treasures of the snow? sheweth, that earthly treasures are treasures of snow. We see little children what pains they take to rake and scrape snow together to make a snow-ball; which after a while dissolves and comes to nothing: Right so, the treasures of this world, the hoards that wicked men have heaped, when God entreth into them, come to nothing. He that trusteth to his riches shall fall, Prov.11.28. as he shall that standeth on an hillock of Ice, or heap of Snow. David, when got upon his Mountain, thought himself cock-sure, and began to crow, that he should never be moved. But Psal.30.6,7. God (to confute him) had no sooner hid his face, but he was troubled. What's the Ayr without light? The Ægyptians had no joy of it: no more can a Christian have of wealth without Gods favour. Besides, what hold is there of these earthly things? more then there is of a flock of Birds? I cannot say they are mine, because they sit in my yard. Riches have wings, saith Solomon, great Eagles wings to flee from us, saith Prov.23.5. a Father; but to follow after us, Ne passerinas quidem, not so much as small sparrows wings. Whereupon Solomon rightly argues, Wilt thou set thine eyes upon that which is not? that hath no real subsistence, that is, nothing, and of no more price, then meer opinion sets upon it? The world calls wealth substance, but God gives that name to wisdom onely. Heaven is said to have a foundation, earth to be hanged upon nothing. Iob. So, things are said to be in Heaven, as in a Mansion; but on Earth, on the surface only, Ἐν ἐφεμοῖς ἐπὶ τ γῆς. as ready to be shaken off. Hence the world is called a sea of glass, frail and fickle, Revel.15.2. mingled with fire of temptations and tribulations. The very firmanent (that hath its name 2 Pet.3.10. from its firmness) shall melt with fervent heat, and the whole visible fabrick be dissolved חלוף by the fire of the last day. Solomon sets forth the world by a word that betokeneth change, Prov.31.8. for its mutability. And S. Paul, when he telleth us, That the fashion of the world passeth עולם away, useth a word of Art, that signifieth a bare external mathematical figure, Cui hoc est, mundi, sic dicti quod transeat, nec quicquam in eò stabili sit. Kimhi. veri aut solidi nihil subest, saith an Interpeter, that hath no truth or solidity in it at all. Gillimer King of Vandals, being conquered, and carried in triumph by Belisarius the Roman General, when he stood in the open field before the Emperour Justinian, and beheld him sitting in his throne of State, remembring withall what an high pitch Funccius anno 528. himself was fallen from, he broke out into this speech, Vanity of vanities, all is vanity. That was Solomons verdict, long since delivered up, upon well-grounded experience. Iithron. But men love to try conclusions; and when they have done, What profit, saith he, Eccles.1.3. hath a man of all his pains? what residue and remaining fruit (as the word signifieth) to abide with him? When all the account is subducted (his happiness resolved into its final issue and conclusion) there resteth nothing but Ciphers. A Spider evisceratheth himself, and wasteth his own bowels to make a web to catch a flie: so doth the worlding for that which profiteth not, but perisheth in the use: Or say that it abide, yet himself perisheth, when to possess the things he hath gotten might seem a happiness; as the rich fool, Alexander, Tamberlain, others. Most of the Cæsars gat nothing by their adoption or designation, but ut citius interficerentur, that they might be the sooner slain. All, or most of them till Constantine, dyed unnatural deaths, Jer.17.11. and in the best of their time. He that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them Eccles.5.15. in the midst of his dayes, and at his end shall be a fool. God will make a poor fool of him. As he came forth of his Mothers womb, naked shall he return, to go as he came, and shall take nothing of his labour, which he may carry away in his hand. Say his treasure escape both rust and robber, death as a Thief will break in, m, and leave him not worth a groat. Who would not then ſet light by this pelf, and put on that Perſian reſolution, *Iſa.*13.17. Not to regard ſilver, nor be deſirous of gold? who would not tread in the ſteps of faithful Abraham, and anſwer the devil with his golden offers, as he did the King of Sodom, God forbid that I ſhould take of thee ſo much as a ſhoe-latchet? when great gifts were ſent to Luther, he refuſed them with this brave ſpeech, Valde proteſtatus ſum me nolle ſic ſatiari à Deo, I deeply proteſted that God ſhould not put me off with ſuch poor things as theſe. The Heatheniſh Romans had, for a difference in their Nobility, a little ornament in the form of a Moon (to ſhew that all worldly honors were mutable) and they did wear it upon their ſhoes (to ſhew that they did tread it under their feet) as baſe and bootleſs. This is check to many Chriſtians, that have their hands elbow-deep in the world, and dote as much upon theſe earthly vanities, as Xerxes once did upon his Plane-tree, or Jonas upon his gourd. There is a ſort of men that ſay of the world at Solomons chapman, It is naught, it is naught: but when they are gone apart, they boaſt and cloſe with the world. S. Paul was none of theſe; for neither at any time, ſaith he, uſed we flattering words, as ye know; nor a cloak of covetouſneſs, God is my witneſs. No; he looked upon the world as a great dung-hill, and cared to glory in nothing, ſave in the croſs of Jeſus Chriſt, whereby the world was crucified to him, and he to the world. So David, My ſoul, ſaith he, is even as a weaned child, that cares not to ſuck, though never ſo fair and full a breaſt. So Luther confeſſeth of himſelf, that though he were a frail man, & ſubject to imperfections, yet the infection of covetouſneſs never laid hold of him: now I would we were all Lutherans in this, ſaith one, &c.

Gal.6.14. He was a very crucifix of mortification.

Verſe 20. But lay up for your ſelves treaſures in heaven] That which you may draw out a thouſand year hence. For in a treaſure there are three things; a laying up, a lying hid, and a drawing out for preſent uſe. Riches reach not to eternity. Therefore whiles others lay hold upon riches, Lay thou hold on eternal life, 1 Tim 6.12. and that by following after righteouſneſs, godlineſs, faith, love, patience, meekneſs. This, this is the true treaſure; this is to be rich, as our Saviour ſpeaketh, toward God, and is oppoſed to laying up treaſure for himſelf, Luke 12.21. as here, laying up treaſure in heaven, is to that of laying up treaſure in earth. Both cannot be done, becauſe the heart cannot be in two ſo different places at once. The Saints have their commoration on earth, but their converſation is in heaven. Here are their bodies, but their hearts are, where Chriſt their head is. Sancti ibi ſunt ubi nondùm ſunt, & non ſunt ubi ſunt, ſaith Chryſoſtome. The Saints are there, in their affections, whither as yet they are not come in their attainments. All their plowing, ſailing, building, planting, tends to that life that is ſupernal, ſupernatural; they run for the high prize, they ſtrive for the crown of righteouſneſs, they breathe after the beatifical viſion, with, Oh when ſhall I come and appear before God! And as the Athenians, when they were beſieged by Sylla, had their hearts with him without the walls, though their bodies were held within by force: So the Saints, though detained here for a while in a far countrey, yet their hearts are at home. They go through the world, as a man whoſe mind is in a deep ſtudy, or as one that hath ſpecial haſte of ſome weighty buſineſs; they wonder much how men can awhile to pick up ſticks and ſtraws with ſo much delight and diligence. The time is ſhort (or truſſed up into a narrow ſcantling) the task is long, of keeping faith and a good conſcience; hence they uſe the world, as if they uſed it not, as having little leiſure to trifle. There's water little enough to run in the right chanel, therefore they let none run beſide; but carefully improve every opportunity, as wiſe merchants, and care not to ſell all, to purchaſe the pearl of price. In a witty ſenſe (ſaith Broughton out of Rabbi Bochai) Cain and Abel contain in their names advertiſements for matter of true continuance and corruption. Cain betokeneth poſſeſſion in this world, and Abel betokeneth one humbled in mind, and holding ſuch poſſeſſion vain. Such was his offering, ſheep-kind, the gentleſt of all living beaſts, and therefore the favour of God followed him. And the offering of Cain was of the fruit of the earth, as he loved the poſſeſſion of this world, and the ſervice of the body (which yet can have no continuance) and followed after bodily luſts. Therefore the bleſſed God favoured him not. Cains chief care was to build Cities, that he might call his Land after his own name, Pſal.49.11. and make his ſon, Lord Enoch of Enoch. Not ſo the better ſort, Abel, Henoch, Noah, Abraham, they were content to dwell in tents, as looking for a City, which hath foundations, whoſe maker and founder is God. Abraham bought a piece of ground, but for burial only. Iſhmael ſhall beget twelve Princes, but with Iſaac will I eſtabliſh my Covenant; and although he grow not ſo great as his brother (that man of Gods hand, that had his portion here) here) yet he shall make reckoning, that the lines are fallen unto him in a fair place, that he hath a goodly heritage. Esau had his Dukes, and grows a great Magnifico: but Jacob gets first the birth-right for a mess of red, red, which the hungry hunter required to be fed with, as Camels are fed by casting gobbets into their mouthes (so the word signifies:) And after this, he gets the blessing by his mothers means. And when Esau threatned him, and had bolted out some suspicious words, she seeks not to reconcile the two brethren, by making the younger yield up again what he had got from the Elder; but prefers the blessing before Jacobs life, and sends him away. This was to lay up treasure in heaven, for her son, who took herein after the mother too. For if Esau will but suffer him to settle in the Land of promise, a type of heaven; he will spare for no cost to make his peace. Silver and gold he hath none, but cattel good store: 550 head of them sends he for a present, to make room for him, as Solomon hath it. Let heaven be a mans object, and earth will soon be his abject. David counts one good cast of Gods countenance far better then all the corn and oyl in the Countrey. Solomon craves wisdom and not wealth. Paul counts all but dross, dung, and dogs-meat, so he may win Christ, and get home to him. Here we have but a glimpse of those gleams of glory, we see but as in a glass obscurely: Our life is hid with Christ in God, as the pearl lies hid, till the shell be broken. Compare the estate of Prince Charls in his Queen-mothers womb, with his condition at full age, in all the glory of his fathers Court: there is not so broad a difference as betwixt our present enjoyments (albeit our joys here are unspeakable glorious) with those we shall have hereafter. Sursum igitur cursum nostrum dirigamus. Let therefore our affections and actions, our counsels and courses, be bent and bound for heaven: our earthly businesses dispatch with heavenly minds, and in serving men, let us serve the Lord Christ. The Angels are sent about Gods message to this earth, yet never out of their heaven, never without the vision of their maker. These earthly things distract not, if we make them not our treasure, if we shoot not our hearts over-far into them. The end of a Christians life is (not as Anaxagoras dreamed of the life of man, to behold the heavens, but) to live in heaven. This he begins to do here by the life of faith, by walking with God, as Enoch and Elias, those Candidates of immortality (so the Ancients called them) by walking before God, as Abraham and David by walking after God, as the Israelites were bidden to do. With God, a man walks by an humble friendship and familiarity; before him, by uprightness and integrity; after him, by obedience and conformity, by doing his will on earth, as it is in heaven. And this is, to lay up treasure in heaven; this is, as the Apostle expresseth, and interpreteth it, to lay up in store for our selves a good foundation against the time to come, that we may lay hold on eternal life, 1 Tim. 6. 19. There shall be stability of thy times, strength, salvation, wisdom and knowledge; for the fear of the Lord shall be his treasure, Isa. 33. 6.

Verse 21. For where your treasure is, &c.] i.e. Where your chief happiness is, there your affections will be settled: Where the carcase is, there will the Eagles be also. Beetles delight in muck-hills; but Christs Eagles are never in their pride, till farthest off from the earth: they are said (even here) to be set together with Christ in heavenly places. The Church in the Canticles, hath this given her for an high commendation, That she had a nose like the Tower of Lebanon, Si verborum faciem spectemus, saith an Interprerer, quid poterit magis dici ridiculum? The words at first sight seem somewhat strange; for what so great a praise is it, to have a nose like a tower? But by this expression is notably set forth that spiritual sagacity and sharpness of smell, whereby the Saints resent and savour the things above, being carried after Christ the true carcase, with unspeakable desire and delight. The earthly-minded, that have their bellies filled with Gods hid treasure, the trash of this world, and take it for their portion; these have their heads so stuft, and their eyes so stopt with the dust of covetousness, that they neither see nor savour heavenly things. As they are of the earth, so they speak of the earth, and the earth hears them. As the Grashopper is bred, liveth and dyeth in the same ground: so these terrigenæ fratres, these muck-minded men, are wholly earth in their whole course. And as the Grashopper hath wings, but flyeth not, sometimes she hoppeth upwards a little, but falleth to the ground again: so these have some light and short motions to godliness, when they hear a piercing sermon, or feel a pressing affliction, or see others snatcht away by sudden death before them: but this is not of any long continuance, they return return to their former worldlineſs. The Devil hath got full poſſeſſion of them, as once of Judas by this ſin, and could a man rip up their hearts, he might find there fair written, The God of this preſent world. He holds his black hand before their eyes, leſt the light of the glorious Goſpel ſhould ſhine upon them. We cry, O earth, earth, earth, Hear the Word of the Lord: but the Devil hath made a path-way over their hearts, ſo that the ſeed cannot enter. Earth is cold and dry, ſo are earthly-minded men to any holy duty. Earth is heavy, and bears downward, ſo do earthly affections. Earth doth often keep down the hot exhalations, that naturally would aſcend; ſo do thoſe holy motions and meditations. Earth ſtands ſtill, and hath the whole circumference carried about it; ſo are Gods mercies and judgements about earthly-minded men, and they are no whit moved thereat. Grace, on the other ſide, as fire, is active and aſpiring. And as Moſes would not be put off with an Angel to go before the people, he would have God himſelf, or none: ſo the true Chriſtian muſt have Chriſt, or nothing will give him content. Chriſt is his treaſure, and hath his heart; all his cry is, None but Chriſt, none but Chriſt. As the Sun draws up vapours, ſo doth the Sun of righteouſneſs the affections of his people. And as the hop in its growing, windeth it ſelf about the pole, always following the courſe of the Sun, from Eaſt to Weſt, and can by no means be drawn to the contrary, chuſing rather to break then yield: So the Saints (as well militant as triumphant) do follow the Lamb whereſoever he goeth; and being riſen with Chriſt, and ſpiritualized by him, they ſeek the things that are above; their thoughts feed upon the faireſt objects (ſuch as are thoſe ſet down by the Apoſtle, Phil. 4.8.) and run with much content, upon that firmament, and thoſe ſtars in Daniel, That inheritance undefiled and unfadable in Peter, thoſe palms and white robes in the Revelation. They take ever and anon a turn or two on Tabor, and are there transfigured with Chriſt; or on Mount Olivet, where he was taken up, and have thence continual aſcenſions in their hearts. And as our Saviour in the interim between his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion, whiles he walked here on the earth, ſpake of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God, and waited for his exaltation into heaven: So the faithful Chriſtian (that hath his part in the firſt Reſurrection) walks in his meaſure, as Chriſt walked, talks as he talked, he ſpeaks of the things concerning the King, and therein his tongue is as the pen of a ready writer. Of Origen it is ſaid, that he was ever earneſt, but never more then when he treats of Chriſt. And of S. Paul it is well obſerved, that when he ſpeaketh of heaven, he uſeth a tranſcendent, lofty kind of language, his ſpeech riſeth higher and higher, as 2 Cor. 4.17. a degree above the ſuperlative: So Phil. 1.23. to be with Chriſt, is far far the better: ſo 1 Theſſ. 2.19. See how the Apoſtles mouth is opened, his heart enlarged, he cannot ſatisfie himſelf, nor utter his conceptions. This a Chriſtian can do, he can ſigh out a cupio diſſolvi, I deſire to be with Chriſt, whom as he more or leſs enjoyeth here, in the ſame meaſure he is merry; like as birds never ſing ſo ſweetly, as when they are got in the ayr, or on the top of trees. As when Chriſt withdraws his gracious preſence and influence, he is all amort, you may take him up for a dead man. He cryes after Chriſt, as Idolatrous Micah did after his loſt gods: And as King Edward the third having the King of France priſoner here in England, and feaſting him one time moſt ſumptuouſly, preſſed him to be merry. The French King anſwered, How can we ſing ſongs in a ſtrange land? So the good ſoul is in great heavineſs, while Chriſt abſents himſelf, and never heartily merry, till ſhe get home to him, till ſhe lay hold on him, whom her ſoul loveth.

Verſe 22. The light of the body is the eye, &c.] Here our bleſſed Saviour illuſtrateth what he had ſaid before, of laying up, not on earth, but in Heaven, by a fit ſimilitude. Like as the eye is the light of the whole body; ſo is the mind of the whole man. If therefore thine eye be ſingle, that is, if thy mind be ſincere: If thou have that one eye of the Spouſe in the Canticles, that one heart promiſed in the new Covenant, ſet upon God alone, and not divided, and as it were cloven aſunder (which is to have a heart and a heart) but minding the one thing neceſſary, as the main; and be not double-minded, or corrupted from the ſimplicity of Chriſt: then ſhall thy whole body, that is, thy whole, both conſtitution and converſation be lightſom, diaphanous, tranſparent, as a lanthorn that hath a candle in it, or as a cryſtal glaſs with a light in the midſt, which appeareth through every part thereof. There will be an uniformity, æquability, ubiquity and conſtancy of holineſs running thorow thy whole courſe, as the warp doth thorow the woof;

ly Ghost may let many things enter into it at other gates, yet must it keep the East-gate, the most illuminate and highest power and part of it, continually shut against all men;
yea, against all the world; and opened onely to one thing, I mean to God, who hath already entered into it, and enlighned it with his Spirit. That as at the windows of Noahs ark, there entred in no mist nor water, nothing else but one thing only, which is light; so at this East-gate, no mist of humane errors, no water of worldly cares may enter in, but only the light of heaven, and a sanctified desire to be fast knit, and perfectly united by faith and love to God.

evil eye is here opposed to a single eye, that looks on God singly abstracted from all other

Church, and imbrace this preſent world: and like the Mariners, when they found out Jonas, yet fain they would have ſaved him: So many will rather venture their own caſting away, then caſt their worldly luſts over-board. How much better Joſeph, who let go his garment to ſave himſelf, as Elias did his mantle to go to heaven; and Bartimeus his cloak to come to Chriſt: How much better Moſes, who by faith ſeeing him that is inviſible, and having an eye to the reward; when he was come to years (as the Text noteth) and therefore well knew what he did, for he was no Baby, refuſed to be called the ſon of Pharoahs daughter, and the worlds darling; and chuſing rather the afflictions of Gods poor people, then the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon, he eſteemed the reproach of Chriſt (the worſt part of him) greater riches then the treaſures of Egypt. And why all this? For he had reſpect to the recompence of reward. He ſet his foot, as it were, upon the battlements of heaven, and there-hence looked upon theſe earthly happineſſes, as baſe and abject, ſlight and ſlender, wateriſh and worthleſs. The great Cities of Campania ſeem but ſmall Cottages to them that ſtand on the top of the Alps: the Moon covereth her ſelf with a pale vail, and ſhines not at all in the preſence of the Sun: No more doth the beauty and bravery of the world (wherewith carnal minds are ſo bedazelled and bewitched) to a man that hath been in Paradiſe with Paul, that hath already laid hold on eternal life. The moles of the earth, that are blind and cannot ſee far off, that have animam triticeam, a wheaten ſoul, with that fool in the Goſpel, and know no other happineſs then to have and to hold; theſe have their eyes blinded by the god of this world, as Iſaac had his wells ſtopped up with earth by the Philiſtines. And as a ſmall diſh being held near the eyes, hideth from our ſight a great mountain; and a little hill or cloud, the great body of the Sun, though it be far bigger then the whole earth: So theſe earthly trifles being placed near mens ſight, do ſo ſhadow and over-cloud thoſe great and glorious excellencies that are above, that they can neither truly behold them, nor rightly judge of them. When men travel ſo far into the South, that the ſight of the North-pole is at length intercepted by the earth, it is a ſign they are far from it: ſo is it, that men are far from heaven, when the love of the earth comes in betwixt their ſouls, and the ſight thereof. Earth-damps quench the ſpirits lamp. Much water of affliction cannot quench that love, that yet a little earth may ſoon do.

Verſe 24. No man can ſerve two Maſters, &c.] The Mammoniſts mind muſt needs be full of darkneſs, becauſe utterly deſtituted of the Father of lights, the Sun of the ſoul: for ye cannot ſerve two Maſters, God and Mammon. By Mammon is meant earthly treaſure, worldly wealth, outward abundance, eſpecially when gotten by evil arts, it cometh to be the gain of ungodlineſs, the wages of wickedneſs, riches of unrighteouſneſs, filthy lucre. When Joſeph was caſt into the pit by his bloody brethren, What gain (ſaith Judah) will it be if we kill him? The Chaldee there hath it, What Mammon ſhall it be? What can we make of it? What profit ſhall we reap or receive thereby? Now theſe two, God and Mammon, as they are incompatible Maſters, ſo the variance between them is irreconcileable. Amity with the world, is enmity with the Lord, James 4. 4. Emnity, I ſay, in a ſenſe both active and paſſive, for it makes a man both to hate God, and to be hated by God: So there's no love loſt on either ſide. If any man love the world, the love of the father is not in him; that's flat. But the deeper any one is drowned in the world, the more deſperately he is divorced from God, who requireth to be ſerved truly, that there be no halting; and totally, that there be no halving. Cambden reports of Redwald the firſt King of the Eaſt-Saxons that was baptized, that he had in the ſame Church, one Altar for Chriſtian Religion, and another for ſacrifice to Devils. And Callenucius telleth us of a Nobleman of Naples, that was wont profanely to ſay, that he had two ſouls in his body, one for God, and another for whomſoever would have it. The Ebionites, ſaith Euſebius, would keep the Sabbath with the Jews, and the Lords-day with the Chriſtians, as if they were of both Religions, when in truth they were of neither: So Ezekiels hearers ſate devoutly before the Lord at his publike Ordinances, and with their mouth ſhewed much love, but their heart, meanwhile, was on their half-penny, it went after their covetouſneſs. So the Phariſees heard Chriſts

Luke 16. 13. Christs Sermon against the service of Mammon, and derided him; and while their lips seemed to pray, they were but chewing of that murthering-morsel, those widows houses that their throats (as an open sepulchre) swallowed down soon after. Thus filled they up the measure of their fathers, those ancient Idolaters in the wilderness, who set up Exod. 32. 5. a golden Calf, and then caused it to be proclaimed, To morrow is a feast to Jehovah. And such is the dealing of every covetous Christian. S. Paul calleth him an Idolater, S. James an Adulterer, for he goeth a whoring after his gods of gold and silver: And although he bow not the knee to his Mammon, yet with his heart he serveth it. Now obedience is Rom. 6. 16. better then sacrifice; and, Know ye not, saith the Apostle, that his servants ye are to whom ye obey, &c. Inwardly he loves it, delights in it, trusts on it, secures himself by it from whatsoever calamities. Outwardly, he spends all his time upon this Idol, in gathering, keeping, increasing, or honouring of it. Hence the jealous God hateth him, and smites his hands at him, Ezek. 22. 13. and hath a special quarrel against those that bless the co- Psal. 10. 3. vetous, whom the Lord abhorreth. As for his servants, he strictly chargeth them to have their conversation without covetousness, Heb. 13. 5. yea their communication, Ephes. 5. 3. yea their cogitation, 2 Pet. 2. 14. branding them for cursed children, that have so much as their thoughts exercised that way. He will not have his hasten to be rich, or labour after superfluities, no nor anxiously, after necessaries. For worldliness (I say not covetousness) when men oppress themselves with multiplicity of business, or suffer their thoughts and affections to be continually, almost taken up with minding these things on earth, as a main hindrance from heaven: It fills the heart with cares, and so unfits and deads it to divine duties. The thoughts as wings, should carry us in worship even to the mansions of God, which being laden with thick clay, they so glue us to the earth, that the loadstone of the Word and Ordinances cannot draw us one jot from it. The soul is also hereby made like a mill, where one cannot hear another, the noise is such as takes away all intercourse. If conscience call to them to take heed of going out of Gods way, they are at as little leisure to listen, as he that runs in a race; who many times runs with so much violence, that he cannot hear what is said unto him, be it never so good counsel. And having thus set their hearts, and anchored their hopes upon earthly things, if ever they lose them, as it often falleth out, they are filled almost with unmedicinable sorrows, so as they will praise the dead above the living, and wish they had never been born, Eccles. 4. 1, 2, 3. Lo this is the guise and guerdom of those Inhabitants of the earth, those viri divitiarum, as the Psalmist stiles them, those miserable Muck-worms, that prefer Mammon before Messias, Gold before God, Money before Mercy, Earth before Heaven: as childish a weakness, as that of Honorius the Emperor, that preferred a Hen before the City of Rome. Mammon, saith one, is a monster, whose head is as subtil as the serpent, whose mouth is wide as hell, eyes sharp as a Lyzard, scent quick as the Vulture, hands fast as Harpyes, belly insatiable as a Wolf, feet swift to shed blood, as a Lyoness robbed of her Whelps. Ahab will have Naboths vineyard, or he will have his blood. Judas was both covetous and a murtherer, and therefore a murtherer, because covetous. He is called also a Thief; and why a Thief, but because a Mammonist. Covetousness draws a man from all the Commandments, Psal. 116. 36. And there want not those that have drawn the covetous person thorow all the Commandments, and proved him an Atheist, a Papist, a Perjurer, a Profaner of Gods Sabbath, an iron bowel'd wretch, a Murtherer, an Adulterer, a Thief, a false witness, or whatsoever else the Devil will. And can this man ever serve God acceptably? can he possibly please two so contrary masters? No: he may sooner reconcile fire and water, look with the one eye upward, and with the other eye downward, bring heaven and earth together, and gripe them both in a fist, as be habitually covetous, and truly religious. These two are as inconcurrent, as two parallel lines, and as incompatible as light and darkness. They who bowed down on their knees to drink of the waters, were accounted unfit souldiers for Gideon: so are those for Christ, that stoop to the base love of the things of this life; they discredit both his work and his wages; which Abraham would not, that ancient and valiant souldier and servant of the most high God. For when Melchisedech from God had made him heir of all things, and brought him bread and wine, that is, an earnest, a little for the whole, &c. he refused the riches that the King of Sodom offered him, because God was his shield, and his exceeding great reward: His shield against any such enemies as Kedarlaomer and his complices had been unto him, and his exceeding great reward, for all his labour abour of love in that or any other ſervice, though he received not of any man, from a thread to a ſhoe latchet.

Verſe 25. Therefore I ſay unto you, Take no careful thought, &c.] This life is called in Iſaiah, The life of our hands, becauſe it is maintained by the labour of our hands. Nevertheleſs, let a man labour never ſo hard, and lay up never ſo much, his life conſiſteth not in the abundance of the things that he poſſeſſeth, ſaith our Saviour; and therefore bids, Take heed and beware of covetouſneſs. There is in every mothers childe of us, a falſe preſumption of ſelf-ſufficiency in our own courſes, as if we, by our own diligence could build the houſe. The Devils word is proved too true. He ſaid We ſhould be like Gods: which as it is falſe in reſpect of divine qualities reſembling God, ſo is it true in regard of our ſinful uſurpation: for we carry the matter for moſt part, as if we were petty gods within our ſelves, not needing any higher power. This ſelf-confidence, the daughter of unbelief, and mother of carking care, and carnal thoughtfulneſs, our Saviour here by many arguments diſſwadeth and decryeth. Take no thoughtful care for your life, What ye ſhall eat, &c. The word here uſed in the original, ſignifieth ſometimes a commendable and Chriſtian care, as 1 Cor. 7, 33, 34. He that is married careth how to pleaſe his wife: likewiſe ſhe careth how to pleaſe her husband. It implyeth a dividing of the mind into divers thoughts, caſting this way, and that way, and every way how to give beſt content. And this ſhould be all the ſtrife that ſhould be betwixt married couples: This is the care of the head, the care of diligence, called by the Greeks, περὶ μελέτη, ἐπιμέλεια. But there is another ſort of care here ſpoken againſt, as unwarrantable and damnable; the care of the heart, the care of diffidence, a doubtful and carking care, joyned with a fear of future events, a ſinful ſollicitude, a diſtracting and diſtempering care, properly called μέριμνα, becauſe it tortures and tears aſunder the mind with anxious impiety, and fretting impatiency. This maketh a man, when he had done his utmoſt endeavour, in the uſe of lawful means, for his own proviſion or preſervation, to ſit down, and with a perplexed heart ſigh out. Sure it will never be: ſure I ſhall dye a beggar, be utterly deſtitute, &c. Surely I ſhall one day periſh by the hand of Saul; were it not better for me to ſhift for my ſelf, and to eſcape ſpeedily into the land of the Philiſtims? 1 Sam. 27. 1. A ſinful conſultation, for had not God promiſed him both life and Kingdom after Saul? but he ſaid (very wiſely) in his haſty fear, All men are lyars, Prophets and all. And again, I ſaid in my ſudden haſte, I am cut off.

And is it not good that the heart be ballaſted with grace, rather then the body farced with meats. What brave letters, and how full of life, were written by Luther co Melanction, afflicting himſelf with continual cares, what would be the iſſue of the Imperial Diet held by Charls the fifth, and other States of Germany at Ausborough, about the cauſe of Chriſts Goſpel? Ego certè oro pro te, ſaith he, & doleo te, pertinaciſſimam curarum hirudinem, meas preces ſic irritas facere. I pray for thee, and am troubled at it, that thou, by troubling thy ſelf with unneceſſary cares, makeſt my prayers of none effect for thee. Shall we believe Gods promises in the main, but not Gods providence in the means: as the Disciples when they had forgotten to buy bread, and as Abraham in the case of promise of issue of his body? Excellent is that of the Apostle, He that spared not his own son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? Whereupon Saint Bernard, Qui misit unigenitum, immisit spiritum, promisit vultum, quid tandem tibi negaturus est? And to like purpose Saint Hierome: Never think, saith he, that God will deny thee any thing, whom he inviteth so freely to feed upon the fatted Calf.

Verse 26. Behold (or cast your eyes upon) the fowls of the ayr] Look upon them intently, consider them wisely, learn of them carefully, to cast away carnal carefulness, and to cast all your care upon God, who careth for them, how much more for you? Ask now the fowls of the ayr, and they shall tell thee, saith Job, that there is a reward for the righteous, and a God that judgeth in the earth. As he made them at first for his own glory (that we might admire his workmanship in their multitude and variety of colours, tunes and taste, 1 Cor. 15. 39.) and for our both use and delight: so he knows them all, Psal. 50. 11. and maintaineth them: providing both for their use, Psal. 147. 9. and delight, Psal. 104. 12. giving us wisdom beyond them, Job 37. 11. and yet setting us to school to them, to learn dependance upon God, both for preservation from evil, Matth. 10. 29. and for provision of good, as here, and Job 39. 16. He taketh care of the Ostriches young ones, and of the young Ravens that cry unto him, Psal. 147. 9. They are fed of God, when forsaken of their dams, and left bare and destitute: for out of their dung, and carrion, brought before to the nest, ariseth a worm, which creepeth to their mouth and feedeth them.

They sow not, neither do they reap, &c.] They take no care, nor have any to care for them, as Geese, Hens, and other tame pullen: and yet they are provided for, we see. And O that we would see, as our Savionr here enjoyns us, and behold not only the fowls of the ayr, but the clouds above them, and other heavenly bodies! When one asked Luther, where he could be safe and at quiet? sub cœlo, said he. And to Pontanus the Chancellour of Saxony, he propounds to be viewed and weighed by him, that most beautiful arch-work of heaven, resting upon no posts nor pillars, and yet standing fast for ever and ever, meerly upheld by the mighty hand of God. The clouds also, as thin as the liquor contained in them; Behold, saith he, how they hang and move, though weighty with their burthen; they salute us only, or rather threaten us, and vanish we know not whither. These things would be thought on, that God may be the better rested on. Be not ye of doubtful mind, saith our Saviour, live not in careful suspense, hang not as meteors in the ayr, betwixt heaven and earth, uncertain whether to keep your standing, or fall to the ground, to trust God, or otherwise as you can, to make sure for your selves. Meteors are matters that few men can tell what to make of, Aristotle himself confesseth, that he knew little of many of them. And as little can the distrustful person tell what to make of those infinite projects, and discourses in the ayr, that he unceasantly frames for the compassing of his desires. When he needs but either to look up to the birds, or down to the lillies, and learn, that if God feed and cloath them without any their care and pains, surely he will much more provide for his people that relye upon him, and with their reasonable pains and moderate care do serve his providence. Shall the great House-keeper of the world, water his flowers, prune his plants, fodder his cattel, and not feed and cloath his children? Never think it. God provided for the necessity and comfort of the unreasonable creatures, ere he made them; grass for the beasts, and light for all living and moving creatures, and all for man, for the man in Christ especially. Compare Psal. 8. 4, 5. with Heb. 2. 6, 7, &c. and it will appear, that whatsoever is spoken there of man, is applyed to Christ; and so is proper to the Saints, by vertue of Verse 27. Which of you by taking thought, can add one cubit unto his stature?] And as little able are we (though we take never so much care and pains) to add one mite to that dimension of our estate, which God by his wise and powerful providence hath alloted unto us. Every man shall have his Stature-measure, his stint and proportion in his estate, as well as in his stature, to the which he shall come and not exceed. All carking care therefore is bootless and unprofitable. Men may eat up their hearts thereby, and trouble their houses, Prov. 15.27. (what with labour, and what with passion, a covetous man and his household never live at hearts-ease, all is continually on a tumult of haste and hurry) but cannot add any thing to their stature or estate, much less to their spiritual growth, which is hereby exceedingly hindered and hide-bound: as we see in the Recusant guests, the rich young Pharisee, and those other, that being called to be Christs disciples, were so taken up with the care of their worldly business, that they could find no present leisure to follow Christ.

Verse 28. Consider the Lilies of the field.] Contemplate them, saith Luther: Understand them well, saith Erasmus: Learn how they grow, saith Beza: Hang upon these fair flowers, with the busie Bee, till you have suckt some sweet meditation out of them. God is to be seen and admired in all his wondrous works. A skilful Artificer takes it ill, that he sets forth a curious piece, and no man looks at it. There is not a flower in the whole field (the word here rendred Lillies, signifieth all sorts of flowers) but sets forth God to us in lively colours. Not to see him, is to incur the curse he hath denounced against such as regard not the work of the Lord, that is, the first making, neither consider the operation of his hands; that is, the wise disposing of his creatures, for our behoof and benefit. A godly Ancient being asked by a profane Philosopher, how he could contemplate high things, sith he had no books? Wisely answered, That he had the whole world for his book, ready open at all times, and in all places, and that therein he could read things divine and heavenly. A Bee can suck honey out of a flower, that a flie cannot do. Our Saviour could have pointed us to our first Parents clothed, and Elias fed, the Israelites both fed and cloathed extraordinarily by God in the wilderness. Never Prince was so served in his greatest pomp; not Solomon in all his Royalty, as they. But because all men have not faith to believe that miracles shall be wrought for them, he sendeth us to these more ordinary, and more easie instances of Gods bountiful and provident care of Birds and Lillies, that in them (as in so many optick glasses) we may see Gods infinite goodness, and be confident.

wealthy a Monarch. Great ones may go arrayed according to their state; and they that are in Kings houses wear soft. Yet is it reckon'd as a fault in the rich man, Luke 16.19. that he was often clothed in purple and fine linnen; and God threatneth to punish even Princes and Kings children, and all other such as are cloathed with strange apparel. The Jews for affecting the Chaldæan habit, were soon after carried captive into Chaldea, Ezek. 23.15. And what heavy things are thundered against those curious dames of Jerusalem by the Prophet Isaiah, who being himself a Courtier, inveighs as punctually against that noble vanity, as if he had lately viewed the Ladies Wardrobes. Our Saviour finds fault with the Scribes that loved to go in long cloathing, Mark. 12. 38. And S. James with those Christians that would fawn upon a gold ring, and a goodly suit, James 2.2. In the year 1580. great ruffs, with huge wide sets, and cloaks reaching almost to the ancles, no less uncomely then of great expence, were restrained here by proclamation, saith Mr. Camden. And need we not the like Law now, when so many Prodigals turn rents into ruffs, and lands into laces, Singulis auribus bina aut terna dependunt patrimonia, as Seneca hath it, hang two or three patrimonies at their ears, a pretty grove upon their backs, a reasonable Lordship or living about their necks. This is far from that humility, wherewith S. Peter would have young men cloath themselves; and from that meek and quiet spirit, wherewith, saith he, the holy Women of old adorned themselves, not with plaited hair, and golden abiliments, 1 Pet. 3 3,4. Cyprian and Austin say, that superfluous apparel is worse then whoredom: becaus whoredom only corrupts chastity, but this corrupts nature.

The Sun is no sooner risen, saith S. James, with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways, his riches cannot ransom him. But as grass, when ripe, withereth, and is carried away, either by the teeth of beasts, or hands of men; so are all, by impartial death. And as the sithe with a few strokes, mows down thousands of piles and forms of grass; so do Gods judgements millions of men, Psal. 9.17. Prov. 11.21. And as grass is to day a flourishing field, to morrow cast into the oven; so are the greatest into their graves (if not into that burning fiery furnace) then when they are in their prime and pride, in their greatest flourish, in the ruff of all their jollity: As the rich fool, therefore a fool, because he stuck his cloathes with these flowers of the field, these fading felicities, and thought himself thereby become (as Simon Magus) some great one. Contrarily S. James makes it a sign of a convert, that though of high degree in the world, yet he is herein made low, that he hath low thoughts of these low things, which he seeth to be mutable and momentary, as the flower of the grass; and bids him rejoyce in that he is exalted, in that he is now made a greater man ever since; being converted he is become too big for these petty businesses: As a man grown up, delights to deal in Lands, and lays by his Cherry-stones. But we pitty that want of wit which maketh the mind run on bables, but never think on ought substantial.

O ye of little faith.] Ye petty-fidians, ye small-faiths. Unbelief is that root of bitterness, whence carefulness springeth. Hence it was, that the Heathen so abounded in it. Strive we therefore to a full assurance of faith and hope; so shall we rowl our selves upon God for all things needful to life and godliness. Faith fears no famine, it quelleth and killeth distrustful fear, but awful dread, it breedeth, feedeth, fostereth and cherisheth. When a man can say with Abraham, God will provide, he will be out of fear and doubt; when he can believe not only Gods promise, but his providence, as David 1 Sam. 26.10, 11.

and over-eagerly to purſue his deſires, and to perplex himſelf likewiſe with doubtful and fearful thoughts about ſucceſs. Now our Lord Chriſt would have none of his ſervants to care inordinately about any thing, but that, when they have done what they can in obedience to him, they ſhould leave the whole matter of good or evil ſucceſs to his care. To care about the iſſue of our lawful endeavours, is to uſurp upon God, to trench far into his prerogative divine, to take upon us that which is proper to him. And it is no leſs a fault to invade Gods part, then to neglect our own. Add hereunto, that God out of his wiſe juſtice, ceaſeth caring for ſuch an one, and becauſe he will not be beholden to God to bear his burthen, he ſhall bear it alone, to the breaking of his back, or at leaſt, till he is much bowed and cruſht under it. If we diſcern ſuch as will put no truſt in us, but love to ſtand upon their own ground, we give them good leave; as contrarily, the more we ſee our ſelves truſted to, the more our fidelity is careful for them that ſtay upon us. Thus it is with our heavenly Father.

Saying, What ſhall we eat? &c.] Our Saviour by theſe diſtruſtful queſtions, graphically expreſſeth the condition of covetous Caitiffs, their endleſs projects and diſcourſes in the ayr. They are full of words, and many queſtions, what they ſhall do, and how they and theirs ſhall be provided for? They have never done, eitheir moaning themſelves, or conſulting to no purpoſe, in things that either cannot be done at all, or not otherwiſe. And ſo ſome underſtand that of our Saviour, Luke 12.29. Hang not in doubtful ſuſpences; after he had brought in the rich fool, Verſe 17. reaſoning and ſaying, What ſhall I do? &c. And Solomon brings in ſuch another fool, full of words, and he recites his words, A man cannot tell what ſhall be, and what ſhall be after him, who can tell? Eccleſ. 10.14. And in the next Chapter, Verſe 1. and ſo forward, he makes anſwer to many of theſe mens frivolous Quæries and Cavils, when moved to works of mercy. Old men ſpecially are taxed of this weakneſs, who are apt to cark, becauſe they fear, ſaith Plutarch, ὅτι καὶ ἔξεσι φέρφοντας καὶ σώζοντας, that they ſhall not have enough to keep them, and bring them well home, as they call it; whence ſome conceive that covetouſneſs is called, The root of all evil, 1 Tim. 6.10. becauſe as there is life in the root, when no ſap in the branches; ſo covetouſneſs oft liveth, when other vices dye and decay. It groweth, as they ſay the Crocodile doth, as long as he liveth.

They ſtudiouſly ſeek theſe things, they ſeek them with all their might; as being without God in the world, and therefore left by him to ſhift for themſelves. When we obſerve a young man toiling and moiling, running and riding, and not miſſing a market, &c. we eaſily gueſs and gather that he is fatherleſs and friendleſs, and hath none other to take care for him. Surely this immoderate care is better beſeeming Infidels that know not God, but reſt wholly upon themſelves, and their own means, then Chriſtians, who acknowledge God moſt wiſe and all-ſufficient to be their loving father. As we differ from Heathens in profeſſion, ſo we ſhould in practiſe; and a groſs buſineſs it is, that Jeruſalem ſhould juſtifie Sodom, and it ſhould be ſaid unto her, Neither hath Samaria committed half of thy ſins, but thou haſt multiplyed thine abominations more then they, Ezek. 16.51. Such as have hope in this life only, what marvel if they labour their utmoſt to make their beſt of it. Now many of the poor Pagans believed not the immortality of the ſoul, and thoſe few of them that dreamt of another life beyond this, yet affirmed of it very faintly, and ſcarce believed themſelves. Socrates the wiſeſt of Heathens ſpake thus to his friends at his death; the time is now come that I muſt dye, and you ſurvive: but whether is the better of theſe two, the gods only know, and not any man living, that's mine opinion. But we have not ſo learned Chriſt; neither muſt we do as Heathens and aliens from the Commonwealth of Iſrael; ſith now in Chriſt Jeſus, we who ſometimes were far off, are made nigh by his blood, and have an acceſs through him by one ſpirit, to the Father.

Verse 33. But seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness.] That, as the end, this, as the means: for grace is the way to glory, holiness to happiness. If men be not righteous, there's no heaven to be had; as if they be, they shall have heaven and earth too: for godliness hath the promise of both lives; and godly men, in Scripture, (Abraham, Job, David, others) were richer then any: and so men might be now, if they would be as godly. The good God had furnished Constantine the great with so many outward blessings, as scarce any man durst ever have desired, saith St. Austin. He sought Gods Kingdom first, and therefore other things sought him: and so they would do us, did we but run the same method. Riches and honors, delights and pleasures, life and length of days, seed and posterity are all entailed upon piety. The wicked, In the fulness of his sufficiency is in straights, Job 20. 22. when the godly in the fulness of their straights are in all-sufficiency. Oh who would not then turn spiritual purchaser, and with all his gettings, get godliness? Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, saith Divinity; (First, before any thing else; and first, more then any other thing:) Seek ye first the good things of the mind, saith Philosophy, Cetera aut aderunt, aut certè non oberunt. But our senseless over-valuing of earthly things, and under-prizing of heavenly, is that that maketh us so carkingly carefull in the one, and so wretchlessly affected in the other. The lean kine eat up the fat, and it is nothing seen by them. The strength of the ground is so spent in nourishing weeds, tares, or corn of little worth, that the good wheat is pulled down, choaked or starved. Earthly-mindedness sucketh the sap of grace from the heart, as the Ivy doth from the Oak, and maketh it unfruitfull. Correct therefore this ill humor, this choak-weed: cast away this clog, this thick clay, that makes us like that diseased woman in the Gospel, that being held of a spirit eighteen years, could not look up to heaven: And learn to covet spiritual things, labour for the meat that perisheth not. Lay hold upon eternal life, what ever you let go. Temporal things are, Nec vera, nec vestra, mutable and momentary, mixt and infected with care in getting, fear in keeping, grief in losing: Besides, they are insufficient and unsatisfactory, and many times prove instruments of vice, and hinderances from heaven. Spiritual things on the other side, are solid and substantial, serving to a life that is supernatural and supernal. They are also certain and durable, Nec prodi, nec perdi, nec eripi, nec surripi possunt. They are sound and sincere, a continual feast, without cessation, or the least intermission; they serve to, and satisfie the soul; as being the gain of earth and heaven, and of him that filleth both. Seek ye therefore first, &c. Our Saviour, in his prayer, gives us but one petition for temporals five for spirituals, to teach us this lesson. Scipio went first to the Capitol, and then to the Senate, &c. Aristotle saith, first take care of Divine things: that the best policy.

Verſe 34. Take therefore no thought for the morrow] The Lord Chriſt, well knowing which way our heart hangs, and pulſe beats, beats much upon this ſtring, drives this nail home to the head. When things are over and over again repeated and inculcated, it imports. 1. The difficulty. 2. The neceſſity of the duty. 3. Our utter averſneſs, or at leaſt, dulneſs to the doing of it. How hardly we come off with God in this moſt neceſſary, but much neglected duty, who knows not, feels not, bewails not? The world is a moſt ſubtle, ſlye enemy: and by reaſon of her neer neighbourhood, eaſily and inſenſibly inſinuates into us, and inſnares the beſt hearts. Our Saviour ſaw cauſe to warn his Diſciples of the cares of life: and where was Thomas, when Jeſus appeared to the reſt of the Diſciples, the doors being ſhut, but either lurking for fear of the Jews, (in probability) or packing up, and providing for one, now that his Maſter was ſlain, and taken from him? What ever the cauſe was, the effect was woſull, Joh. 20. 24, 25. And albeit in both Teſtaments (as Sculteſus obſerveth) the Saints of God have been noted to be ſubject to divers infirmities, yet not tainted with this enormity of covetouſneſs. Yet St. John ſaw cauſe to ſay to thoſe that were Fathers alſo: Love not the world, nor the things that are in the world. And David prays heartily, Incline my heart to thy Teſtimonies, and not to covetouſneſs. Satan will be buſie with the beſt this way, as he was with our Saviour himſelf: he knew it a moſt prevailing bait. And when this would not work, he fleeth from him, as deſpairing of Victory. Be ſober therefore (in the purſuit and uſe of theſe earthly things) and watch, for your adverſary the Devil watcheth you a ſhrewd turn by them. They are ſo near and ſo natural to us, that, through Sathans policy and malice, when we think upon them (that we may the better learn to flee, and ſlight them) they ſtick to our fingers, when we ſhould throw them away: they catch us when we ſhould flee from them: they come over us with fained words uſually, 2 Pet. 2. 3. To hide our faults from the view of others, or ſubtle thoughts and evaſions, to blindfold the conſcience, with colour of Chriſt, neceſſary thrift, &c. Whence it is called, cloked and coloured covetouſneſs, 1 Theſ. 2. 5. A Chriſtian hath ever God for his chief end, and will not, deliberately, forgo him upon any terms: He errs in the way, thinking he may mind earthly things, and keep God too: ſo being inſnared with theſe worldly lime-twigs: (like the ſilly bird) before he is aware, the more he ſtruggleth, the more he is intangled and diabled. All this, and more then this, our Saviour well knew: and therefore reiterates his exhortation, and ſets it on with ſo many Arguments. Care not for the morrow, &c. I will be careleſs according to my name, ſaid that Martyr John Careleſs: for now my ſoul is turned to her old reſt again, and hath taken a ſweet nap in Chriſts lap. I have caſt my care upon the Lord, who careth for me, &c. And Biſhop Hooper in a letter to certain good people taken praying in Bow-Church-yard, and now in trouble, writeth thus. Read the ſecond Chapter of Luke: there the ſhepheards that watched upon their ſheep all night, aſſoon as they heard Chriſt was born at Bethlehem, by and by they went to ſeek him. They did not reaſon, nor debate with themſelves, who ſhould keep the woolf from the ſheep in the mean time: but did as they were commanded, and committed their ſheep to him, whoſe pleaſure they obeyed: ſo let us do now we be called, commit all other things to him that calleth us. He will take heed that 1 Pet. 5. 7. Sculteſ. in Iſaiam. 1 Ioh. 1. 5. Pſal. 119. 36. In a letter to M. Philpot. Act. and Mon. fol. 1743. Ibid. 1347.

that all things shall be well: he will help the husband, comfort the wife, guide the servants, keep the house, preserve the goods: yea, rather then it shall be undone, he will wash the dishes, and rock the cradle. Cast therefore all your care upon God, &c. Judea (as one hath well observed,) lay utterly waste for 70 years. Insomuch that after the slaughter of Gedaliah, when all, man woman and child, fled into Egypt, there was not a Jew left in the Countrey. Neither find we any colonyes sent thither, or any displaced to make room at their return. A wonderfull providence, that so pleasant a Countrey, left destitute of inhabitants, and compassed about with such warlike Nations, was not invaded, nor replanted for 70. years space: but the Land kept her Sabbaths, resting from tillage, &c. and God kept the room empty, till the return of the naturals. Jeremy, immediatly after he had foretold the captivity, and the Caldeans were now besieging the City, was bidden to buy a field of his uncles son: Which also he did, weighing him the money, and sealing the evidences: for although it might seem an ill time to make a purchase, yet he took no further care, then to trust God, who had said, Houses, and fields, and vineyards, shall be possest again in this Land. Now Gods promises, he knew, were the best freehold: Jer. 32.15. So in every seventh years rest, the people were taught to depend on Gods providence by faith. For though the owner of the field might gather, even on that year, for the maintenance of himself and family, Levit. 25. 6. yet he was neither to sow his field, thereby to greaten his harvest, nor to hedge his field, or lock up his vineyard.

Pemble, on Zech. 7. 14.

For the morrow shall take thought for the things of it self] That is: the providence that brings the day, shall also bring new events to comfort us over all the evils of the day. First, no man is sure of life till to morrow, thou knowest not what this great-bellied day may bring forth. Petrarch tells of a good old man, that being invited to a feast the next day, answered: If you would have any thing with me now, here I am: what's to be done to morrow, think on't you that have time afore you, Ego enim, à multis annis, crastinum non habui: For I have not had, for these many years, a morrow to dispose of. Young men, he knew, may die, old men must die. Senibus mors in januis, adolescentibus in insidiis, saith Bernard. Old men may say as Job 17. 1. My breath is corrupt, my days extinct, the graves are ready for me. The young man, as Job 16.22. When a few years (perhaps a few hours) are come, I shall go the way whence I shall not return. Secondly, grant a man had a lease of his life, as Hezekiah had, yet who seeth it not to be extream folly, to anticipate future cares and combats before they come, yea even those of the next day: seeing they will come time enough to our sorrow, though we send not for them by our distrustfull fore-thoughts, and so redouble our vexation? It is possible we may never feel the evils we fear. God may repent upon our repentance, and be better to us then our fears. And therefore what a weakness is it, to undergo certain trouble and care about uncertainties? Or if they shall happen, we may have wit to foresee them, but no power to prevent them: and therefore to vex our selves before they come, is to be miserable before the time. It is excellent councel, doubtless, that Solomon giveth us in this case: Consider the works of God: for who can make that straight that he hath made crooked? In the day of prosperity be joyfull, make the best of thy present comfort, but in the day of adversity consider: God also hath set one against the other, to the end that man should find nothing after him, to wit, of those things that may come upon him in the course of his life, and after-times. He cannot, by wit foresee, or by pollicy prevent ensuing changes. Therefore it is a great part of his wisdom, to let certain and inevitable evils sleep, and keep in their stings till the time appointed; and not to make himself a thousand times miserable by one individual misery. Let us mannage the affairs, and master the miseries of the present day; and not, by too much fore-thoughtfulness, and painful pre-conceit, suffer fained or future evils before they seize upon us. I grant that a moderate (Christian) provident care and forecast, is both convenient and commanded, both for provision of necessaries, and prevention of dangers. See 1 Tim. 5.8. 2 Cor. 12.14. we read Revel. 6. 6. A measure of wheat for a penny, &c. The word signifieth properly, such a measure of corn, as was usually allowed for a day to servants. Hence that speech of Pythagoras, Super Chœnice non sedendum. Rest not in the provision that sufficeth for the day; but take care for the morrow. But this lawfull care of necessaries, both for our selves, and ours after us, Prov. 13. 22. (such as was that of Jacob for his own house. Gen. 30. 30. And that of of the good-houſwife, Prov. 31. 15, 21.) is not diſtreſs-ful, but delightful, becauſe enjoyned by God, who ſendeth us to the Piſmire, to learn this care of hereafter, Prov. 6.6.

Sufficient to the day is the evil thereof] The ſtrongeſt mind and beſt compoſed, is weak enough to ſuſtain the brunt and encounter of every days croſſes, whereof he is ſure to have his back-burthen. Troubles without, and terrors within, are the Saints portion here. And what day ſhines ſo fair over them, wherein they meet not with a ſharp ſhower ere night? Sith therefore every day brings forth ſufficient ſorrow, and the heartieſt man ſhall have his hands full, what a baſe and unworthy weakneſs is it (ſaith a reverend Divine) to unfit and diſable our already too weak minds, for a comfortable diſpatch, and digeſting of daily uncomfortable occurrents, by ſuch needleſs, fruitleſs, ſenſeleſs diſtractions, vagaries of vanity, and Utopian peregrinations? &c.

CHAP. VII.

Verſe 1. Judge not, that ye be not judged.]

HOc verbum quandam indaginem involvit. The word imports a kind of curious enquiry into other mens faults, that we may the more ſeverely cenſure and ſubject them to a ſiniſter interpretation. It ſignifies ſometimes no more, I grant, then to reprehend, as Rom. 2. 1. But this (ſo it were wiſely done) our Saviour would never have reprehended. Thou ſhalt not hate thy brother in thy heart: but (for prevention of ſuch a miſchief) thou ſhalt plainly (not perfunctorily, or in jeſt, bravery, form, deriſion) rebuke thy neighbour, and not ſuffer ſin upon him (as ſome read it:) leſt thou ſuffer for his ſin: or (as others) lift not up his ſin over him as an Enſign, blaze it not abroad to his juſt grief and diſgrace; but clap a plaiſter on the ſore, and then cover it with thy hand (as Chyrurgions uſe to do) that the world may be never the wiſer. This were charity; which hides with her mantle a multitude of ſins; yea prepares covers and cures for the infirmities of others as faſt as they breed them. And the neglect hereof, the not giving vent to our hearts, by a wiſe and plain reproof, cauſeth abalienation of affection, dwelling ſuſpicions, blind cenſures, a very habit of miſpriſion, and miſinterpretation of all things, till men grow ruſty with rancour and malice, the poyſon whereof would be ſoon drawn out by a ſeaſonable reproof: This, well and wiſely done, were far better then judging and grudging one againſt another, ſith it is, Judge not, that ye be not judged, and grudge not, that ye be not condemned, James 5.9. The ſins of others we ſhould hear of with indignation, fearfully and unwillingly believe, acknowledge with grief, never ſpeak of them but in an Ordinance, rather hide them, as much as may be, with honeſt excuſes, and make apology; as, that there are infirmities in the beſt, though we know them not, that as good gold, they are haply of the lighteſt, may want a grain or two of their juſt weight: but give them their allowance, and they may paſs for currant, &c. Be not raſh in rejecting, or ſowre in cenſuring your fellow-ſervants. That ſaying is true, Three things are not ſubject to our judgements, the Counſels of God, the holy Scriptures, and the perſons of men, Rom. 14.10. It is a good rule of the Schoolmen concerning the judging of our neighbour, Ut bona ejus certa, meliora; certa mala, minora; dubia bona, certa; dubia mala nulla judicemus: that we make the beſt of every thing, that we can with truth, and not aggravate ſmall faults; exclaiming with Momus, againſt the creaking of Venus her pantofle.

Noli eſſe alienæ vitæ aut temerarius judex, aut curioſus explorator. Bernard.

The Hebrew word for prayer, hath the firſt ſignification of judging, becauſe therein we muſt judge our ſelves.

That ye be not judged] Judge we muſt our ſelves, and God will not judge us. Step from the bar (where thou haſt arraigned, accuſed, witneſſed and pleaded guilty againſt thy ſelf) to the bench, and there paſs ſentence of condemnation, judging thy ſelf worthy to be turned into hell-torments. Thus judge your ſelves and ſpare not. But judge not others; viz. raſhly, ſiniſterly, finally and peremptorily, leſt ye be judged; both firſt of God, into whoſe chair ye leap, and whoſe children ye condemn, even the generation of the juſt; as David once did, and befooled himſelf well-favouredly for it, when

when he had done. And secondly of men: Good men must suspect you, bad men scorn you, and all men shun you, and desire to be rid of you, as unfit to live in a civil society. Therefore judge nothing before the time, behold the Judge standeth at the door. It is the office of Angels, to sever the sheep from the goats, the tares from the wheat, the elect from the reprobate. Those that undertake preremptorily to determine of mens final estate, they know not of what spirit they are, with those sons of Zebedee, they take too much upon them, with those sons of Levi, they understand neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm, with those impostors in Timothy. Neither may they escape here uncensured, that for particular acts, or petty failings, take upon them rashly and harshly to censure their betters many times: Job and Jeremy met with such as watched for their halting, and made them offenders for a word. These pry into every particular more narrowly, then Laban did into Jacobs stuff; waiting (as a dog for a bone) for any thing less beseeming the Saints, that they may fasten upon with their fangs, that they may tear with their teeth, and swallow down with those open Sepulchers, their throats, the good names of others: censuring them deeply for humane frailties, unchurbing and unbrothering them for unavoidable infirmities. It is hard measuring of a man by his state and behaviour in a pelt, in a passion, which are violent, and have made the holiest, in their heat, little less then bestial, 1 Sam. 25. 22 Psal. 116. 9. The like may be said of sins strengthened by ancient custom, or natural inclination, or hereditary, the sins of our Parents, or furthered by multitude of temptations and enticements. Handle these gently in the judgement of charity, and joynt them again in the spirit of meekness, considering thy self, lest thou also be tempted. It is not to be liked, when men leap from the cradle of profession, into the chair of censure, blinder then beetles at home, sharper then Eagles abroad. Charity and humility would teach them to wink at small faults, as God doth, and to pitch upon that in another that is praise-worthy. Our Saviour is said to have loved the rich young Pharisee, for that little good he found in him; and Bucer never rejected any, though different in opinion, in whom he discerned aliquid Christi, any thing of Christ. St. Paul bids us, consider one another, to wheet on to love: to pitch upon such good parts and properties as may engender love, and sway us to a good opinion of our brethren. The wisdom from above, is full of mercy and good fruits, without judging, &c. But they shall have judgement without mercy, that use no mercy in their judgings. God shall bring home their own dealings to their own doors. For with what judgement ye judge, &c. Only our Saviour is to be understood here of private and corrupt judgement passed upon others, out of sinfull curiosity and ill-will (for Nemo curiosus quin malevolus) either to set up our selves above them, or by condemning them to countenance our own evil courses. Magistrates may and must judge between the righteous and the wicked. Ministers must take out the precious from the vile, and say to the wicked, it shall be ill with them, the reward of their hands shall be given unto them. Wilt thou judge them, Son of man, wilt thou judge them? yea thou shalt shew them all their abominations. How often doth our Saviour call the Pharisees hypocrites, serpents, vipers, &c? And how roundly dealt St. Paul with the sorcerer, Acts 13. 10. and with the incestuous person? Lastly, Though we may not be many masters, Jam. 3. 1. supercilious and censorious, &c. yet we may all judge the tree by the fruit, call a spade a spade, a drunkard a drunkard, &c. and, leaving his final doom to the searcher of all hearts, judge and censure him, for the present, to be Gods enemy, and in a most wretched estate. We both may and must condemn all sin in our selves and others. But it is a fault to be itchingly inquisitive after other mens misdemeanours, to be an eves-dropper, Eccles. 7. 21. or to censure them, when they come to our knowledge, unmercifully and above the royal Law. Let your ἐπιείκεια, moderation of utmost right be known to all men: The Lord is at hand, Phil. 4. 5.

with the merciful to ſhew himſelf merciful, and with the froward to wreſtle: he will be as froward as they for the hearts of them, beat them with their own weapons, overſhoot them in their own bowes, ſhape their eſtates according to their own patterns, and cauſe others to write after their Copies, as it fared with Pharaoh, Adonibezek, Agag, &c. Sodom ſinned in fulneſs of bread, and it is expreſly noted, that their victuals were taken from them by the four Kings. Their eyes were full of uncleanneſs, and they were ſmitten with blindneſs: they burned with luſt, and were burned with fire: they ſinned againſt nature, and againſt the courſe of nature, fire deſcends and conſumes them: Eglon ſtab'd into the guts, finds his bane the ſame way with his ſin; Siſera annoys Gods people with his Iron Charets, and is ſlain by a nayl of Iron. Jeſabels brains, that deviſed miſchief againſt the innocent, are ſtrew'd upon the ſtones: by a Letter to Jezreel ſhe ſhed the blood of Naboth, and by a Letter from Jezreel, the blood of her ſons is ſhed. Nebuchadnezzar deſtroyed Solomons Temple (that ſeven years work of ſo many thouſands) therefore let him be turned a grazing, and ſeven ſeaſons paſs over him, ſaith the Oracle, Dan. 4.16. The blaſphemers in the Revelations, gnaw their tongues through pain, and Dives (for like cauſe) was tormented in that part chiefly. Appion ſcoffing at Religion, and eſpecially at circumciſion, had an ulcer at the ſame time, and in the ſame place. Phocas a wilde, drunken, bloody, adulterous Tyrant, was worthily ſlaughtered by Heraclius, who cut off his hands and feet, and then his genitals by piece-meal. The Donatiſts that caſt the holy Elements in the Lords Supper to dogs, were themſelves afterward devoured of dogs. John Martin of Briqueras, a mile from Angrogne, vaunted everywhere, that he would ſlit the Miniſters noſe of Angrogne, but was himſelf aſſaulted by a Wolf, which bit off his noſe, whereof he dyed mad. Sir Ralph Eterker, Knight Marſhal of Callice, in Q. Maries Raign, being preſent at the death of Adam Damlip Martyr, bid the Executioner diſpatch, ſaying, that he would not away till he ſaw the Traytours heart out. Shortly after this Sir Ralph was ſlain, amongſt others, in a skirmiſh at Bullein, and his heart cut out of his body by the enemies: a terrible example to all mercileſs and bloody men, &c. For no cauſe was known, why they ſhould uſe ſuch indignation againſt him more then the reſt, but that it is written, with what meaſure ye meat, it ſhall be meaſured to you again: B. Ridley told Steven Wincheſter, that it was the hand of God that he was now in priſon, becauſe he had ſo troubled others in his time. And as he had inflamed ſo many good Martyrs, ſo he dyed miſerably of an inflamation, that cauſed him to thruſt out his tongue all ſwoln and black, as Archb. Arundel had died before him. The Archbiſhop of Toures made ſuit for the erection of a Court, called Chambre Ardent, wherein to condemn the Proteſtants to the fire. He was afterwards ſtriken with a diſeaſe called, The fire of God, which began at his feet, and ſo aſcended upward, that he cauſed one member after another to be cut off, and ſo dyed miſerably. And there is mention made of one Chriſtopher an unmerciful Courtier, who ſuffering a poor Lazar to die in a ditch by him, did afterwards periſh himſelf in a ditch. To return to the preſent purpoſe, Laurentius Valla cenſured all that wrote before him, Eraſmus comes after, and cenſures him as much: Beza finds as many faults with Eraſmus, and not without cauſe, as appeareth by that one paſſage among many in his Annotations on Rom. 7.21. I finde then a law, that when I would do good, evil is preſent with me; Eraſmus Originem ſecutus, ſcripſit Paulum hoc Sermone balbutire, quùm ipſe potiùs ineptiat. Scaliger the Hyper-critick gives this abſurd and unmannerly cenſure; Gothi bellua, Scoti non minus. Angli perfidi, inflati, feri, contemptores ſtolidi, amentes, inertes, inhoſpitales, immanes. The Gothes are beaſts, ſo are the Scots. Engliſh-men are perfidious, proud, fierce, fooliſh, mad-men, ſlow-bellies, inhoſpital, barbarous. Another comes after him, and ſaith, His bolt, you ſee is ſoon ſhot, and ſo you may happily gueſs at the quality of the Archer. Tacitus ſpeaks reproachfully of both Jews and Chriſtians; and is paid his own as well, both by Tertullian and Lipſius. If men ſuffer in their good names, they may thnak themſelves, moſtly. Contempt is a thing that mans nature is moſt impatient of: thoſe that are given to ſlight and cenſure others, are puniſhed with the common hatred of all. Imitation and retaliation are in all men naturally, as we may ſee in every child. And that of Solomon is in this ſenſe found moſt true; As in water, face anſwereth to face; ſo doth the heart of a man to a man. None are ſo ſhunned and cenſured, as thoſe that are moſt cenſorious. The places they live in groan for a vomit to ſpew them out.

Verse 3. And why beholdest thou,] Here's the true method of preaching, by doctrine and use, explication and application. Ministers must (as our Saviour in this Text) bring hammers with their nails, Jer. 23.29. and drive them into the very head, yea goad men to the quick, Eccles. 12.11. that the peoples hearts may either break, as theirs, Act. 2.37. or burst, as theirs, *Act.*7.54. A general doctrine, not applyed, is as a sword without an edge, not in it self, but to us, through our singular senselesness: or, as a whole loaf set before children, that will do them no good: the bellows will be burnt in the fire, but the dross remains still. A garment fitted for all bodies, is fit for no body: and that which is spoken to all, is taken as spoken to none.

Generaliter significat quod siccum & leve est. Tertullianus stipulam vertit.

Vituperant homines quam commendant promptius. Plaut.

The moat that is in thy brothers eye,] The moat or straw: The word (beam) seems rather to have reference to a straw, then to a moat; And this is an evil disease that I have seen under the Sun, that men (and those of the better sort sometimes) hear nothing, talk of nothing so willingly, as they do of other mens faults, Psal.50.20. thou sittest and speakest against thy brother, &c. There is no discourse that men will sit so long at, and be so taken with as this. The words of the tale-bearer are as flatteries, and they go down to the bowels of the belly: Many are never well, longer then they are holding their fingers in other mens sores, amplifying and aggravating their faults and failings, not onely most severely, but almost tragically; not once mentioning their good parts and practises. These are like Crows, that fasten onely upon Carrion, or the Horse-flie, that if he happen into a Field that is never so full of sweet Flowers, yet if there be but a little filthy dung in it, his eye and sent is only to that, and upon that only will he light. David compareth such as these to the Asp, that is quick of hearing, but very ill sighted, (having his eyes not in his fore-head, but in his temples) weak, but full of poyson. Herein onely is the difference. That poyson that Asps vent to the hurt of others, they keep within them, without hurt unto themselves. But the malicious censurer is his own worst enemy: for as he sets his mouth against Heaven, and his tongue walketh thorow the Earth, Psal.73.9. so by mis-judging, (out of an inward hatred of another) all his actions and intentions, he pulls upon himself, the hatred both of Heaven and Earth; for his trampling upon Gods jewels, because a little sullied. God doth unwillingly see the faults of his children, Numb. 6.23, 21. yea, he passeth by their iniquity, transgression and sin, Micha 7.18. with one breath both these are reported. The high-places were not removed, yet nevertheless Asa's heart was perfect, &c. So 1 *Pet.*3.6. compared with *Gen.*18.12. Sarahs whole sentence was vile and profane: not one good word in it, but this, that she called her husband Lord. God of his goodness takes notice of that word, and records it, by S. Peter, to her eternal commendation. He spyeth out and severeth gold, though but a dram, from a mass of dross; good grain, though but a handful, from a heap of chaff, cuts out that which is perisht, (as men do out of a rotten apple) and preserves the rest. Be ye therefore followers herein of God, as dear children: And walk in love, &c. It thinketh not evil, but believeth all things, hopeth all things, strains to hold a good opinion, where it hath least probability to induce it; rashly rejects none, in whom it seeth signs of grace: according to that of our Saviour, See that ye despise not one of these little ones, neither for error in judgement, *Rom.*14.3,10, nor for slips and infirmities in life and conversation, and that because God despiseth them not, but guards them by his Angels, *vers.*10. and saveth them by his Son, whom he sent for the purpose, *vers.*11. And 1 Thes.1.4. Knowing brethren beloved, your election of God, viz. by your effectual faith, laborious love, patient hope, *vers.*3. although they were so compassed with infirmities, as he doubted lest the Tempter had tempted them, and his labour had been in vain: he feared their utter Apostacy. of temptation, desertion, or outward affliction, &c. He that follows his own conjecture, may condemn a dear child of God, and approve a detestable heretick, as Philip did Simon Magus. If his eyes be too fast fixed either on the Saints infirmities or the Hypocrites fair pretences, they may bring forth, as Jacobs sheep did, spotted fruits.

But considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye,] Most mens minds are as ill set as their eyes: they can turn neither of them inwards. They tell us of a kinde of Witches, that stirring abroad would put on their eyes, but returning home, they boxed them up again. The Philosophers call upon us, to look to the hinder part of the wallet. And S. James saith, Be not many Masters or Teachers: and mark the reason, which he prescribeth as a remedy: For in many things we sin all. Now those that in the sense of their own sinfulness are poor in spirit, will soon be meek and merciful to their fellow-sinners: they that have proved their own works, and found all to be (not good and very good, as God did his, but) naught and stark naught, as the figs in Jeremy, will be content to bear one anothers burdens, and restore such as are overtaken in a fault with the spirit of meekness, considering themselves, lest they also be tempted. They will be as willing to lend mercy now, as they may have need to borrow mercy another time. And conciousness of their own corruptions will make them compassionate towards others in this kinde. The Greek word, that signifieth to censure, signifieth also, and in the first place, to be idle. Whereunto agreeth that of S. Paul (speaking of wanton widows,) they learn to be idle, wandring about from house to house: and not onely idle, but tattlers also and busie-bodies, speaking of things that they ought not. Those that travel not with their own hearts, have both leasure and list to be medling with others.

Verse 4. Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, &c.] How impudent are hypocritical finde-faults, that can say such things to others, when themselves are most obnoxius? whence is this, but either from a secret desire of purchasing an opinion of freedom from the faults they so boldly censure in others, or that they may thereby the sooner insinuate and ingratiate with them they deal with? The Vulgar Translation reads here Frater sine, &c. Brother, let me pull out the moat that is in thine eye, &c. Burning lips and a wicked heart, are like a potsheard covered with silver dross. When he speaketh fair, believe him not: for there are seven abominations in his heart; but there lyes a great beam of hypocrisie between him and himself, that he cannot discern them. These are they, that by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple, as the Serpent did Eve. You would think, by their smoothing soothing honey-words, they were wholly set upon seeking your good: when they meerly serve not the Lord Jesus Christ, but their own bellies, as those Popish flesh-flies. Faithful are the wounds of a friend, (fair they are and pleasant, saith the Chaldee here) but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful, as were those of Joab to Amasa, and Judas to Christ. Καταφιλεῖν non est φιλεῖν, saith Philo. Love is not always in a kiss: there are that kiss and kill. David would not taste of their dainties, nor endure that they should pour upon him the sweetest oyntments (as at Feasts it was the custome among that people, Luke 7. 46.) Indeed if the righteous smite him, he would take it for a singular curtesie. Let him reprove me, saith he, it shall be an excellent oyl, and shall soak into me, as soft oyl doth into wooden vessels. It shall not break my head; my heart it may; and so make way for the oyl of Gods grace which is not poured, save onely into broken vessels: for indeed whole vessels are full vessels, and so this precious liquor would run over, and be spilt on the ground, as Bernard hath it.

Iob 21. 30, 31, 32, 33.

Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam, &c.] S. James telleth us, that the wisdom from above is first pure, and then peaceable, without judging, without hypocrisie. And these two last are set together, to teach us, that the greatest Censurers, are commonly, the greatest Hypocrites; and as any one is more wise, he is more sparing of his censures. Hence also S. Peter, after he had said, Lay aside all malice, guil, hypocrisie, envie, addeth, and evil speakings: to note, that censuring, and all other evils of the tongue, are gendred of any of the fore-mentioned. For wicked men are apt to muse as they use; as the envious Devil accused God to our first Parents of envie; the covetous person thinks all the world to be made of covetousnes. Caligula did not believe there was any chast person upon Earth. And Bonner said to Mr. Hanks the Martyr, I dare say that Cranmer would recant, if he might have his Living again: so measuring him by himself. Those that have a blemish in their eye, think the Skie to be ever cloudy: and such as are troubled with the Jaundise, see all things yellow: so do those that are overgrown with malice and hypocrisie, think all like themselves. Contrarily, Mary Magdalen thought the Gardiner should have had as much good-will to Christ as she had. Little did Jacob suspect that Rachel had stole her Fathers Idols: or the Disciples, that Judas had harboured such a traytor in his heart, as treason against his Master. They rather suspected every man himself then Judas. And when our Saviour bad him, What thou doest, do quickly, they thought he had meant of making provision, or giving something to the poor. Also when the woman poured the precious oyntment upon our Saviour, and Judas censured the fact as a waste, though he did it because he was a Thief, and cared not a pin for the poor, yet all the Disciples approved of what he said, and are therefore made authors of his speech by one of the Evangelists; so little did they perceive his craft or his covetousnes. True goodnes is not suspicious, censorious, quarellous. It is for an Esau to complain of his Fathers store; Hast thou but one blessing? of his brothers subtilty; was he not rightly called Jacob? The godly man casts the first stone at himself, and with Jacob cryes out, I am not worthy Lord, the least of thy loving kindnesses. Lo, I have sinned, and I have done wickedly, but these sheep what have they done? Let thine hand I pray thee be against me, &c. said David, when he was come to himself; who before this, when he had defiled his conscience with the stain and sting of sin, both censured the fact of the cruel rich man (complained of by Nathan) with too much severity, even above the Law; and shortly after tortured the miserable Ammonites without all mercy, putting them under saws, harrows, and axes of iron, and making them pass thorow the brick-kiln, &c. This he did before his conscience was awaked out of that dead Lethargy (whereinto Satan had cast him) by the trumpet of the Law: before he was convinced of sin by the sanctifying Spirit, and purged thereby from those pollutions he had remorselesly wallowed in. But if God will but once more make him to hear of joy and gladnes, that his broken bones may rejoyce; if he will but restore unto him the joy of his salvation, and stablish him with his free Spirit, then, instead of censuring, and setting against others, he will teach transgressors Gods ways, and sinners shall be converted unto him. He will no longer insult, but in meekness instruct those that oppose themselves, if God peradventure will give them (as he had done him) repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; and that they may awake out of the snare of the Devil, who (as the Ammonites were by David) are taken captive by him at his pleasure. Put them in minde, saith Paul, to speak evill of no man. And why? For we our selves also (even I Paul, and thou Titus) were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, &c. and have yet still a world of work within doors about the discovering and opposing, the mortifying and mourning over our own unruly lusts, and unchristian practices. A sincere heart is ever most censorious and severe against it self. But it is set here by our Saviour, as a visible brand upon the face of the Hypocrite, that as he is ever tampering and medling with other mens moats, so he never hath either leisure or pleasure to look into his own rotten heart, and rebellious courses. Galileus used perspective glasses, to descry mountains in the Moon: so do these to finde faults in those that are far better then themselves: they can pierce beyond the Moon, and spy the least Moat in the Sun, the smallest infirmity in the most glorious glorious Saint; yea, ſome errours and exorbitancies that never had any exiſtence but in their imagination, deteſting thoſe ſins in others that they flatter in themſelves. Utimur perſpicillis magis quam ſpeculis, ſaith Seneca. Men are more apt to uſe Spectacles then Looking-glaſſes; Spectacles to behold other mens faults, then Looking Glaſſes to behold their own. But thoſe that would approve themſelves no hypocrites, muſt do otherwiſe.

And then ſhalt thou ſee clearly, &c.] There is in every godly man an holy baſhfulneſs, an ingenuous modeſty, that he would be foully aſhamed to charge others with thoſe crimes, which he ſhould allow in himſelf. Not ſo every profligate Profeſſor, frontleſs Phariſee, cenſorious Hypocrite. Theſe think, belike, to binde up their own bleeding ſouls with a palliate cure, as they call it, by goring very bloodily into other mens conſciences, whereas they never yet purged their own. Thus dealt the Prieſts and Elders with our Saviour, the falſe Apoſtles with Paul, Porphyry (and others of the ſame bran) with the Primitive Chriſtians, and the Papiſts with the Waldenſes; whoſe freedom of ſpeech, in blaming and reproving the diſſolute manners, and actions of the Clergy, Effecit, ut plures nefaria affingerentur iis opiniones à quibus omnino fuerant alieni, ſaith Girardus, was the cauſe that they were reported to be Manichees, Cathariſts, what not? And yet a certain Dominican was forced to confeſs, that they were good in their lives, true in their ſpeeches, full of brotherly love one towards another, but their Faith, ſaith he, is incorrigible, and as bad as may be. And why? but becauſe they maintained, that the Pope was Antichriſt, that the Court of Rome was intolerably corrupted, the Clergy debauched, &c. Novum crimen Caie Cæſar, &c. S. Paul was become the Galathians enemy, becauſe he told them the truth, and ſo were theſe, the Pontificians. There was found a certain Poſtiller, that meeting with this precious paſſage in S. Auguſtine. The whole life of unbelievers is ſin; neither is there any thing good without the chiefeſt good; Crudelis eſt illa ſententia, ſaid he, This is a cruel ſentence. This was a ſinful cenſure, ſay I, paſſed by a man that was never truly humbled with the ſight and ſenſe of his own wicked and wretched eſtate by nature and practice; a ſtranger to himſelf, and therefore ſo uncharitable to another. It is not evil to marry, ſaith one, but good to be wary. So, it is not amiſs to reprove an Offender, but let a man take heed he hear not; Phyſitian heal thy ſelf. Hypocrite, firſt pull the beam out of thine own eye. The Apoſtle after he had given rules for reproving, Epheſ. 5.11,12,13. ſubjoyns, verſ. 15. See that ye walk circumſpectly, or exactly, that none may juſtly blame or blemiſh you, with any foul fault. Infirmities are found in the beſt, and will be, till they come to be the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, Heb. 12.23. And this is a means to make them warn the unruly with more feeling experience and compaſſion, Heb. 2. 17. But ſay they be guilty of groſs ſins (as theſe Phariſees) though they ſhould begin at home, and firſt caſt out the beam of their own eye, yet if they ſpeak according to Gods Word, and the thing be ſo indeed, hear them hardly, Matth. 23.2,3. and mend by them. An Angel may ſpeak in an Aſs, and God by Balaam. The words do but paſs thorow him (as when a man ſpeaks thorow a Trunk) they are not polluted by him, becauſe not his.

Verſe 6. Give not that which is holy to dogs, &c.] Having ſhew'd How, here our Saviour ſhews Whom we ſhould admoniſh, Give not holy things, wholſome counſels or rebukes (called elſwhere reproofs of life, precious balms, excellent oyntments, which may heal a wound, but make none) to dogs, that will not be taken by the ears; or ſwine, that if they light upon ſuch a pearl, will onely grunt, and go their ways. Beware of dogs, beware of evil-workers, ſuch eſpecially as have wrought ſo hard, walked ſo far and ſo faſt, that now they are ſet down to reſt in the ſeat of the ſcornful. Beware of ſuch botches; there's no good to be done upon them, or to be gotten by them, but a great deal of danger. The Cynicks admoniſhed all they met; if men would not hearken, they counted it an eaſie loſs, to caſt away a few words upon them. But our Saviour preſcribeth us prudence and caution. He will not have holy ſpeeches ſpent and ſpilt upon deſpiſers, his pearls trampled on by ſwiniſh Epicures. Mourn we may, with Jeremy, for ſuch mad dogs as furiouſly flee in the face of them that fairly tell them of their faults. Pray we muſt and pity ſuch ſenſual ſwine, ſuch ſottiſh and ſcurrilous wretches, as grunt againſt goodneſs, and feed inſatiably upon the garbage of carnal contentments. As dogs and ſwine were unclean creatures and unfit for ſacrifice;

so are those for admonition, that would entertain it with cruelty or scurrility. Speak not in the ears of a fool, saith Solomon, for he will despise the wisdom of thy words. Prov. 23.9. Jon. 4. ult. Tacuit virgo licet publicè perstricta. The Virgin Mary held her peace, *Joh.*2.5. when her Son took her up so short for her forwardness, afore all the company: So did S. Peter, when S. Paul took him up for halting at Antioch, Gal.2.14. and commendeth that Epistle, wherein S. Paul had witnessed that reproof, among the rest, 2 *Pet.*3.16. The two Disciples going to Emaus constrained that stranger, that had chidden them for their unbelief, to abide and eat with them. And lukewarm Laodicea, so roundly reproved, and sorely threatned with shameful spewing out, repented, and was reformed; as some ground and gather from that title our Saviour assumes in the Preface to the Epistle, The beginning of the Creation of God. Luk. 24. Eusebius also testifieth, that there was a flourishing Church there in his dayes. Next to the not deserving of a reproof, is the well taking of it. No sugar can bereave a pill of his bitterness. None but the gracious can say, Let the righteous smite me. Bees onely pass by Roses and Violets, and sit upon Thyme, which is hot and biting. Most men, when we seek to fetch them out of their sins, to awaken them out of the snare of the Devil, they fret and snarl, as those that are wakned out of sleep are apt to do. They snuff and take scorn, are as Horse and Mule, untameable, untractable, the more you rub their galled backs, the more they kick. These stray-asses will not be brought home, *Exod.*23.4,5. These old bottles will break with such new wine: The more you touch these toads, the more they swell: the more you meddle with these Serpents, the more they gather poyson to spit at you. Go about to cool them, you shall but add to their heat, as the Smiths forge fries, when cold water is cast upon it; and as hot water, if stirred, casteth up the more fume. Joseph is for his good will in this kinde, hated of his brethren: Jonathan of Saul, who cast a Javelin at him: Micaiah of Ahab, Amos of Amaziah, Jeremy of his flagitious Country-men, Christ of the Jews, Paul of the Galathians, John Baptist of Herod. If John touch his white sin (and who will stand still to have his eyes pickt out) John must to prison. In other things he will dance after Johns pipe; but if his Incest be medled with, John must hop headless. Say to wrest that string in tune, and it will snap, and break upon you. Now for such scoffing Ishmaels and furious opposites, that refuse to be reformed, hate to be healed, let them read their doom, Psal. 50.21,22. and see here their destiny. Every good man is bound in conscience to pass by them as incorrigible, irreformable, and not to afford them so much as a pull out of the fire, so much as a caveat to prevent those curses that are coming upon them. But he that is filthy, must be filthy still; he must wallow as a Swine, and perish in his own corruptions; he must rage as a mad dog, and run on to the pit of Hell, no body must offer to stop or stay him in his carier.

Verse 7. Ask and it shall be given you, &c.] Whereas it might be objected, These are hard lessons, neither know we how to quit our selves in the discharge of them. was told of ſome in Rome that made good verſes: They cannot be good Poets, ſaid he, and I not know them. Why come they not to me, if good, Qui Poetis etiam malis patco, Who am a friend to Poets, though not ſo good? Chriſt ſoliciteth ſutors, and the Father ſeeketh ſuch to worſhip him, Joh. 4. 23. not for any thing he gets by it, but meerly for our benefit: as the Sun draws up vapors from the earth, not for it ſelf, but to moyſten and fatten the earth therewith. And although he come not ever at firſt call, yet be not diſcouraged with ſilence or ſad anſwers. He is neareſt to ſuch ſutors as with Mary, cannot ſee him for their tears and griefs: if, with her, they continue to ſeek him in humility; If they reſt not rapping and bouncing at his gates, he will open unto them, for their importunity, Luk. 18.5,7. The Saints ſometimes have preſent audience, as Eleazer, Gen. 24. 15. Daniel, Chap. 9. 23. The Diſciples, Act. 4. 31. And Luther, who came leaping out of his cloſet, with Vicimus, Vicimus in his mouth. But what if they have not? far be it from them, to think that God is aſleep, or gone a journey, as the Prophet jeareth at Baal: or that he wanteth ears, as the Image of Jupiter did at Creet. Queſtionleſs he that bids us ask, meaneth to give: as when we bid our children ſay, I pray you father give me ſuch a thing: We do it not but when we mean to give it them. If he defer help, let it humble us, as it did David, Pſal. 22. I cry in the day time, but thou hearest not, &c. But thou art holy, &c. Others have prayed and ſped, Our Fathers truſted in thee, they cryed unto thee and were delivered: But I am a worm and no man, yet will I call upon him (not onely in my ſinking, but) from the bottom of the deeps. Let it alſo quicken us to further fervency, as it did S. Paul, and the Church, Pſal. 80.3,7,19. never giving over the ſuit (with the importunate widow,) till we have obtained it. He that prayeth, moveth God, not as an Orator moveth hearers, but as child, his Father. The end of Oratory, is to ſpeak perſwaſively, not always to perſwade: but the end of prayer is to prevail, and ſpeed; Ye which are Gods remembrancers, give him no reſt, till ye have what ye beg. Ask, ſeek, knock: uſe an unwearied importunity: ſlip not any opportunity, pray without ceaſing, pray continually: ſet aſide all for prayer, wait upon it, (as the word ſignifieth) Col. 4.2. with Act. 10. 7. But muſt we never leave praying? (may ſome ſay) till we have our requeſt granted? there are other things to be done? True: and you muſt give over the words of peayer for a ſeaſon, but never the ſuit of prayer. A begger (for example) comes to a rich mans gate, and cryes for an alms, but none there anſwers him. He being a poor man, hath ſomething elſe to do then to beg: and therefore he ſits him down, and knits or knocks, or patcheth, &c. and betwixt whiles, begs and works, works and begs. So ſhould we, follow our neceſſary buſineſs, and yet continue our ſuit for grace. And the rather, becauſe beggers hold out to ask, where yet they have no promiſe it ſhall be given them: nay when (many times) they are frowned upon, threatned, puniſhed for begging. And whereas beggers come no nearer the houſe, then the porch or entry, and ſo know not whether the maſter of the houſe be providing for them an alms or a cudgel. All Gods petitioners, that call upon him in truth, are admitted into the Parlor, as I may ſo ſay, into Gods ſpecial preſence. An hypocrite ſhall not come before him, Job 13.16. But the upright ſhall dwell in his preſence, Pſal. 140.13. He hideth not his face from ſuch, but when they cry, he heareth, Pſal. 22.24.

Verſe 8. For every one that aſketh receiveth, &c.] And he is worthily miſerable, that will not be happy for asking. Prayer (ſaith Lambert the Martyr) is in Scripture much commended, and many great and unmeaſurable benefits are ſhewed to enſue thereupon, that men ſhould the more luſtily give themſelves thereunto. Thus Jacob wreſtling with God, both by might and ſlight, (as the word ſignifieth) both by the ſtrength of his body, and force of his faith, he grounded his prayer upon Gods gracious promiſe; which he rolls as ſugar in his mouth, and repeats it again and again. Pharisee, proudly, or as the Thessalonians, as men without hope: which is to deny our own prayers. He cannot possibly be poor, that can pray in faith: because God is rich to all such, Rom. 10.12. and giveth richly to such as so ask, Jam. 1. 5. Never did the hand of faith knock in vain at Gods gate. The Ædiles (or Chamberlains) amongst the Romans, had ever their doors standing open, for all that had occasion of request or complaint, to have free access to them. Gods mercy-doors are wide open to the prayers of his faithful people. The Persian Kings held it a piece of their silly glory, to deny an easie access to their greatest Subjects. It was death to sollicite them uncalled. Esther her self was afraid. But the King of Heaven manifesteth himself to his people, Joh. 14.21. calls to his spouse, with, Let me see thy face, let me hear thy voyce, &c. and assigneth her negligence herein, as the cause of her soul-sickness: The door of the Tabernacle was not of any hard or debarring matter, but a veil; which is easily penetrable. And whereas in the Temple none came near to worship, but onely the High-Priest, others stood without in the outer-Court; Gods people are now a Kingdom of Priests, and are said to worship in the Temple, and at the Altar, Rev. 11.1. Let us therefore draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, Let us come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and finde grace to help in time of need.

Cant. 2. 14.

Heb. 10. 22. Heb. 4. 16.

Vers. 9,10. Or, What man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, &c.] By an argument from the less to the greater. Our Saviour sweetly confirmeth what he had said; that we may ask in faith, nothing wavering, or being at an uncertainty, or at variance with himself, doubting whether he should believe or not. This is no less unpleasing to God, then unprofitable to us. God is the Father of all mercies, and loveth his, far more then any natural father doth his own childe; then Abraham did Isaac; or David Absolom. And according to his affections, such are his expressions: for as he knoweth their needs, so he gives them all things richly to enjoy. He giveth them not, as he doth the wicked, panem lapidosum, a stone for bread: he feeds them not (as we say) with a bit and a knock. He puts not into their hands, ἀντὶ ὄφεως σκόρπιον, (as the Greek proverb hath it, whereunto our Saviour here alludeth) for a fish a scorpion: No, he feedeth them with the finest Wheat, Psal. 81. 16. and filleth them with fat things full of marrow, Isa. 25.6. He nourisheth them with the best, as Joseph did his Fathers household in Egypt, according to the mouth of the little ones, or as so many little ones (saith the Original) tenderly and lovingly without their care or labour. And whereas some naturall parents have (monstrously) proved unnatural; as Saul to Jonathan, and those ἀσυνθέτους, Rom. 1. 31. Not so God: as himself is an everlasting Father, Isa. 9.6. So is his love, Isa. 49.14. Joh. 13.1. Men may hate their children whom they loved: but he rests in his love, Zeph. 3. 17. they may cast out their babes, but he gathers them. Father Abraham may forget us, and Israel disown us, Isa. 63.16. But thou O Lord art our never-failing Father, our Redeemer, &c. The fathers and governours of the Church, may (out of an over-flow of their misguided zeal,) cast us out, and for a pretence, say, Let the Lord be glorified. But then shall he appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed, Isa. 66.5. The Fathers of our flesh chasten their children after their own pleasure: but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness. He feeds his people sometimes with the bread of adversity, and the water of affliction: or gives them (as it were) a thump on the back with a stone, to drive them downwards, and makes them eat ashes for bread, as David; their bread with quaking, as Ezekiel did: holds them to hard meat (some of the Martyrs were fed with bread made, most part, of sawdust, and Ezekiel with bread prepared with cow-dung.) He chasteneth them also, otherwhiles, not onely with the rods of men, but with the severe discipline of scorpions: and this seemeth not, for the present, to be joyous, but grievous: Nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness, to them that are thereby exercised. They shall sit down with Abraham, yea in Abrahams bosome (as they used to lean at Feasts) in the Kingdom of Heaven: and shall have (not a Benjamins mess onely, but) a royal diet, as Jeconiah had, every day a portion. Then shall the Lord stand forth, and say to those men of his hand, who had their portion here, and whose bellies he filled with his hid treasure. (The Inn-keeper gives the best bits to his Guests, but reserves the patrimony for his children) Behold my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry, &c. Isa. 65.13.

Verse 11. If ye then being evil] Even ye my Disciples also: For by nature there is never a better of us. But as the historian said, that there were many Marii in one Cæsar, so there are many Cains and Judasses in the best of us all. Homo est inversus decalogus, saith one: whole evil is in man, and whole man in evil; yea in the Devil, whose works (even in the best of his Saints) Christ came to destroy; to dissolve the old frame, and to drive out the Prince of darkness, who hath there entrencht himself. And although sin in the Saints hath received its deaths-wound, yet are there still in the best, continual stirrings, and spruntings thereof (as in dying creatures it useth to be) which (without Gods greater grace, and the countermotion of the holy Spirit within them) would certainly produce most shamefull evils. This put St. Paul to that pittifull outcry, Rom. 7. 24. and made him exhort Timothy (though he were a young man rarely mortified) to exhort the younger women with all pureness, or chastity; intimating, that, through the corruption of his nature, even whilst he was exhorting them to chastity, some unchast motions might steal upon him unawares. A tree may have withered branches, by reason of some deadly blow given to the root, and yet there may remain some sap within, which will bud and blossome forth again. Or as of some wild fig-tree, saith a Father, that grows in the walls of a goodly building, and hides the beauty of it, the boughs and branches may be cut or broken of, but the root, which is wrapped into the stones of the building, cannot be taken away, till the walls be thrown down, and the stones cast one from another: So sin that dwelleth in us, hath its roots so inwrapped and intertwined in our natures, that it can never be utterly extirpated; but pride will bud, and the fruits of the flesh will be manifest, though we be daily lopping off the branches, and labouring also at the root. Sin is an inmate, that will not out, do what we can, till the house fall upon the head of it; an hereditary disease, and that which is bred in the bone, will never out of the flesh; a pestilent Hydra, somewhat akin to those beasts in Daniel, that had their dominion taken away, yet were their lives prolonged for a time, and a season. Dan. 7. 12.

Ezek 7. 10. Gal. 5. 19.

How much more will your father which is in Heaven give good things] Give the holy Spirit saith St. Luke: for Nihil bonum sine summo bono, saith St. Austin, when God gives his Spirit, he gives all good things, and that which is more then all besides. For it is a Spirit of judgement and of burning, of grace and of deprecation, of knowledge, and of the fear of the Lord, of strength and of might, enabling both to resist evil of sin, and to endure evil of sorrow. And for good things, temporal, to trample on them; spiritual, to reach after them. It is a free spirit, setting a man at liberty from the tyranny of sin, and terror of wrath; and oyling his joynts, that he may be active and abundant in the Lords work. This holy spirit is signified by those two golden pipes, Zech. 4. through which the two Olive branches, the Ordinances empty out of themselves the golden oyls of all precious graces into the candle-stick, the Church. And how great a favor it is to have the holy Spirit our inhabitant: See Joel 2. where, after God had promised the former and latter rain, floors full of wheat, and fats full of wine and oyl, a confluence of all outward comforts and contentments; he adds this as more then all the rest, I will also pour out my spirit upon all flesh. He will pour out, not drop down only sparingly and pinchingly as some penny-father, but pour out, like a liberal housholder, as it were, by pails or bucket fulls. And what? my spirit, that noble spirit, as David calleth it, that comforter, counsellor, conduct into the land of the living. And upon whom? upon all flesh: spirit upon flesh, so brave a thing upon so base a subject. Next to the love of Christ indwelling in our nature, we may well wonder at the love of the holy Ghost that will dwell in our defiled souls: that this spirit of glory and of God will dain to rest upon us, as the cloud did upon the Tabernacle. How glad was Lot of the Angels, Micha of the Levite, Elizabeth of the mother of her Lord, Lydia of Paul, Zacheus of Christ, Obed-Edom of the Ark? And shall not we be as joyful and thankful for the holy Spirit, whereby we are sealed (as merchants set their seals upon their wares) unto the day of redemption. If David for outward benefits brake out into, What is man that thou art mindful of him? and Job, for farherly chastisements, what is man that thou shouldest magnifie him, &c? how should this best gift of his holy Spirit affect and ravish us? sith thereby all mercies are seasoned, and all crosses sanctified; neither can any man say (experimentally and savingly) that Jesus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghost.

Give good things to them that ask him] sc. If they ask in faith, bring honest hearts, and lawfull petitions, and can weight Gods leisure. Let none say here, as the Prophet Isa. 49. in another case, I have laboured in vain, and spent my strength for nought: I have prayed and sped not, the more I pray, the worse its with me. The manner of our usage Act. and Mon. fol. 1565. here in prison doth change (saith B. Ridley in a letter to Bradford) as sower Ale doth in Summer: and yet who doubts but they prayed earn and earnestly, when they were in Bocardo, that Colledge of Quondams, when those Bishops were there prisoners? God is neither unmindfull nor unfaithfull, but waits the fittest time to shew mercy, and will surely avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear Luke 18. 7. long with them. The seed must have a time to grow downward, before it grows upward: And as that seed which is longest covered, riseth the first, with most increase: so those prayers which seem lost, are laid up in heaven, and will prove the surest grain: the more we sow of them into Gods bosom, the more fruit and comfort we shall reap and receive in our greatest need.

Verse 12. Therefore all things whatsoever ye would, &c.] q. d. To wind up all in a word (for it would be too tedious to set down each particular duty;) let this serve for a general rule of direction in common conversation, and mutual interdealings one with another: whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them. This is the royal Law, the standard of all equity in this kind, a sealed weight and rule, according to which we must converse with all men. Severus the Emperor had this sentence of our Saviour often in his mouth; and commanded it to be proclaimed by the Cryer, whensoever he punished such of his souldiers as had offered injury to others: For there is no doubt (saith Mr. Calvin upon this text) but that perfect right should rule amongst us, were we but as faithful Disciples of active charity (if we may so speak) as we are acute Doctors of passive; did we but love our neighbour as our self. Charity (tis true) begins at home in regard of order, but not in regard of time: for so Isa. 58. 3. soon as thou beginnest to love thy self, thou must love thy neighbour as thy self; neither may any man at any time hide his eyes from his own flesh, that is from his neighbour, of the same stock with himself.

For this is the Law and the Prophets.] i. e. This is as much as either of them have said touching love to our neighbour. Yea, this is the summ of all that Christ and the 1 Cor. 13. 5. Apostles have spoken of it: For love (that seeketh not her own things) is both the complement of the Law, and the supplement of the Gospel. Rom. 13. 8, 10. Gal. 5. 14. Joh. 15. 12. and v. 14. Christ maketh love to our brethren, the same with keeping the Commandments. So Acts 15. 20. St. James in that sacred Synod gives this suffrage, to lay upon the believing Gentiles, no greater burden then these necessary things; that they abstain from pollutions of Idols, and from fornication, from things strangled, and from blood; And in certain ancient Manuscripts, as also by Irenaus and Cyprian, it is added, and what thing soever ye would not, that others should do to you, that ye do not the same to them. Timothy naturally cared for the Philippians, which was rare, Philip. 2. 20, 22. So should all Christians one for another, Gal. 5. 13. 1 Cor. 10. 24. Rom. 15. 1, 2. Self-lovers begin the black bed-role, 2 Tim. 3. 2.

Verse 13. Enter ye in at the strait gate] Our Saviour having hitherto pointed out the right way of well-doing, and shew'd how to steer a strait course to the haven of happiness; now gives warning of certain dangerous rocks (against the which divers have dashed, to their utter destruction, and are therefore) carefully to be declined. Of these, the first he nameth is, the following of a multitude to the do evil, the joyning hand in hand with the rude rabble that are running apace toward the pit of perdition, which is but a little before them; the doing as most men do, which is to be utterly undone for ever. The wicked (though never so many of them) go down to hell, and whole nations that forget God: Hence the gate thereto is grown so wide, and the way so well-beaten. But none that go that way return again, neither take they hold of the paths of life. Enter therefore in at the strait gate, saith our Saviour. Vive ut pauci, &c. Live as those few live that enter into life eternal, saith Cassianus: for if you will needs imitate the multitude, saith Austin, ye shall not be numbred among the living in Jerusalem, Isa. 4. 3, 4. Save your selves from this untoward generation, saith St. Peter, shine amidst them, as lamps, saith St. Paul, as Abrahams lamp that shone out in the smoaky furnace, as the wise-mens Star, that shewed it self in the midst of darkness, like the moon moon that holds on her course, though the dogs bark at her never so long, never so loud; like the Sun that rejoyceth as a bride-groom to run his race, though the Atlantes (a certain people) curse him at his rising, because scorched with his heat: Or rather like God himself, who then doth his best works, when men are worst, overcoming our evil with his good, and not suffering mens perverseness to interrupt the course of his goodness. Swim not down the stream of the times as dead fishes do; neither be carried along by the swinge and sway of the place you dwell in. Let not your lips be polluted by living among a people of polluted lips, with Esay, swear not with Joseph, curse not with Peter, comply not with the common sort, learn not the manners of the mad multitude. The worse they are, the better be you; the more outragious they, the more couragious you, violent for heaven, and valiant for the truth; therefore walking exactly, and therefore redeeming the time because the days are evil, and most men walk at all adventures. To walk with God (saith Bishop Babington) is a pretious praise, though none do it but my self: and to walk with man, with the world, with a town or parish in wicked ways, is a deadly sin, though millions do it besides. And it matters not (said Nicolas Bishop of Rome) how small the number be, if godly, nor how great, if ungodly. Noah condemned a world of wicked people, by his contrary courses, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith, Heb. 11. 7. whilest he continued righteous, even in his generation, and kept himself unspotted in so foul a season. The Apostle telleth us, that to live according to the common course of the world, is no better then to be acted and agitated by the devil. But God hath promised to take this unclean spirit out of the land, Zech. 13. 2. Fiat, Fiat. And when Christ bids us Enter in at the straight gate, we must know that his words are operative, to cause us to enter, as when he said Lazarus come forth, and in the creation, Let there be light. His word and Spirit go together. Verse 14. Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, &c.] In Lollards tower, passing through six or seven doors I came to my lodging (saith Philpot Martyr) through many straits: where I called to remembrance, that strait is the way to heaven. The old copies read, Oh how strait is the gate! by way of admiration, q. d. It is wondrous strait. Not of it self, for Christs yoke is easie, and his burden light: but we make it so hard and heavy to our selves, by our singular peevishness and perverseness. Besides, the Prince of darkness and his black guard favour this way, that is called holy, as little as the Philistim-Princes did David, yea they persecute it to the death, as Saul did, Acts 9. Hence the way to heaven is an afflicted way, a perplexed, persecuted way, crusht close together with crosses (as the word importeth) as was the Israelites way in the wilderness, or that of Jonathan and his armour-bearer, that had a sharp rock on the one side, and a sharp rock on the other. And, whilst they crept upon all four, flinty stones were under them, briers and thorns on either hand of them, mountains, crags and promontories over them, sic petitur cœlum, so heaven is caught, by pains, by patience, by violence, affliction being our unseparable companion. The cross-way is the high-way to heaven, said that Martyr. And another, If there be any way to heaven on horse-back, it is by the cross. Q. Elizabeth is said to have swum to the crown, through a Sea of sorrows. They that will to heaven, must sail by hell-gates. They that will have Knight-hood, must kneel for it: and they that will get in at the strait gate, must croud for it. Strive to enter in at the strait gate, saith our Saviour. Strive and strain even to an agony (as the word signifieth.) Heaven is compared to a hill; Hell to a hole. To hell a man may go without a staff (as we say:) the way thereto is easie, steep, strawed with roses. Tis but a yeilding to Sathan, a passing from sin to sin, from evil purposes to evil practises, from practise to custom, &c. Sed revocare gradum, but to turn short again, and make strait steps to our feet, that we may force through this strait gate, (so strait, that as few can walk in it, so none can halt in it, but must needs go upright,) hic labor, hoc opus est, opus non pulvinaris sed pulveris, this is a work of great pains, a duty of no small difficulty. Many I say unto you; shall seek to enter, but seeking serves not turn: men must strive, and strive lawfully, run, and run lustily, tug and take pains till they sweat and faint, to get through this strait gate, this perplext way, as unpleasant to nature, as the way to Niniveh was to Jonas, as rough and rugged as that was to the Church, Hos. 2. 6. as little traced and trod, as the high-

The drunkard with his rotten lungs: the adulterer with his wasted loins, can have no admittance into it. There can in no wise enter any thing filthy, or loathsom, abominable, or detestable, which a Verse 15. Beware of false Prophets which come to you, &c.] This is another dangerous rock, that the less carefull may easily split against. Take heed therefore, lest whiles ye shun a shelf, ye fall not into a whirl-pool. By corrupt teachers Satan catcheth men, as a cunning fisher by one fish catcheth another, that he may feed upon both. He circuiteth the world, seeketh whom to devour, and usually beginneth with violence and cruelty. If this take not, then he puts off the frock of a wolf, and makes his next encounter in sheeps-clothing. Now what havock he hath made by this means of silly souls laden with lusts, who knows not? The old Church was pestred with false Prophets, Deut. 13. 1. 2 Pet. 2. 1. There were false Prophets among the people, and there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, and many shall follow their pernicious ways. This was Peters propheste: and Paul saith the same, Acts 20. 30. Grievous wolves shall enter in amongst you (in sheeps-clothing you must think) speaking perverse things (whiles they pervert the Scriptures to the defence of their own devices) to draw away Disciples after them. The word signifieth to pull them limmeal, as wolves use to do the sheep they seize upon. A like expression there is, Deut.

form himself into an Angel of light. S. John in his first Epistle tells us of many petty Antichrists, even then gone out; who professing Christs name, did yet oppose his truth. And in his Revelation, that the Beast (which is the great Antichrist) hath two horns like the Lambs, but speaks like the Dragon. The Locusts also (which are his limbs and agents) have faces like women, insinuative and flattering. Tertullian tells us, that the Valentinian Hereticks had a trick to perswade before they taught, whereas the Truth perswadeth by teaching, doth not teach by perswading. And how much hurt Julian the Apostate did by this art in the Church of God, is better known, then that I need here to relate it. It was not therefore without good ground of reason, that Placilla the Empress (when Theodosius senior desired to confer with Eunomius the Heretick) disswaded her husband very earnestly: lest being perverted by his speeches, he might fall into heresie; she knew their cunning, and as it were, cogging of a dye, Ephes. 4. 14. where the Apostle compareth seducers to cheaters, and false gamesters, who have a device by cogging of a dye, to deceive the unskilful; and further telleth us, that they are wittily wicked, by methods and crafty conveyances, winding up and down, and turning every way, to get the greatest advantage. Neither was that good Empress ignorant, how catching we are this way, and inclinable to the worse side: As the Israelites soon forgot their God, and called for a Calf, as the ten Tribes were easily prevailed with to go after the two golden Calves, and as the whole world wondred and wandred after the Beast. This to prevent, as much as may be, God in delivering the Law is most large in the second and fourth Commandments, which we are most apt to transgress; that by superstition, this by profaneness.

Verse 16. Ye shall know them by their fruits] That is, chiefly by their Doctrines, which tend either to the infecting of the judgement with errour, or tainting of the life with uncleanness, or both; and commonly both, as those ancient Hereticks, whose pernicious (or as other Copies read) lascivious ways many followed; by reason of whom the way of truth was evil spoken of. St. Austin observeth, that in the loose and lascivious Hereticks, many foul-mouthed men met with matter of blaspheming the Name of Christ, because they also would needs be held Christians. And Epiphanius adds, that for their sakes many Heathens would not so much as have any conversation with Christians, or hear them speak. Who hath not heard what a stumbling-block and backbyas to the conversion of the Jews, is the Idolatry of the Papists, and the blaspemies of other Christians? By their fruits they know such persons not to be of God, as their Predecessors argued of our Saviour; This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the Sabbath-day. The proposition here was found (had they not mistook themselves in the assumption) He that keepeth not the Sabbath is not of God. We may also safely reason in like sort. Such and such deny or question principles, as the Antitrinitarians, Arians, Eutychians, and others not a few in the Primitive Church, so pester'd with archhereticks, that it was then (as Erasmus hath it) an ingenuous thing to be a Christian. Had these been of God, they would have hearkened to his word (John 8. 47.) which is plain in Principles, and commandeth to hate false heterodox opinions, Psal. 119. 104. and those that broach them, buzzing doubts in mens heads, Rom. 16. 17. John 10. 5. That Heretick confuted by Junius took an ungain course for his own satisfaction, who confest that he had spent two and twenty years in trying Religions. He had been with Jews, Arians, Mahometans, and such sects; that at length he might find truth among them, which is (as he saith) Viam per avia quærere, to seek truth by wandring thorow all sorts of Errours. But truth, 1. is Divine, grounded upon the Scriptures; wherein we have a most sure word, as Peter hath it; and self-sufficient, saith Paul, for instruction in righteousness to make the man of God perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works. So that it is impossible Gods Elect should be finally deceived (though for a time they may be fearfully miscarried, as the young Prophet was by the old Bethelite, and Barnabas by Peter) because they are all taught of God; they have an unction within them, the Holy Ghost that illighteneth both the Organ and the object; and so teacheth them all things, that they understand the Scriptures, and grow to a certainty, Psalm 19. 7. Prov. 1. 4. All Christs sheep are rational, and will not follow a stranger, John 10. 5. though they are simple to evil, yet they are wise to that which is good. present truth, 2 Pet. 1. 12. So that, though man or Angel should object against it, yet they would not yield to him, Gal. 1. 8, 9. For he that is spiritual discerneth all things, as having the mind of Christ, a spirit of discerning, and senses exercised to difference good from evil, being able to give a reason of that he believeth, 1 Pet. 3. 15. to perform a reasonable service, even the obedience of faith, whence floweth and followeth rest to his soul, Jer. 6. 16. and abundant consolation, Coloss. 2. 2. Say he cannot answer all the cavils of an adversary, yet he can hold the conclusion: and though he cannot dispute, yet he can dye (as that Martyr said) in defence of the truth, whereof he is fully perswaded in his own minde, bottomed upon the Scriptures, and ballasted therewith, as S. Ambrose saith the Bee is with a little stone, that she be not blown away with the wind. 2. Secondly, Truth is single, one and the same, at agreement with it self. But errour is manifold, dissonant, and contradictory to it self. How often doth Bellarmine deny that in one place, that he had affirmed in another? That the Scripture is the very word of God, saith he, can by no means be assured out of Scripture. But in another discourse (forgetting what he had said) he affirmeth, that among other arguments of the Divinity of the Scriptures, there is sufficient proof to be had out of the Scriptures themselves: So, he cannot bethink himself (if you'l believe him) where in all holy Writ, there is any promise made of pardon of sins to such as confess them to God. Again, he teacheth that the substance of the bread in the Sacrament, is not turned into the substance of Christs body Productivè, as one thing is made of another: but that the bread goes away, and Christs body cometh into the room of it Adductivè, as one thing succeeds into the place of another, the first being voided. And this, saith he, is the opinion of the Church of Rome, himself being Reader of controversies at Rome. But Suarez, Reader at Salamanca in Spain, confutes Bellarmines opinion, terming it Translocation, not Transubstantiation; and saith it is not the Churches opinion. So the greatest Popish Clerks cannot determine how the Saints know our hearts and prayers; whether by hearing, or seeing, or presence every where, or by Gods relating, or revealing mens prayers and needs unto them. All which ways some of them hold as possible or probable, and others deny them, and confute them as untrue. Thus these great Master-builders are confounded in their language, and thus hard it is to know what the Church Malignant holdeth: Her own deerest and learnedest sons know not; God having delivered them up to the efficacy of errour, which frets as a Gangrene, and spreads as leaven, sowring the whole lump. Look how the Heathens were at a meer uncertainty in their Opinions and Devotions; as the Marriners in Jonah prayed to their several gods, and bad him do likewise. Others of them usually closed up their prayers with Dijq; Diæq; omnes, lest haply they might mistake in any one: so are Hereticks. Having once stept over the pale of truth, they know not where or when they shall stop or stay, but run on from bad to worse, deceiving, and being deceived. Bertius and Barret, of Arminians become professed Papists; which differ no more, saith a learned man, then the Stoicks of old did from the Cynicks, by the wearing of their cloaks only. If the Lutherans admit of universal grace, the Huberians will thereupon bring in universal election, the Puccians natural faith, the Naturalists (as that Cestercian Monster lately imprisoned at London, did) will explode Christ and the Scriptures. A pestilent sect there was not long since in Arragon (whose founders were a hypocritical crew of their Priests) who affecting in themselves and their followers, a certain Angelical purity, fell suddenly to the very counterpoint of justifying Beastiality. These called themselves Illuminati, as if they only had been in the light, and all the world besides in darkness. So (besides the Gnosticks, who held themselves to be the only knowing men) the Manichees derived their name of Manna, because that whatsoever they taught, was to be taken as food from heaven. Irenæus tells us of some that counted their own writings to be Gospels. And the Family of Love set out their Evangelium regni. Anabaptists brag much of their Enthusiasms: and the Jesuites vaunt that the Church is the soul of the world, the Clergy of the Church, and they of the Clergy: and yet for their wickedness, though a man, saith one, should declaim against them, till all the sand of the sea had run thorow his hour-glass, he could not possibly want matter. thered of these thorns, any figs of these thistles? Our Saviour makes use of these common proverbs, to prove that this is so plain a truth, that none can be ignorant of it, if he have but his eyes in his head, or do not wink wilfully, as those, Qui ut liberius peccent, libenter ignorant, who are willingly ignorant, that they may sin without controul.

Verse 17. Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit.] i.e. All sound Doctrine tends to good life: and rotten opinions to wretched practises. As, besides the old Hereticks, we see in the Papists (their Priests especially) of whom the L. Audely (Chancellour of England in King Henry the eights time) said to 13. Callice men prisoners for Religion, whom he discharged: For Gods sake, Sirs, beware how you deal with Popish Priests: for I assure you, some of them be knaves all. After the one thousand year of Christ, there was no where less piety, then in those that dwelt nearest to Rome, as Machiavel himself observed: who yet was himself none of the best, as is well known: for he proposeth Cæsar Borgia (notwithstanding all his villanies) as the only example for a Prince to imitate. The Romish Pharisees, like the Devils, are then thought to do well, when they cease to do hurt, saith Joannes Sarisburiensis. In Popes (saith Papirius Massonius, a Popish Writer, speaking of those Popes that lived in the time of the Trent-Council) no man now-adays requireth holiness. They are thought to be very good, if not extream evil: or any thing better then the worst use to be. The Sea of Rome, saith another, hath not merited alate, to be ruled by any better then reprobates. Divers Popes have been Necromancers, Atheists, Epicures, Monsters, as Benno Cardinalis describes Hildebrand; and Luitprandus reports of John the twelfth, that he ordained Priests in a stable among his horses, that he went into his fathers Concubines, that he drank a health to the Devil, &c. Benedict the twelfth had this Epitaph set over him,

Devius à vero, [illegible] repleta mero. supra

I am not ignorant what is the common put off of Papists, when urged with these and the like histories; viz. Luitprandi illud non est, sed Anonymi cujusdam, qui hoc historiæ ipsius appenderit. Luitprandus never wrote any such thing, but some other nameless Authour, that hath pieced it to his History, saith Bellarmine and Baronius: But who this nameless Authour was, or when he lived, or how it may appear, that it was so indeed, they say not a word. So if we cite Benno Cardinalis. Imò potius Lutheranus, saith Bellarmine and Florimond. How disdainfully they reject the Fathers when they make against them, I need not here recite. I would sooner believe one Pope, then a thousand Augustines, saith a Jesuite: And yet, when they cannot be heard, they are ready streight to cry out, as that Heretick Dioscorus did in the Council of Chalcedon, I am cast out with the Fathers, I defend the doctrine of the Fathers, I transgress them not in any point. If we produce their own Doctors and Schoolmen as witnesses of the truth, these men, say they, are Catholick Authors, but they stand not recti in curia, they must be purged. So witty are Hereticks rather to devise a thousand shifts to elude the truth, then once to yield and acknowledge it. They will not receive the love of the truth (as the intemperate patient will not be ruled by the Physician) And for this cause God delivers them up to strong delusions, vile affections, base and beastly practises; as committing and defending of Sodomie, and such like abhorred filth, not once to be named amongst Christians. But some having put away a good conscience, as concerning faith have made shipwrack, saith the Apostle. A good conscience is as it were a chest, wherein the doctrine of faith is to be kept safe: which will quickly be lost, if the chest be once broken. And they that turn from the truth, will prove abominable, disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate.

Eusebius, and Luther. I answer, Omnes manifesti hæretici sunt. De Christo lib. 1. cap. 2. Mathew Paris speaking of the Court of Rome, saith, Hujus fœtor usque ad nubes fumum teterrimum exhulabat. Tit. 1. 14, 16.

Verse 18. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, &c.] Hereticks then, and Heterodoxes are not good honest men, as the vulgar counts them. For all their pretended holiness, and counterfeit humility, Col. 2. 18. Were they humble men indeed, they would soon soon yield to the truth discovered unto them, and relinquish their erroneous opinions. Swenckfeldius could not be a good man, as Bucholcerus judged him, so long as he held fast his heresies, though he were much in the commendation of a new life, and detestation of an evil: though himself pray'd much, and lived soberly. He bewitched many with those magnificent words, and stately terms that he had much in his mouth, of Illumination, Revelation, Deification; the inward and spiritual man, &c. but in the mean while, he denyed the Humane Nature of Christ to be a creature; and called those that thought otherwise Creaturists. He affirmed the Scripture to be but a dead Letter; which they that held not, he called them Scripturists. Faith he said was nothing else but God dwelling in us, as Osiander after him. In a word, he was a Leper in his head, and is therefore pronounced utterly unclean. An evil tree cannot bring forth good fruit. That Popish Inquisitour was quite out, that said the Waldensian Hereticks may be discerned by their manners and words; for they are modest, true, grave, and full of brotherly love one towards another, but rank Hereticks. This was somewhat like Pliny, his description of the Christians in that Province where he was Governour. And here I cannot omit, that when the B. of Worcester exhorted M. Philpot the Martyr (being brought to his answer) before he began to speak, to pray to God for grace. Nay, my Lord of Worcester, said Bonner, you do not well to exhort him to make any prayer: for this is the thing they have a singular pride in. For in this point they are much like to certain arrant Hereticks, of whom Pliny maketh mention, that they sang antelucanos Hymnos, Psalms of praise to God before break of day. But had Bonner and his fellow-buzzards but observed the burning zeal, sweet assemblies, watchings, prayings, holiness of life, patience in death, &c. of those that served God after the way that they called heresie, they might well have seen and said as much as the Centurion did of our Saviour, and they might have replyed, as our Saviour did of himself, I have not a Devil, but I honour my father, and ye do dishonour me. If I honour my self, my honour is nothing. It is my father that honoureth me, of whom ye say, that he is your God. Cenalis Bishop of Auranches, wrote against the Congregation of Paris, defending impudently, that their Assemblies were to maintain whoredom. How much better, and with more ingenuity the Bishop of Aliff; who preaching at Trent in the time of that Council, Anno 1563. spake of the faith and manners of the Catholicks and Hereticks; and said, that as the faith of the Catholicks was better, so the Hereticks exceeded them in good life; which gave much distast, saith the Historian. But Bellarmine (had he been then and there present) would not likely have been much offended: For we, saith he, although we believe that all the vertues are to be found in the Church; yet that any man may be absolutely said to be a member of the true Church, described in the Scriptures, we do not think that any internal vertue is required of him; but only an external profession of the faith, and such a partaking of the Sacraments, as is perceived by the outward senses. A pretty description and picture of a Papist; amongst whom if any be vertuous, it is by accident, and not as they are members of that Church: As Cicero wittily said of the Epicures, that if any of that sect proved good, it was meerly by the benefit of a better nature; for they taught all manner of looseness and libertinism. But for the most part, such as their doctrine is, such is also their practise. The Fryers (saith one that had seen it, and so could well avouch it) are a race of people always praying, but seldom with sign of devotion; vowing obedience, but still contentious; chastity, yet most luxurious; poverty, yet ever scraping and covetous. And generally the devotions of Papists, saith he, are prized more by tale, then by weight of zeal: placed more in the massy materiality of the outward work, then purity of the heart. from which they proceed. They hold integrity for little better then sillíness and abjectness about Italy, and abuse the most honourable name of Christian, usually, to signifie a Fool, or a Dolt, as is afore noted out of Doctor Fulk. Are not these the fruits of a rotten Religion, of trees specious without, but putrified and worm-eaten within (as the word our Saviour here useth, properly signifieth) which appears at length by their rotten fruits? The true Christian will not cease to bear good fruit, what weather soever come, Jerem. 17.7. The hypocrite will either bear only leaves as the Cypress tree, or apples of Sodom, grapes of Gomorrah. Of such we may say, as of Mount Gilboah, no good fruit grows on them: or as Stratonicus said of the hill Hæmus, that for eight moneths in the year, it was to act rather then to contemplate: Learn and labour to feel in your selves the sweetness and goodness, the life and power of that you know. The Devil confessed Christ as well as Peter, Mark 5.7. Mat.16.17. but the Devil with a common knowledge, swimming in the brain, Peter with a saving knowledge soaking to the heart root, and working upon the affections, those immediate springs of action. This is that knowledge, not apprehensive only, but affective too, that makes the mind good, full of incitations to good, glad of all occasions to do good, free from the stain and raign of former lusts, inclinable to serve God and our brethren by love, fearing the Gospel more then the Law, and Gods goodness more then his justice. Now to grow in these graces, and in this knowledge, is the ready way to secure our selves from Seducers, to approve our selves to have been conscionable hearers of a sound Ministery, such as are founded upon a rock, and are therefore unmoveable, such as have gotten a knowledge so clean and certain, as no heretick can draw from us: And lastly, to save our selves from that untoward generation, our Saviour speaketh next of, in the subsequent verses, that have no more to shew or say for themselves then Lord, Lord, &c.

Verse 21. Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter, &c.] Not every verbal professour, or forward pretender to me and my truth, shall be saved. That son of perdition called Christ Lord, Lord, yet betrayed him with a kiss; and is gone to his place. How many Judas's have we, that speak Christ fair, but by their loose and lawless lives, deliver him up to the scoffs and buffetings of his enemies? that bow the knee to him, and bid Hail King of the Jews, yet smite him on the face, and bid him prophecy who smote him, that put a reeden Scepter in his hand, and make him a titular Lord only, having no more then a form of knowledge, Rom.2.20. a pretence of piety, 2 *Tim.*3.5. and a semblance of sanctimony, Luke 8.18. contenting themselves with the name of Christians: As if many a ship had not been called Safe-guard, or Good-speed, and yet fallen into the hands of Pirates. These are blots of goodness, botches of the Church, as Augustus was used to tearm his three untoward children, tres vomicas, tria carriomata, mattery impostumes, ulcerous sores. Epictetus complained that there were many would be Philosophers, as far as a few good words would go; but were nothing for practise. Socrates made no distinction between σοφία and σωφροσύνη, knowing and doing: So to know good as to practise it, and evil as to avoid it, this he esteemed the only wisdom. Such as say well and do well, are to be embraced, saith Aristotle: but their very profession is to be suspected, that second it not with a suitable practise. Nesciunt insani nesciunt, τὸ καλὸν τὸ καλὸν, qui non vivunt honestè, saith another. There are that speak like Angels, live like Devils; that have Jacobs smooth tongue, but Esau's rough hands. Audi, nemo melius: specta, nemo pejus? Loquitur hic ut Piso, vivit ut Gallonius. All men admire Tullies tongue, saith S. Austin, not so his practice. Seneca could give excellent counsel to others, which himself did not take. He is much taxed for flattery, luxury, covetousness, &c. and something he confesseth hereof (though covertly) in that sentence of his, in his book de Tranquillitate, Nec ægroto, nec valeo, I am neither sick, nor sound. Lillies are fair in shew, but foul in sent. Coin is white in colour, but draws a black line after it: Glow-worms seem to have both light and heat; but touch them only, and it will appear they have neither. Livy saith, that the Athenians waged war against Philip of Macedon with letters and words: So do many against the Devil; they defie him with their mouthes, but deifie him in their lives; they spit at his name, but admit of his suggestions; they call Christ Lord, Lord, but in truth, and upon the matter, the Devil is their good Lord; for his servants they are to whom they obey. They lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord amongst us? none evil can come unto us. But he shall shake them off with a discedite, Depart ye. He likes not this Court-holy-water, as they call it, these fair professions and deep protestations of love, when mens hearts are not with him, when there is not the power of Religion, the practise of godliness. The leaves of profession he dislikes not, for as they are of medicinable use, Ezek. 47. 12. so they are good inducements to force a necessity of more fruit. But he looks for more then leaves: he goes down to his garden to see how it comes forward, in righteousness, peace, joy in the holy Ghost: in meekness, tender-heartedness, love: in patience, humility, contentedness; in mortification of sin, moderation of passion, holy guidance of the tongue; in works of mercy, truth and justice: in self-denial, love of enemies, life of faith; in heavenly-mindedness, sweet communion with God, comfortable longing for the coming coming of Christ, &c. These be those fruits, and that doing of Gods will, without the which our Saviour here averreth there's no heaven to be had, no though men professe largely, preach frequently, pray ardently, eat and drink at his table, dispossess Devils in his name, &c. Judas did all this and was damned. Shalt thou to heaven that doest no more: no nor so much? Wo to all careless Professors, and carnal Gospellers. The Lord will make all the Churches know, that he searcheth the hearts, and will not be beguiled with the fig-leaves of formality. And for those that carry it more cleanly, as they conceive, and can walk undiscovered: let them know, that God (that he may make the name of the wicked to rot) many times so detects their guil, that their wickedness is shewed to the whole Congregation, Prov. 26. 26. Or if not so, yet certainly he will do it at that general Judgement, that great Assize (as it follows in the next verse) when it shall be required of men, non quid legerint, sed quid egerint; non quid dixerent, sed quomodo vixerent, not how much they have talked of heaven, but how well they have walked in the way to heaven: not a proffering of words, but an offerings of works, as Agapetus hath it. The foolish Virgins were found with their sic dicentes; but the good servants with their sic facientes.

οὐ ῥημάτων προφορὰν ἀλλὰ πραγμάτων προσφορὰν ἐν. Agapet.

Verse 22. Many will say to me in that day, &c.] That day of Judgement by an appellative proper, called that day; or at the day of death: for every mans death's-day is his doom's-day, Heb. 9. Then they shall come bouncing at heaven gates, with Lord, Lord, open unto us; and make no other reckoning but to enter with the first. Which shews, that an hypocrite may live and dye in self-delusion, and miss of heaven in the height of his hopes. He hanged them upon nothing (as God hath hang'd the earth) they prove unto him therefore as the giving up of the Ghost, which is but cold comfort; and serve him no better then Absoloms Mule did her master in his greatest need. What, saith Job, is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained much, when God shall take away his soul? will God hear his cry when trouble comes upon him? will his crying Lord, Lord, rescue him in the day of wrath? No, no: God will pour upon him and not spare, fire and brimstone, storm and tempest; this shall be the portion of his cup. The just execution of that terrible commination, Rev. 3. 16. shall certainly crush his heart, with everlasting horrour, confusion and wo. Oh that this truth were throughly thought on and believed! but men are wondrous apt to deceive themselves in point of salvation. Therefore doth the Apostle so oft premise, Be not deceived, when he reckoneth up reprobates, 1 Cor. 6. 9. Ephes. 5. 6, &c. Themselves they may deceive, and others, but God is not mocked. Balaam seems, by his words and wishes, a friend to Israel; yet he is so far from inheriting with them, that he is destroyed by them: This will be the portion of hypocrites from the Lord. If their hearts be not upright with him, he will never give them his hand, no though they follow him, as close as Jehonadab did Jehu. Their hopes shall fail them, when at highest; as Esau's did, returning with his Venison.

Iob 11. 20. Iob 27. 8, 9. 2 King. 16. 15

Have we not prophesied in thy name] A man may preach profitably to others, and yet himself be a cast-away, 1 Cor. 9. ult. Pendleton confirmed Saunders, and afterward turned tippet himself. Harding a little afore King Edward 6. dyed, was heard openly in his Sermons in London to exhort the people with great vehemency after this sort, That if trouble came, they should never shrink from the true Doctrine of the Gospel which they had received, but take it rather for a tryal sent of God to prove them whether they would abide by it or no. All which to be true, saith M. Fox, they can testifie that heard him, and be yet alive; who also fore-seeing the plague to come, were then much confirmed by his words. In Q. Maries days he turned Apostate, and so continued, notwithstanding an excellent letter of the Lady Jane Dudley, written to him while he was Prisoner; wherein she stirs him up to remember the horrible history of Julian of old, and the lamentable case of Spira a late, and so to return to Christ; who now stretcheth out (saith she) his arms to receive you, ready to fall upon your neck and kiss you, and last of all to feast you with the dainties and delicacies of his own precious blood: which undoubtedly, if it might stand with his determinate purpose, he would not let to shed again rather then you should be lost. And so she goes on most sweetly: sed surdo fabulam, she lost her sweet words: As likewise did William Wolsey the Martyr upon Denton the Smith of Wells in Cambridgeshire, and some others, upon Mr. West Chaplain to Bishop Ridley, who refusing to dye in Christs cause with his Master, said Mass against his conscience. B. Latimer, in a Sermon afore K. Edward, tells of one

one who fell away from the known truth, and became a scorner of it, yet was afterward touched in conscience for the same. Beware of this sin, saith he, for I have known no more but this that repented. Johannes Speiserus, Doctor of Divinity, and Preacher at Ausborough in Germany, Anno 1523. began to teach the truth of the Gospel, and did it so effectually, that divers common harlots were converted, and betook themselves to a better course of life. But he afterward revolted again to the Papists, and came to a miserable end. The like is reported of Brisonettus Bishop of Melda, a Town of France, ten miles from Paris. And who doubts but Judas the Traytor was a great Preacher, a Caster out of Devils, and doer of many great works in Christs name, as well as other of the Disciples? Nicodemus was nothing to him. He (saith one) was a night-professor only, but Judas in the sight of all. He was a slow Schollar, Judas a forward Preacher. Yet at last when Judas betrayed Christ in the night, Nicodemus faithfully profest him in the day. Therefore will Christ confess him before God, Angels and men, when Judas shall hear, Avaunt, thou worker of iniquity, I know thee not. Neronis (*Quantus artifex pereo? qualem habebit in te peritum & perituram. And in thy name have done many Wonderful works] By a faith of miracles, whereby a man may remove mountains, and yet miscarry, 1 Cor. 13.2. And here such as work wonders may deceive themselves in the main point of their own salvation: How much more may they deceive others in this or that particular point of Doctrine? The coming of Antichrist is after the Working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying Wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish. Lying wonders they are called in regard not only of the end, which is to deceive, but of the substance: For the Devil cannot do a true miracle, which is ever beside and against nature and second causes; such as whereof there can be no natural reason possibly rendred, no, though it be hid from us. The Devil, I say, cannot do a miracle He may juggle and cast a mist. S. Hierom writes, that a certain Damosel was brought to Macarius by her father, who complained that his daughter was by witch-craft turned into a Mare. Macarius answered, that he could see no such thing in her, nothing but humane shape, and that their eyes, that thought and said so, were blinded by Satan, wherefore turning himself to prayer, he obtained, that the mist might be removed from the parents eyes, and then they saw their mistake. The like is reported of Mr. Tindal the Martyr, that being at Antwerp among a company of Merchants, he hindred, by his presence and prayers, a certain Jugler, that he could not play his feats; so that he was compelled openly to confess, that there was some man there at supper, that disturbed and letted all his doings. So that a man even in the Martyrs of these days (saith M. Fox) cannot lack the miracles of true faith, if they were to be desired. O ye Papists (said Bainham, in the midst of the flame) behold, you look for miracles: here now you may see a miracle; for in this fire I feel no more pain then if I were in a bed of down, it is to me as a bed of roses. But the Devil is ashamed (saith Gretser the Jesuit) to confirm Luthers doctrine with miracles. We could tell him and his fellows, of Myconius recovered out of a desperate disease by Luthers prayers, which Myconius acknowledged for a miracle to his dying day. And of another young man of Wittenberg that had sold himself to the Devil, body and soul, for money, and sealed the obligation with his own blood: But was delivered by Luthers prayers, out of the danger of the Devil, who was compelled (saith M. Fox) at last to throw in the obligation at the window, and bad the young man take it unto him again. But he that now requireth miracles for the confirmation of his faith, is himself a great miracle, saith Austin. Manna ceased when they came into Canaan; as if it would say, ye need no miracles now you have means. The wonderful preservation of Luther, that man of God, amidst so many potent enemies, the publishing and carrying of his doctrine, in the space of a moneth, throughout all Germany and some forraign Countreys, as it were upon Angels wings, the establishing of the Reformation to be done by so weak and simple means, yea by casual and cross means, against the force of so puissant and publike an adversary, this is that miracle which we are in these times to look for.

Verse 23. And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you] No not when you professed most love to me, and did me (to see to) greatest service. I knew you well enough for black sheep, or rather for reprobate goats, I knew you for hirelings and hypocrites, but I never knew you with a special knowledge of love, delight and complacency. I never acknowledged, approved and accepted of your persons and performances, see Psal. 1.6. Rom. 11.2. Gods sharp nose doth easily discern, and is offended with the stinking breath of the hypocrites rotten lungs, though his words be never so sented and perfumed, though his deeds be never so mantled and masked, with shews of holiness. God utterly disowns and disavows all such, for if any man have not the spirit of God, saith Paul, the same is none of his; be he whose he will be. And whereas he naturally delights in mercy, yet he will by no means clear the guilty; yea he will mock at their destruction, and laugh when their fear cometh. He will spue them out of his mouth. Ah he will ease him of his adversaries: and be as well apaid thereof, as a man is that hath rid his stomack of the surfet or sick matter that clogg'd it.

Depart from me] Oh direful and dreadfull sentence! such as shall make their very heartstrings crack (not their ears tingle only) and their hearts fall asunder in their bosoms, like drops of water. Surely if the gentle voice of God in the cool of the day were so terrible to our first parents: And if his sweet voice in the preaching of the Gospel of grace be so formidable to the wicked, that Felix trembled, and the stoutest are quailed, the edge of their fury is rebated, their hearts often ake and quake within them: what will they do when the Lion of the tribe of Judah shall roar out upon them, this fearfull Discedite that breaths out nothing but fire and brimstone, stings and horrors, woe and alas, Seas of vengeance, and the worm that never dieth, torments without end, and past imagination? The desparate souldiers (that would not have dreaded to dare the Devil to a duell) fell before him to the ground, when in the state of his humility, he said but, I am he: how will the wicked stand before him in his Majesty? If Gideons torches and trumpets so daunted the proud Mideanites, how shall these abide the terror of the last day?

Isa. 1. 24. Dicetur reprobis. Ite, venite, probis. In aura dici. Gen. 3.

Ye workers of iniquity] Ye that make it your trade and task; that do wickedly with both hands earnestly; that are wittily wicked, and can art out iniquity; that dig in the Devils mines, row in his gallies, grind in his mill, and are not wearied: that live by your sins, as the labourer doth by his trade; and esteem it as the means of an happy life. Ye that, although ye cannot be charged with any crying crime, but have Lord Lord in your mouths, and a shew of holiness in your lives, yet regard iniquity in your hearts: and when you seem most of all high-flown, have a leering eye upon some beloved sin, as the Eagle hath upon her prey below, when she soreth highest. Your very preaching in Christs Name (if not for his name) is, with God a work of iniquity, and shall have the wages of sin, which is death, when Christ comes to judgement. Then they that would not obey those sweet commands, Repent, for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand, seek ye the Lord while he may be found. Believe in the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved, thou and all thy household, &c. shall have no other commandment left them to obey, but this horrible Depart ye: which imports an utter separation from the beatifical vision and fruition of God, and this is the very hell of hell, &c. Mean while, whereto serves the worlds Euge, when they are sure of Christs Apage.

Latini medicinam & argentarium facile dicunt. Our workers of iniquity are they that work from God, or without God, or not in God, according to God, else are but shining sins. M. Harris at Pauls cross.

Verse 24. Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, &c.] Here we have the conclusion of this, if not first, yet certainly, fullest of our Saviours Sermons: for matter most heavenly, and for order more then methodical. Most men think, if they sit out a Sermon, it is sufficient: when the preacher hath once done, they have done to: Away they go, and (for any practice) they leave the word where they found it, or depart sorrowfull, as he in the Gospel, that Christ requireth such things as they are not willing to perform. Our Saviour had four sorts of hearers, and but one good, that brought forth fruit with patience. When St. Paul preached at Athens, some mocked, others doubted, a few believed, but no Church was founded there (as at other places) because Christ crucified was preached; unto the Jews a stumbling block, and to those Greeks foolishness; whiles the Jews required a sign, and the Greeks sought after wisdom. But what saith the Prophet? Behold they have rejected the Word of the Lord, and what wisdom is in them? He is a wise builder, a wise servant, a wise virgin, a wise merchant, (if our Saviour may be judge) that heareth these sayings of his, and doth them. They that place religion in hearing, and go no further, will prove egregious fools in the end. Which to prevent, look intently and accurately, saith that Apostle, stoop down, and pry heedfully into the perfect law of liberty (as the Cherubims did into the Propitiatory, as the Angels do into the mysterie of Christ, as the Disciples did into the sepulchre of Christ) and continue therein, till ye be transformed thereinto: Not being forgetful hearers, but doers of the work: so shall ye be blessed in the deed. It is not enough to hear, but take heed how you hear. Bring with you the loan of your former hearing. For to him that hath shall be given, and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you. As ye measure to God in preparation and practice, he will measure to you in success and blessing: and every time that you hear, God will come to you in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of peace. See that ye shift not off him that speaketh, Heb. 12. 25. Veniat, veniat verbum Domini, & submittemus illi, si excenta si nobis essent colla, saith a notable Dutch Divine. Let God speak, and we will yeild, though it were to the loss of a thousand lives. The Macedonians delivered themselves up to God, and the Romans to the form of doctrine that was delivered unto them: they took impression from it, as the metal doth from the mould, or as the wax doth from the seal. David lifted up his hands to Gods Commandments, Psal. 119. 48. he did all the wills of God, who had set him both his time and his task. Religion is not a name, saith one, goodness a word; it is active like fire, communicative like light. As the life of things stand in goodness: so the life of goodness in action. The chiefest goods are most active, the best good a meer act. And the more good we do, the more God-like and excellent we be, and the better provided against a rainy day.

The Conies are a people weak and wise, saith Solomon; and their wisdom herein appears; they work themselves holes and burrows in the bosom of the earth, in the roots of the rocks. Learn we to do the like: and be sure to dig deep enough (as St. Luke hath it) which while the stony-ground-hearers did not, their blade was scorcht up, and came to nothing. Some flashing joy they had upon the hearing of the Word, and many meltings (according to the nature of the Doctrine delivered) but these sudden affections, being not well bottomed, nor having principles to maintain them, they were but like Conduits running with wine at the Coronation, or like a land flood, that seems to be a great Sea, but is soon gone again.

And it fell not.] Saving grace is unleesable, though it may be impaired in the degrees, and may recoyl to the root, as sap doth in winter. Christ lives in the hearts of all his Saints, Gal. 2. 20. and can die no more, Rom. 6. 10. Die he may as well at the right hand of his father, as in the heart of a Christian.

Object. A weak brother, for whom Christ died, may perish, 1 Cor. 8. 11.

Sol. No thank to us, if he do not; who, by scandalous courses offend and wound his conscience: but Christ will not lose him so.

Object. There are that deny the Lord that bought them, 2 Pet. 2. 1.

Sol. Bought they were by Christ in their own conceit, and in the esteem of others, but it proved otherwise. Or, they were bought, that is, delivered, in a general sense (so the word here used, often signifieth) from their superstition to the knowledge of Salvation (I say not to saving knowledge) whereby they might preach to others, themselves being cast-aways. God hath charged Christ, as Mediator, to see to the keeping of the bodies and souls of all true believers, Joh. 6. 39, 40. And he faithfully performed it. Those thou gavest me I have kept, saith he, and none of them is lost, Joh. 17. 12.

Christ makes exception of one that was lost, Ibid. Object.

That shews he was never of his body: for can he be a Saviour of a son of perdition? Sol.

Why is he then excepted? Object.

1. Because he seemed to be one of Christs, by reason of his office. Sol.

2. He speaketh there in particular of the twelve: and to be an Apostle, was, in it self, but an outward calling.

Christians may lose the things that they have wrought, Joh. 2. 8. Object.

1. Temporaries may, and do; and of them it may be understood, ver. 9. Sol.

2. True Christians may: 1. In respect of the praise of men: All their former honor may be laid in the dust. 2. In regard of the inward sense and comfort, as David, Psal. 32. & 51. 3. In respect of the fulness of the reward in heaven, their glory may be much lessened by their falls.

A righteous man may turn from his righteousness, and die, Ezek. 18. 24. Object.

From his righteousness imparted, or that of sanctification, he may turn in part, and for a time, and die a temporal death for his offence, as Josiah: Not so from his righteousness imputed, or that of justification, so as to die eternally. Or the holy Ghost may so speak, as of a thing impossible: as, if an Angel from haven should preach any other Doctrine, &c. which cannot possibly be. So that this text concludes not categorically. The Comforter shall abide with us for ever, Joh. 14. 16. It is called an earnest, not a pawn. A pawn is to be returned again; but an earnest is part and pledge of the whole sum. Sol. Gal. 1.

What need then so many exhortations to perseverance? Quest.

1. True grace in it self is leesable, in respect of us, who should fall from it, as Adam; but we are kept by the power and promise of God to salvation; and we need Christs left-hand to be under us, and his right-hand over us to clasp and hold us up. He keepeth the feet of the Saints, and preserves us from all such evil, as may frustrate our perseverance, 2 Thes. 3. 3. 1 Joh. 5. 18. Answ. 1 Sam. 2. 9.

2. By these exhortations, as means, Gods grace is promoted, and preserved in us.

3. We are but in part renewed, and are apt to backslide; if we row not hard, wind and tide will carry us back again. Heed therefore must be taken, that we look not back with Lots wife; that our Iacobs-ladder may reach to heaven; that our oyl fail not, till the bride-groom come; that our coat reach down to our heels, as Iosephs, and the high-Priests did; that we sacrifice the beast with the tail; that we keep in this fire of the Sanctuary; or, if it slackt, that we rake it out of the ashes, and blow it up again into a flame; Gen. 37. 3. Verse 26. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doth them not, &c.] Which is the greater number of hearers. For most men hear to hear, and not to practise. Some hear meerly of form, or for fashion sake, or to save the penalty of the Statute, or to find some Recipe to procure a sleep, or to still the clamours of their consciences, or to make amends and purchase dispensation for some beloved lust, as Herod. Or expecting from the preacher some choice novelty, as Mat 3. 8. some deep point; Mat. 12. 37. or dainty expressions, as Ezek. 33. 32. Or they hear and jear, Acts 17. 32. Hear and carp, as Doeg; hear and resist the holy Ghost, Acts 7. Or at least are no whit wrought upon, whether we pipe or lament to them. Or if they hear and admire, as those. Mat. 22. 22. yet they amend nothing, or but for a season, as the stony-ground: they are hearers of forgetfulness, Jam. 1. 25. like hour-glasses, they are no sooner full, but running out again: like nets or sives, they retain only the chaff or weeds, let go the pure water and good corn. The Word runs thorow them, as water thorow a riven vessel (that's the Apostles metaphor, Heb. 2. 1.) or as that which is written upon moist paper, as others will have it. A general cause of our not practising what we hear, is, that we put this spiritual treasure into broken bags, this precious liquor into leaking vessels. Whereas our souls should be as the Ark, and our memories, as the pot of Mannah, to retain what we have received, that we may have it ready for practice, as Saul had his cruse and spear at his head, and David his scrip and stones ready by his side. A heavy ear is a singular judgement, Isa. 6. 10. but a slow heart, and a heavy hand, to conceive and do what we hear, paves a way to remedilesse misery; besides the fool to boot which the Judge here putteth upon him.

Mat. 11. 17. ἀκροᾶται ἐπὶ λήμμονῆς.

Shall be likened unto a foolish man.] And he is a fool indeed whom Christ calleth fool. Conscionable hearers are counted good men (God wot) but simple, silly, and of no parts. But wisdom is justified of her children. To walk precisely, is to walk wisely, Ephes. 5. 15. And he that heareth and guideth his feet in the way, is wise, Prov. 23. 19. And, Who is a wise man amongst you, and endued with knowledge? Let him shew out of a good conversation his works, &c. Iam. 3. 13. All others are fools, because they fail in the main point of their salvation: they are troubled about many things, but neglect the one thing necessary: they trifle out their precious opportunities, and in hearing or other services, they do worse then lose their labor, for they commit sin and heap up wrath. Their house will down, as the spiders house doth, and all their building, plowing, planting, sailing, come to nothing.

Which built his house upon the sand.] Wherefore it soon sinks and shatters, as having not the loose earth thrown up first, by the practice of mortification and self-deniall. Men should first sit down, and cast what it would cost them to build the tower of godliness, or ere they leap into profession. They should put their hearts often to those grand questions of abnegation. Can I (as all must, that will be Christs Disciples) deny my self in all my selves (for a man hath many selves within himself, and must utterly and absolutely deny them all) take up my daily cross (for every Christian is a Crucian or Cross-bearer, saith Luther: the rain will fall, the floods flow, the winds blow, and beat upon his building, he shall have many trials and temptations, that looks toward heaven, troubles without, terrors within, his back-burden of both) and follow Christ thorow thick and thin, by doing and suffering his whole will? Many will follow Christ in such duties as sute with their humors, and no further, as the rusty hand of a Dial; they will break the hedge of his Law, to shun a piece of foul way: They follow Christ, as the dog follows his master, till he come by a carrion, and then he turns him up. Orpha made a fair proffer of going along with Naomi, but when she had better considered it, she turned again. Lots wife set fair out of Sodom, but looked back. So do many forward hearers set their hands to Gods plough, but (loth to plough up the fallow ground of their hearts, and to lay a good foundation in humiliation) they start aside like broken bows, and steal away like cowardly souldiers, and so judge themselves unworthy of eternal life, and unfit for Gods Kingdom. For the foolish shall not stand ſtand in his ſight, he hateth all the workers of inquity. Caleb was not diſcouraged by the Gyants, therefore he had Hebron given him, the place of the Gyants, when the Spies and Murmurers were never ſuffered to enter: No more ſhall they that hold not out to the death, obtain the crown of life.

Verſe 27. And the rain deſcended, &c.] The old heart cannot poſſibly hold out the hardſhip of holineſs, nor bear the brunt of perſecution for well-doing. Like a Cheſnut caſt into the fire, if not broken firſt on the top, it leaps out again; or like a falſe Jade in a Teem, which being put to a ſtreſs, turns tail and tramples. When the godly hearer holds on his way to Heaven, thorow all diſaſters; as thoſe two kine of the Philiſtims, that bore home the Ark, held on their way, though they had calves at home, that might have made them turn back.

And it fell] The wiſe-man and fools houſe come under a double difference. 1. In the foundation: this to ſee to, and above ground, is little diſcerned. The Temple is ſaid to be as low under ground, as it was high above. 2. In the building it ſelf. The unprofitable hearer is not cemented to Chriſt by faith, but laid looſe, as it were, upon a ſandy foundation, and ſo ſlips beſide the ground-work in foul weather. He is not ſet into the ſtock as a ſcience, but only ſtuck into the ground as a ſtake; and is therefore eaſily pulled up, Whereas the true Chriſtian is knit faſt to Chriſt the Rock, by the ligament of a lively faith; and as a lively ſtone, is built up a ſpiritual houſe, growing up in the myſtical body with ſo much ſweetneſs and evenneſs, as if the whole Temple (like that of Solomon) were but one entire ſtone, He that is joyned to the Lord is one ſpirit, 1 Cor. 6. 17. So that although 1. Shakings and waverings in the very purpoſe of holy-walking may befal a Saint by violent temptations, Pſal. 73. 2, 13. Yea, 2. Intermiſſions of the exerciſe of grace, as of life in a palſey or epilepſie. 3. Particular falls we are not exempted from. Peter himſelf, though a pillar, fell from his former ſtedfaſtneſs, in part; yet from interciſion, prolapſion, from utter and irrecoverable falling away, they are freed, becauſe founded upon a Rock, which can never be removed. He is both the Author and finiſher of their faith: He hath prayed and procured, that it utterly fail not. 1 Pet. 2. 5. Heb. 12. Luk. 22.

And the fall thereof was great.] Great and grievous, becauſe irreparable, irre-edifiable, as Hiericho and the Temple at Jeruſalem. God layes them aſide like broken veſſels, of which there is no further uſe; and ſith they will needs wallow again, as Swine, in the filth of their former pollutions, he pronounceth upon them that fearful ſentence, Let him that is filthy be filthy ſtill, that unclean ſpirit entereth him again; and his diſdiſpoſitions to evil are ſeven times more enflamed then ever. He hath deſpiſed and deſpighted the Spirit of Grace, and is in the ready road to the unpardonable ſin. The Apoſtate cannot lightly chuſe unto himſelf a worſe condition, Heb. 10. 26. He caſts himſelf into hel-mouth, Heb. 10. ult. where the back-ſlider in heart ſhall be filled with his own wayes; and have the greater torment, by how much he fell from greater hopes and poſſibilities of better; as Nebuchadnezzar from his Monarchy, and as Cranmer from his high preferment to ſo low a condition, as that there was left him neither hope of better, nor place of worſe. Heb. 10. 26. Prov. 14. 14.

Verſe 28. And it came to paſs, when Jeſus had ended theſe ſayings.] All this then was but one Sermon, though twice preached at ſeveral times, as ſome collect out of Luke. A long Sermon it was, and yet the people ſtaid it out. So did not thoſe Capernaites, Joh. 6. and therefore fell away from Chriſt: So did not Judas, and therefore met the Devil at the door. It is a lamentable thing, that a winters-tale ſhall be heard with more patience and pleaſure then a powerful Sermon: that if a Preacher exceed his glaſs ſometimes, people ſit at as little eaſe, as if they were in a fit of an ague: and others prophanely turn their backs upon the Propitiatory, and depart without the bleſſing. In the Council of Agathon it was decreed that none ſhould preſume to go out before the Miniſter had bleſſed the Congregation. And in the fourth Council of Carthage, Let him that goes out of the Auditory, when the Miniſter is ſpeaking to the Congregation be excommunicated, Ita miſſa eſt, Ἄφεσις λαὸς, were the old forms of diſmiſſion. And although Zachary was long ere he came forth, yet the people ſtaid his coming. But the Word of the Lord is to the wicked a burthen, Jer. 27. 33. cords and bonds, Pſal. 2. 3. The people were astonished at his doctrine.] They were strangely transported and rapt with an ecstasie of admiration and amazement. They were at such a pass, that they could neither say nor do, but stood amazed with their eyes set in their heads, as the word importeth. And surely the word never worketh so kindely, as when it is received with admiration: yet may we not rest in that, as too many do; but get it mingled with faith in our hearts, that works by love, holding fast the faithful word, as Paul bids Timothy, that part of it especially that in hearing he is pleased to sweeten unto us by the the taste of his special goodness.

Verse 29. For he taught them as one having authority.] Never man spake as he spake, said those Catch-poles that came to take him, but were taken by him. For matter, his doctrine was not his own, but his Fathers that sent him. For manner, this Prince of Preachers had the tongue of the learned: yet without ostentation of learning, he delivered himself so plainly, that the simplest might conceive him, and so powerfully, that his enemies could not but confess, that he was true, and taught the way of God truly. And for end, he seriously sought his Fathers glory, in the salvation of mens souls. A fair president for Preachers: who should thus seek to get within the people, and to maintain the credit of their ministry, that their words may carry an authority, and command attention.

This drew upon our Saviour the envie of the Pharisees, those cankerd carls, who Sejanus-like, thought all lost that fell besides their own lips: as Nero, they spited all those whom the people applauded; and Tigre-like, laid hold with their teeth on all the excellent spirits of their times, as it is said of Tiberius.

Verse 2. And behold there came a Leper.] This leprosie was most rife in our Saviours time: God so ordering, that Judea was sickest, when her Physitian was neerest. The Jews are still a nasty people: And this kinde of leprosie seems to have been proper to them, as Plica Polonica, Morbus Gallicus, Sudor Anglicus. No stranger in England was touched with this disease, and yet the English were chased therewith, not in England onely, but in other Countreys abroad: which made them like Tyrants, both feared and avoyded, where ever they came. So were these Jewish lepers. Hence that fable in Tacitus, that the Israelites were driven out of Egypt, for that lothsome disease. This, said one Malevolent Heathen, is the cause why they rest every seventh day. Bodinus observes it for a special providence of God, that in Arabia (which bordereth upon Judea,) there are no Swine to be found, lest that most leprous creature, saith he, should more and more infest and infect that people, who are naturally subject to the leprosie. And another good Author is of opinion, that God did therefore forbid the Jews to eat either Swines-flesh, or Hares-flesh: Quòd ista caro facilè in malè affectis corporibus putrescat, because in diseased bodies it easily corrupts and turns to ill humours.

And worshipped him.] Which he would hardly ever have done haply, had he not been a leper. Diseases, saith S. Ambrose, are the shop of vertues. King Alfred found himself ever best, when he was worst: and therefore prayed God, to send him always some sickness: Gehezies leprosie cured him, his white fore-head made him a white soul.

If thou wilt, thou canst, &c.] So Another came with, If thou canst do any thing, help us: We never doubt of Christs will to do us good, (saith a great Divine) but, in some degree, we doubt also of his power. True faith doubts of neither: but believes against sense in things invisible, and against reason in things incredible. Sense corrects imagination, Reason corrects sense, but Faith corrects both. D. Preston.

Verse 3. And Jesus put forth his hand, &c.] The law forbad contactum contagionis, non sanationis. The high-Priest might enter a leprous house, &c. We have not an high-Priest that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Better might he say, then S. Cyprian, Cum singulis pectus meum copulo, mœroris & funeris pondera luctuosa participo, cum plangentibus plango, cum deflentibus defleo; &c. Then S. Paul, Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is afflicted, and I burn not? It was held a great condescention in King Alphonsus, to use his skill for the recovery of one of his sick Subjects: What was it here in Christ, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords? Heb. 4. 15. 2 Cor. 11. 29.

Verse 4. See thou tell no man.] Christ despised popular applause, accounting it no other then a little stinking breath. Some do all for a name: But we have not so learned Christ. His treasures were hid, Col. 2. 3. He sought not himself, but to set up him that sent him, Joh. 8. 50.

Shew thy self to the Priest,] That they may see that I am He that should come, that Jehovah the Physitian, that Son of righteousness with health under his wings, &c. that I came not to destroy the Law, as they slanderously give out, but to fulfil it, that God may be glorified, and the mouth of malice stopped.

Offer the gift, &c.] This is that pepper-corn we pay to God, who is content that we have the benefit of his favours, so He may have the glory of them. Not lepers onely, but all sorts, after sickness, were bound to offer to God the ransom of their lives, Exod. 31. Hezekiah made a Song, and left it to posterity, for a seal of his thankfulness. Heathens in this case, would consecrate something to their Gods, to their Teraphim. The very word in Greek that signifies to heal, (framed from Teraphim) signifies first to worship and serve God: So shewing us what they were wont to do in case of cure. But now-adays sciopato il morbo, fraudato il Santo, as the Italian proverb hath it. Sick men recovered, deal as ship-wrackt men escaped: they promise God, as he in Erasmus his Naufragium did the Virgin, a picture of wax as big as S. Christopher: but when he came to shore, would not give a tallow-candle. Vers. 5. There came unto him a Centurion.] Rarior est virtus veniens, è corpore raro. Souldiers are commonly fierce and godless creatures. But this noble Centurion might well have made a Commander in that Thundering Legion, and might well have had his hand in that Victoria Halleluiatica (as it was called) obtained by the Orthodox Britans, against the Pelagian Picts and Saxons here, Victoriâ fide obtentâ non viribus, as the story tells us; a victory got by faith, and not by force. Κεραυνοβόλος. D. Ussher de Britan. Eccles. primord. p. 332.

Verse 6. Lord, my servant lyeth at home, &c.] Not thrown out of doors, not cast sick into a corner, to sink or swim, for any care his master would take of him: No, nor left to be cured at his own charges. The good Centurion was not a better man then a master. So was that renowned Sir Thomas Lucy late of Charlecott in Warwickshire; to whose singular commendation it was in mine hearing preached at his Funeral, and is now since published, by my much honoured friend, Mr. Robert Harris, that (among many others that would dearly miss him) a houseful of servants had lost not a Master, but a Physitian, who made their sickness his, and his cost and physick theirs. Or (as mine Alter-Ego) mine entirely beloved kinsman, Mr. Thomas Dugard * (expresseth it in his elegant Epitaph.) His servants sickness was his simphathy, and their recovery his cost. Abners funeral by M. Harris, Cui blanda in vultu gravitas & mite serenâ Fronte supercilium, sed pectus mitius ore.

health. It was a great favour that Q. Elizabeth did Sir Christopher Hatton L. Chancellour (who died nevertheless of grief of minde) that, when she had broken his heart with a harsh word, she was pleased to visit and comfort him, though it were all too late. Camdens Eliz. fol. 406.

What was it then for the Lord Christ in the shape of a servant, to come down to the sick servants pallet? Hunniades, when he felt himself in danger of death, desired to receive the Sacrament, before his departure: And would in any case (sick as he was) be carried to the Church to receive the same, saying that it was not fit that the Lord should come to the house of his servant, but the servant rather to go to the house of his Lord and Master. Turk. Hist. 358.

Verse 8. Lord, I am not worthy, &c.] Fidei mendica manus: Faith is an emptying grace, and makes a man cry out with Pomeran: Etiamsi non sum dignus, nihilominus tamen sum indigens. By Faith we come to see him that is invisible. Now the more a man seeth of God, the less he seeth by himself: the nearer he draweth to God, the more rottenes he feeleth in his bones. Lord I am hell, but thou art heaven, (said Mr. Hooper Martyr, at his death) I am swill and a sink of sin, but thou art a gracious God, &c. Act. and Mon.

But speak the word onely, &c.] The Centurions humility was not more low, then his faith lofty: That reacheth up unto heaven, and in the face of humane weakness, descries omnipotency. D. Hall.

Verse 9. For I am a man.] But thou Lord art more then a man: for the Centurion here makes comparison with our Saviour, both in respect of his person, and of his power, as of the less with the greater. For his person, he saith not, For I also am a man, such as thou art, (as the vulgar here corruptly renders it.) But I am a man, a meer man; Thou art God also, very God. And for his power, though subject to another, have Souldiers at my beck and check, how much more hast thou, who art over all, an absolute power over sickness and death? The palsie, or as some say, the Epilepsie was anciently called Morbus sacer, or the holy disease. For the Priests, to enrich themselves, perswaded the superstitious people, that this disease, as being sudden, hidden, and for most part incurable, was an immediate hand of God, and could be cured by none but Priests. The medicines they gave, were much like that of the French Mountebank, who was wont to give in writing to his patients, for curing all diseases, these following Verses; Nam & ego sum homo, ut tu.

Accipias herbam, sed qualem nescio, nec quam:

Answer to D. Coal.

And I say to this man Go, and he goeth, &c.] King Ferdinands Embassadours, being conducted into the Camp of the Turks, wondered at the perpetual and dumb silence of so great a multitude: the Souldiers being so ready and attentive, that they were no otherwise commanded, then by the beckning of the hand, or nod of their Commanders. Turk. Hist. fol. 715. Tamerlan, that warlike Schithian, had his men at so great command, that no danger was to them more dreadful, then his displeasure. Ibid. 216.

And to my servant, do this and he doth it.] Such a servant is every Saint to his God; at least in his desire and endeavour. Such a Centurion also is he over his own heart, which he hath at his right hand, as Solomon saith: that is, ready prest to obey God in all parts and points of duty. There were seven sorts of Pharisees: And one was Pharisæus, Quid debeo facere, & faciam illud: So they would needs be called. But the true Christian onely is such a one in good earnest, as the Pharisee pretends to be. Talmud. tract. suta. cap. 3.

Verse 10. He marvelled, and said, &c.] What can be so great a marvel, as that Christ marvelleth? Verse 11. Many shall come from the East,] They shall flie as a Cloud, saith Isay (speaking of the conversion of the Gentiles) and so flock to the Church, as if a whole flight of Doves, driven by some Hawk or Tempest, should scour into the Columbary, and rush into the Windows. Every man is either a King or a caytiff: and shall either raign with Christ, or rue it for ever with the Devil. Aut Cæsar aut nullus, as he said to his Mother: And as those in the Turks Court, that are born of the blood royal, but come not to the Kingdom; They must die either by the sword, or halter: so here.

Hom. 16.

Omnis homo aut est cum Christo regnaturus, aut cum diabolo cruciandus, Aug.

Verse 13. And as thou hast believed, &c.] Faith hath an happy hand: and never but speeds in one kinde or other. It hath what it would, either in money, or moneys-worth. Apollonius, saith Zozomen, never asked any thing of God in all his life, that he obtained not. This man saith One concerning Luther, could have of God whatsoever he listed.

Verse 14. He saw his wives mother laid, &c.] A wife then Peter had, and if a good wife, she might be a singular help to him in his Ministry; As Nazianzens mother was to her husband, not a companion onely, but in some respects, a guide to godliness. S. Ambrose saith, that all the Apostles were married men, save John and Paul. And those Pope-holy hypocrites, that will not hear of Priests marriage, but hold it far better for them to have, and keep at home, many Harlots, then one wife, (as that carnal Cardinal Campeius defended) they might hear the contrary out of their own Cannon-law, where it is written, Distin. 29. Si quis discernit Presbyterum conjugatum, tanquam occasione nuptiarum offerre non debeat, anathema esto. And again, Distinct. 31. Si quis vituperat nuptias, & dormientem cum viro suo fidelem & religiosam detestatur, aut culpabilem æstimat, velut quæ regnum Dei introire non possit, anathema esto. They might hearken to Paphnutius, a famous Primitive Confessor: who, though himself an unmarryed man, mightily perswaded and prevailed with the the Nicene Council, that they should not decree any thing against Priests marriage: alledging, that marriage was honourable in all, and that the bed undefiled was true chastity. They might hear Ignatius, Scholar to S. John the Evangelist, pronouncing all such as call marriage a defilement, to be inhabited by that old Dragon the Divil. But there is a politick reason that makes these men deaf, to whatsoever can be said to them by whomsoever; and you shall have it in the words of him that wrote the History of the Council of Trent, (a Council carryed by the Pope, with such infinite guile and craft, that the Jesuites those Connubsanctisuga, Commeritricitega will even smile in the triumphs of their own wits, when they hear it but mentioned, as a master-stratagem.) The Legates in Trent-Council (saith he) were blamed, for suffering the Article of Priests Marriage to be disputed, as dangerous: Because it is plain, that married Priests will trun their affections and love to wife and children; and by consequence, to their House and Countrey: so that the strict dependance which the Clergy hath upon the Apostolike-sea would cease: and to grant Marriage to Priests, would destroy the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy, and make the Pope, Bishop of Rome onely.

Verse 15. And he touched her hand,] A speedy and easie cure of the fever; such as Hipocrates or Galen could never skill of. They do it not but by many evacuations, long diet, &c. besides that, much gold must be lavished out of the bag, as it is, Isa. 46 6. the poor patient crying oft out, αἰ αἰ, whence Æger, as some think. As he can blow us to destruction, Job 4.9. nod us to destruction, Psal. 80. 16. so, when Heman thinks himself free among the dead, free of that company, and the mourners begin to go about the streets, he can speak life unto us, and keep us that we go not down to the pit.

Verse 17. Himself took our infirmities,] The Prophet speaketh of spiritual infirmities, the Evangelist applieth it to corporal. And not unfitly: for these are the proper effects of those: we may thank our sins for our sicknesses, Rev. 2.22. She had stretcht her self upon a bed of security, she shall be cast, another while, upon a bed of sickness. Asa had laid the Prophet by the heels; and now God layes him by the heels, diseasing him in his feet. Sin is an universall sickness; like those diseases which the Physitians say are corruptio totius substantiæ. And our lives are fuller of sins then the firmament of stars, or the furnace of sparks. Hence all our bodily distempers, which when we groan and labour under, let us reflect and revenge upon sin as the mother of all misery. And when we are made whole, sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon us.

Verse 18. To depart unto the other side,] Either to retire, and repose himself after much pains (for Quod caret, alterna requie, &c. the very birds, when building their nests, flee abroad sometimes from their work, for recreations sake.) Or else the better to edge the peoples desires after him, now withdrawn. Luther gave this rule to Preachers, for moderating their discourses. When thou seest thine hearers most attentive, then conclude; for so they will come again more chearfully the next time.

with Christ, we have food and raiment, let us therewith rest content. Say we have no house on earth, we have one in Heaven not made with hands. Those good souls dwelt in dens and caves of the earth, yea wandred about in sheepskins and goatskins, that might have rustled in their Silks and Velvets, that might (Nebuchadnezzar-like) have vaunted themselves on their stately Turrets and Pallaces, if they would have let go Christ. But that, they knew well, had been to make a fools bargain. 1 Tim. 6. 8. Heb. 11. 37, 38.

But the Son of man, &c.] So he stiles himself, either to note the truth of his humanity, or the depth of his abasement, the Son of God became the son of man, which was, as one said in a like case, to fall from the Court to the Cart, from a Pallace to a Gallows. Among all the Prophets, Ezekiel is most frequently stiled son of man, and that purposely; to keep him low amidst his many rare raptures and revelations. The Heathen, when they would set forth a man miserable indeed, they called him τριανθρωπον, thrice a man.

Hath not whereon to lay his head,] That the Messiah when he cometh, shall not have whereon to sit, where to rest his body, is affirmed by the Jewish Gemarists. Our Saviour may seem here to allude to such a tradition.

Verse 21. Lord, suffer me first to go and bury,] Old mens fear is (saith Plutarch, and that makes them so gripple) that they shall not have θρέψοντας καὶ θάψοντας, those that will be careful to nourish them whiles alive, and to bury them decently when they are dead.

Verse 22. Follow me,] Let go things less necessary, and minde the main: thy task is long, thy time is short; opportunities are headlong, and must be quickly caught, as the Eccho catcheth the voyce: there's no use of after-wit.

Sil. Italic.

Præcipitat tempus, mors atra impendet agenti.

Let the dead bury their dead,] The dead in sin, their dead in nature. Ungodly men are no better then breathing ghosts, walking Sepulchers of themselves. Their bodies are but living Coffins, to carry a dead soul up and down in. The Saints only are heirs of life, 1 Pet. 3. 7. and all others are dead, stark dead in sins and trespasses, as the wanton widow, 1 Tim. 5. 6. as Terence saith the same: Sane hercle homo voluptati obsequens fuit dum vixit. And of such dead Corpses (as once in Egypt, Exod. 12. 30.) there is no house, wherein there is not one, nay many. Ter. in Heeyra.

Verse 23. And when he was entred, &c.] Himself was first in the ship where they were to suffer. Like a good shepheard, he goes before his sheep, Joh. 10. Like a good Captain, he goes before his Souldiers; and as it was said of Hannibal, that he first entred the field, and last went out of the field, so is it with Christ the Captain of our salvation. Fear not (saith he) for I am with thee: be not afraid, for I am thy God. Tua causa erit mea causa, as that Emperor told Julius Pflugius, who had been much wronged by the Duke of Saxony, in the Emperors employment. Princeps prælium inibat, ut victimus conserto prælio, excedebat. Liv. Decad. 5. lib. 1. Isa. 41. 10.

Verse 24. And behold there arose a great tempest] Stirred up, likely, by the devil, to drown Christ (that male-childe of the Church, Rev. 12. 5.) and his Disciples; as he brained Jobs children with the fall of the house. This is still the endeavour of Satan and his instruments: but to such we may, as Pope Pius 2d. wrote to the great Turk.

Niteris incassum Christi submergere navem:
Fluctuat, at nunquam mergitur, illa ratis.

And as the Poet said of Troy, so may we of the Church,

Victa tamen vinces, eversaq; Troja resurges:
Obruit hostiles illa ruina domos. Ovid. Fast.

Ambrose hath a remarkable speech to this purpose: The Devil stirs up a tempest against the Saints, but himself is sure to suffer shipwrack. The Church, as a bottle, may be dipt, not drowned: as the Diamond, it may be cast into the fire, not burnt by it: as the Chrystal, it may be fouled, but not stained by the venome of a Toad: as the Palm-tree in the Emblem, which though it have many weights at top, and Snakes at the root, yet it saith still, Nec premor, nec perimor. Lastly, as the North-Pole, semper versatur, nunquam mergitur, as S. Hierom observeth. Diabolus contra sanctos tempestatem movet: sed ipse naufragium facit. Amb.

their hopes. In prosperity, either we pray not at all—Rara fumant felicibus ara, or but faintly, yawningly, &c. Oratio sine malis, est ut avis sine alis. But in a stress, as here, our prayers, like strong streams in narrow straits, run mightily upon God, and will not away without that they came for.

Verse 26. And he saith unto them] Christ first chides them, and then chides the winds and waves. Men are most malleable in time of misery, Job 33.23. Strike whiles the Iron is hot: How forceable are right words? Those that are melted in the furnace of affliction, will easily receive impression. Hamper Manasses, and he will hearken to you.

O ye of little faith] Ye petty-fideans: He calleth them not nullifidians. Faith is faith, though never so little of it. Credo languidâ fide, sed tamen fide, said dying Cruciger. Our consolation lies much in the comparative degree; but our salvation is in the positive. Much faith will yield unto us here our Heaven; and any faith, if true, will yield us Heaven hereafter. Now for fear; that which is distrustful, faith quelleth and killeth it: As that which is awful and filial, it breedeth, feedeth, fostereth and cherisheth.

Verse 27. Even the Winds and the sea obey him] He layes laws upon all creatures, which are his hoasts. The winds and sea fought for us apparently in that

Beza. Octogesimus octavus mirabilis annus:

So that the blasphemous Spaniards said, Christ was turned Lutheran. The like was done by the winds for Theodosius, in that famous battle against Maximinus. The Souldiers that were then present told us, saith S. Augustine, that the winds took their darts, as soon as they were out of their hands, and drove them violently upon the enemy: as for those that were cast at us by the enemy, they were with like violence carryed back upon their own bodies. Hence sang Claudian the Heathen Poet in this sort concerning Theodosius, Aug. de Civ. Dei, lib. 5. c. 6.

O nimium dilecte Deo, cui militat æther,
Et conjurati veniunt ad classica venti.

Verse 28. Coming out of the Tombs] There the Devil kept them, the more to terrifie them with the fear of death all their lives long, Heb. 2. 15. Appius Claudius (as Capella witnesseth) could not abide to hear the Greek Ζῆτα pronounced, because it represented the gnashing of the teeth of dying men. Chrysostom gives another reason hereof, that the Devil hereby sought to perswade silly people, that dead mens souls were turned into Devils, and walked (as they call it) especially about Tombs and Sepulchers. Thus he oft appeared to people, in times of Popery, in the shape of some of their dead kindred, and haunted them till he had made them sing a Mass for such and such a soul. Melancthon tells a story of an Aunt of his, that had her hand burnt to a coal by the Devil, appearing to her in the likeness of her deceased husband. And Parens relates an example (much like this poor demoniack in the text) of a Bakers Daughter in their Countrey, possest and pent up in a Cave she had dig'd, as in a grave, to her dying day.

Verse 29. What have We to do With thee?] Horrible impudence? As if Christ were not concerned, when his members are vexed. David felt his own coat cut, and his own cheeks shaven in the coats and cheeks of his servants: And shall not Christ be as sensible of the abuses done to his? The Soveraign suffers in the subject: neither is it other then just, that the arraignment of mean malefactors runs in the stile of wrong to the Kings Crown and dignity.

Jesus thou Son of God] The Devil speaks Christs fair, but onely to be rid of him: so deal many by Christs Ministers, that rip up their consciences, and so put them into an hell above ground. S. Mark tells us, that they worshipped our Saviour: S. Luke, that they adjured him. Satan (saith one) doth not always appear in one and the same fashion. At Lystra he appeared like a Comedian, at Athens like a Philosopher, at Ephesus like an Artificer, and here like an Exorcist: as to Saul he appeared like the old Prophet, who could not have spoken more gravely, severely, divinely then the fiend did. But as, when one commended the Popes Legate at the Council of Basil, Sigismund the Emperour answered, Tamen Romanus est: So when the Devil comes commended unto us under what name soever, let us cry out, yet he is a Devil; and remember still to resist him, stedfast in the faith, 1 Pet. 5.

Art thou come hither to torment us?] To dispossess us. Lo it is another Hell to to the Devil to be idle, or otherwise then evil-occupied. Should not we hold it our heaven to be well-doing. Learn for shame of the Devil (saith Father Latimer) to be busie about the salvation of your own and other mens souls, which he so studiously seeks to destroy. Athanasius hath a conceit, that the Devil may be driven out of a body by repeating the 68. Psalm. Origen saith of Devils, No greater torment to them, then to see men addicted to the Scriptures: In hoc eorum omnis flamma est, in hoc uruntur incendio. (Chrysostom saith, we may lash and scourge the Devil by fasting and prayer, which the Prophet Isaiah call a charm or inchantment, *Isa.*26.16. לחש

Verse 30. A herd of many swine feeding] Suillo pecori anima pro sale data, saith Varro. Swinish Epicures also have their souls but for salt to keep their bodies from putrifying. That was a rotten speech of Epicurus, that life eternal was nothing else but an eternal gourmandizing, and swilling, and swallowing of Nectar and Ambrosia. The Kingdom of God is another manner of thing then meat and drink, Rom. 14. The Devil desired to enter into the swine, because of their greedines. Eat not greedily, for this is Os porci habere, as that Pope is said to have. Drink not to drunkenness: for this sin robs a man of himself, and lays a swine in his room. No creature, besides man, will be drunk, but swine: and not swine neither, but as they are conversant about men; for wild swine will not, they say.

Verse 31. So the Devils besought him] For threaten him they durst not, as little as the Gadarens, verse 34. because they found themselves over-powred. Time was when they had set upon our Saviour with utmost might and malice in the wilderness. The matter is well amended now. The same power, when he pleases, can change the note of the Tempter to us. He will tread Satan under our feet shortly. That which Vegetius said of Chariots armed with sithes and hooks will be applied to the Devils; At first they were a terror, and after a scorn.

lib. 1. cap. 24.

Suffer us to go into the herd of swine] We may safely say, that the bristles of swine are numbered with God, saith Tertullian, much more the hairs of Saints: not one of them falls to the ground without their heavenly father. Satan desired to have forth Peter to winnow: as Goliah desired to have an Israelite to combate with, he could not command him. He could not make a louse, *Exod.*8.18. fire an house, Job 1.19. drown a pigg, without Divine permission. Now we are more of price then many pigs before God, as that Martyr well inferred. And if a legion of Devils had not power over an herd of hogs, much less have they over Christs flock of sheep; saith Tertullian.

To punish their sensuality in feeding upon swines flesh, against the expres letter of the Law. Ex uno sue quinquaginta prope sapores excogitantur, saith Pliny. And there was a jolly Pope (some kin, belike, to Pope Sergius, sirnamed Os porci) that being, for his gout, forbidden swines-flesh by his Physitian, cryed out to his steward, bring me my pork, al dispto di dio in despite of God. 3. He is as able and as ready still to heal those that are brought unto him, he hath lost nothing by heaven, be sure. Verse 3. This man blaspemeth.] True, had he been but a man, and had taken upon him to forgive sins by his own authority, as Popish Priests do, to the subverting of some mens souls. I have known one (saith a reverend Divine) who neither by education nor affection was disposed to Popery; who having the ill hap (when his conscience was perplexed) to fall into the hands of a Popish Priest, became a Papist upon this reason, because (as the Priest suggested) that Religion afforded more comfort for the conscience then ours; and therefore more comfort, because it had, and exercised a power to pardon sin, which our Ministers neither did, nor durst assume unto themselves. M. Ley his pattern of piety. 145.

Verse 4. Wherefore think ye evil, &c.] Christ confutes their calumny, and proves himself to be God, and to have power to pardon sin, by discerning and condemning their evil thoughts. I the Lord search the heart, Jer. 17. Satan may give a shrewd guess: and so may men too: as Bartolus writes of Doctor Gabriel Nele, that by the only motion of the lips, without any utterance, he understood all men, perceived and read in every mans countenance, what he meant, &c. But none can certainly know the thoughts of man, but God alone. It is his royalty to know what is in man, Joh. 2. 25. Bart. l. 1. de verb. oblig.

Verse 5. For whether is it easier, &c.] q.d. It is a work of one and the same Almighty power to pardon sin, and with a bare word only, to heal the sick, such as are counted past cure especially. Think the same of the souls sicknesses, and say with that Ancient, Ego admisi, Domine, unde tu damnare potes me, sed tu non amisisti, unde tu salvare potes me.

Verse 6. That the son of man hath power, &c.] And therefore is more then a man. The Rhemists tell us of one man that could remove mountains. But none but the man Christ Jesus could ever remit sins. He only it is that blots out the cloud, and the thick cloud too, enormities as well as infirmities: for this is a true Axiome. Peccata non minuunt justificationem, though sins be different, Justification is not. Take heed ye enterline not Gods Covenant. Isa. 44 22.

Verse 7. And he arose and departed.] He did as he was bidden; for he was healed on both sides, Mallem obedire quàm miracula facere, said Luther.

Verse 9. A man named Matthew] The other Evangelists call him Levi; so shrowding his shame under a name less known. He plainly and ingenuously sets down his own more common name, and the nature of his offence (like as David doth penance in a white sheet, as it were) which is an evident argument, both of the Scriptures Divinity, and of the Evangelists gracious simplicity. If any should upbraid him with his old evil courses, he could readily have answered, as Austin did in like case, Quæ tu reprehendis ego damnavi: or as Beza, Hic homo invidet mihi gratiam Christi. Psal 51. 1.

Sitting at the receipt of custom.] These Publicans rented the revenue of the Sea and Rivers, of the Romans (as now the Jews do of the Turks) at a certain rate. And that they might pay their rent, and pick a living out of it, they were great gripers, and exacted extreamly upon the Jews; who therefore hated them, and held them furthest off from heaven of any men. A faithfull Publican was so rare at Rome it self, that one Sabinus, for his honest managing of that office, in an honorable remembrance thereof, had certain images erected with this superscription, For the honest Publican Of this sort of sinners was Matthew, whom Christ converted into an Evangelist: as he did Paul the persecutor into an Apostle; Justin the Philosopher into a Martyr; Cyprian the Rhetorician, and (as some think) the Magician, into a famous light of the Church. I was an obstinate Papist (saith Latimer) as any was in England: Insomuch, that when I should be made Bachelor of Divinity, my whole Oration went against Philip Melanchthon, and his opinions, &c. καλῶς πλαγιάσειεν. Suet. in Vespas. Act. and Mon.

And he arose and followed him.] Julian the Apostate cavils at this passage; as if either this were false, or Matthew a fool to follow a stranger at the first call But this Atheist knew not the work of faith, nor the power of Christs voice, when he calls effectually. If Maris the blind Bishop of Bythinia had been by, to have heard this dead dog thus barking, he would surely have shaped him such an answer, as he did once. For when Julian said unto him, Behold thou art blind: Doth the Galilean thy God care for thee? He replied, O thou wicked Apostate, I give my God thanks, that hath made me blind, that I might not see that wretched face of thine. Hieronym. O tu impiè Apostata, gratias ago Deo qui me cæcum reddidit, ne vultum tuum videam, ita ad invictatem prolapsum.

Luke. 5. 29. Δοχὴν accepti-onem splendi-dum epulum, ut annotat. Erasm. ex Athenæo.

Verse 10. As Jesus sate at meat in the house.] Matthew feasted Christ, for joy of his conversion. Yea, he made a feast, a feast like a King, a very sumptuous feast (as S. Lukes word importeth) he kept open house, a table for all comers. As Princes at their coronation straw the streets with coyn, make the conduits run wine, release prisoners, &c. So here, Kill the fatted Calf, and let us be merry, said he at his sons return. When a sinner repents there are gaudies in heaven: instruments of musick are put into the Angels hands, and songs into their mouthes. How well apaid was Zacheus, when salvation was come home to his house? When God was once reconciled to the people in the wilderness, after their sin in setting up the golden Calf, to testifie their great joy and thankfulness, they brought stuff more then enough to the building of the Tabernacle. The Centurion, when he once became a proselyte, built the Jewish Synagogues that had been thrown down by Antiochus. And Tyrus converted finds another manner of merchandise then formerly, viz. to feed and clothe Gods Saints with durable clothing.

Isa. 23. 18.

Verse 11. And when the Pharisees saw it.] As envy is quick-sighted. See Ovids description of it, Βασκαίνειν παρὸν, τὸ φθόνειν καίνειν. The wicked look round about the Saints, seeking to pick a hole in their coats; they pore and pry more narrowly then Laban did into Jacobs stuff. Walk circumspectly.

Ephes. 5, 15.

They said unto his Disciples.] 1. Not to him: where the hedge is lowest, there the Devil leaps over soonest: as he began his temptation with Eve, apart from her husband, Calumniare audacter, aliquid saltem adhærebit; is a maxime in Machiavel. It is the property of defamations, to leave a kinde of lower estimation many times, where they are not believed. 2. These hypocrites would seem to say this in pure pity to the seduced Disciples, whom they saw to do the same with their Master. An ordinary trick among make-bates. St. Austin had these two verses written on his Table,

Quisquis amat dictis absentum rodere famam,
Hanc mensam indictam noverit esse sibi.

Here's no room for railers.

Verse 12. But when Jesus heard that, he said] Hence we learn, that although it be a servile business, as Plato calleth it, and an endless piece of work to make answer and apology to all slanders; yet where Gods glory is interessed, and the salvation of other mens souls hazarded, we must endeavor the clearing of our names, and the righting of our injuries and indignities cast upon us. But let this be done with meekness of wisdom, with weight of reason, not heat of passion, and rather in Gods words then in our own, as here.

πᾶσαν ἀπολογείαν θεραπευτικὴν. Plato.

Verse 13. They that be whole.] There are none such, but in conceit only. The civil Justiciary ails nothing, complains of nothing, is as sound as a Roch: but no such sound heart can come to heaven: as (in another sense) none but sound can come there: only sensible sinners are capable of cure and comfort, such as see themselves Christless creatures.

Need not the Physitian.] And the Physitian needs them as little: he came not, cares not for them, they have as much help from him as they seek. Presumption is as a chain to their neck, and they believe their interest in Christ, when it is no such thing: They make a bridge of their own shadow, and so fall into the brook; they perish by catching at their own catch, hanging on their own fancy, which they falsly call and count faith.

Verse 14. But go ye, and learn what, &c.] In the history of Jonas, Christ found the mysterie of his death, burial and resurrection. Rest not in the shell of the Scriptures, but break it, and get out the kernel, as the sense is called, Judg. 7. 15. stick not in the bark, but pierce into the heart of Gods Word. Lawyers say, that Apicos juris non sunt jus. The latter of the Law, is not the Law, but the meaning of it. John never rested, till the sealed book was opened. Pray for the spirit of revelation, plow with Gods heifer, and we shall understand his riddles, provided that we wait in the use of all good means, till God irradiate both Organ and Object.

Vellibro, the breaking of the nut.

I will have mercy.] Both that which God shews to us, and that which we shew to others, spiritual and corporal. Steep thy thoughts (saith one) in the mercies of God, and they will dye thine, as the dy-fat doth the cloth, Col. 3. 12.

I came not to call the righteous.] Those that are good in their own eyes, and claim heaven heaven as the portion that belongs unto them. Scribonius writes of the Cedar, Quòd viventes res putrefacit & perdit: putridas autem restituit & conservat: So Christ came to kill the quick, and to quicken the dead. Physic. lib. 2.

But sinners to repentance] Not to liberty, but duty. Tertullian speaketh of himself, that he was born to nothing but repentance. This is not the work of one, but of all our days, as they said, Ezra 10.13. Some report of Mary Magdalen, that after our Saviours Resurrection, she spent thirty years in Gallia Narbonensi, in weeping for her sins: And of S. Peter, that he always had his eyes full of tears, insomuch as his face was furrowed with continual weeping. Let not him that resolves upon Christianity dream of a delicacy. Tert. de pœnit. Adeò ut etiam lachrymæ cutem genarum excoluerint.

Verse 14. Then came to him the Disciples of John] These sided with the Pharisees against our Saviour out of emulation and self-love, the bane and break-neck of all true love: yea, they were first in the quarrel. A doleful thing, when brethren shall set against brethren, Hebrews vex one another, Exod. 2. and Christians, as if they wanted enemies, flie in the faces one of another. S. Basil was held an Heretick, even of them that held the same things as he did, and whom he honoured as brethren: all the fault was, that he out-shone them, and they envied him the praise he had for opposing Arrianism, which was such, as that Philostorgius the Arrian wrote, that all the other Orthodox Divines were but babies to Basil. How hot was the contention betwixt Luther and Carolostadius, meerly out of a self-seeking humour, and desire of preheminency? How extream violent are the Lutherans against the Calvinists. In the year, 1567. they joyned themselves at Antwerp with the Papists against the Calvinists. And Luther somewhere professeth, that he will rather yield to Transubstantiation, then remit any thing of Consubstantiation.

Why do we and the Pharisees fast often] The Pharisees were perilous fasters, when they devoured widows houses, and swallowed ill-gotten goods, as Gnats down their wide gullets, which therefore Christ calls, ἐνόντα, the inwards. Their fasts were meer mock-fasts: So were those of John Archbishop of Constantinople, sirnamed the Faster, who yet was the first that affected the title of Universal Bishop, so much cryed down by Gregory the Great. These Pharisees had sided with, and set on Johns Disciples in their Masters absence, like as the renegado Jesuites, to keep up that bitter contention that is between the Calvinists and Lutherans, have a practise of running over to the Lutheran Church, pretending to be Converts, and to build with them.

Verse 15. And Jesus said unto them] He makes apology for his accused Disciples: so doth he still at the right hand of his heavenly Father, non-suiting all accusations brought against us, as our Advocate, 1 John 2. 1. appearing for us, as the Lawyer doth for his Client (Heb. 9 24.) opening his case, and pleading his cause. He helpeth us also to make apology for our selves to God, 2 Cor. 7.11. and expecteth, that as occasion requires, we should make apology one for another, when maligned and misreported of by the world. παράκλητον in full opposition to κατήγορος, the accuser of the brethren Revel. 12.10.

Can the children of the bridechamber, &c.] Our Saviour seeing them to sin of infirmity, and by the instigation of the Pharisees, who with their leaven had somewhat sowred and seduced them in their Masters absence, deals gently with them; to teach us what to do in like case. A Venice-glass must be otherwise handled then an earthen pitcher or goddard, some must be rebuked sharply, severely, cuttingly, Titus 1.13. but of others we must have compassion, making a difference, Jude 22.

Mourn as long as the Bridegroom, &c.] Mourn, as at funerals (so the word signifieth.) This were incongruous, unseasonable and unseemly at a feast. It was a peevishness in Sampsons wife, that she wept at the Wedding; sith that's the day of the rejoycing of a mans heart, as Solomon hath it. Now Christ is the Churches Spouse. He hath the bride, and is the bridegroom, as their Master the Baptist had taught them, John 3.29. and rejoyceth over every good soul, as the bridegroom rejoyceth over the bride, Isa. 62. 5. Should not the Saints therefore reciprocate? ἀπαθῶς Tremel aurè. Beza præcisè, rigidè. Erasm. severè, & ad vivum. πενθεῖν. Cant. 3.11.

But the days will come.] Our Saviour suffered much, even many a little death all his life long; and yet, till his passion, he accounts himself to be, as it were, in the bridechamber. Then it was especially that he alone trod the wine-press, and was roasted alive in the fire of his Fathers wrath, &c.

When the Bridegroom shall be taken from them] As now your Master the Baptist is from from you; a just argument and occasion of your grief and fasting, if possibly you may beg him of God out of the hands of Herod. When the Duke of Burbons Captains had shut up Pope Clement 8. in the Castle S. Angelo, Cardinal Wolsey being shortly after sent Ambassador beyond seas, to make means for his release; as he came thorow Canterbury toward Dover, he commanded the Monks, and the Quire to sing the Letany after this sort, Sancta Maria, ora pro Papa nostro Clemente. Himself also being present was seen to weep tenderly for the Popes calamity. Shall superstition do that that Religion cannot bring us to? Shall we not turn again unto the Lord with fasting, weeping and mourning, if for nothing else, yet that our poor brethren may find compassion? which is Hezekiah's motive to the people.

Life and death of Card. Wolsey, page 38.

2 Chro. 30.9.

And then shall they fast.] Note here, 1. That fasting is not abolished with the Ceremonial Law, but still to be used as a duty of the Gospel. 2. That times of heavinesse are times of humiliation. 3. That our halcyons here are but as marriage-feasts, for continuance; they last not long: never look for it.

Verse 16. No man putteth a piece, &c.] Austerities of Religion are not to be pressed upon new-beginners. God would not carry the people to Canaan through the Philistims Countrey (though it were the neerest way) for discouraging them at first setting out. Our Saviour spake as the Disciples could hear. Discretion is to be used, and Christs Lambs handled with all tenderness.

Mark 4.33.

Verse 17. Neither do men put new wine.] In the year of grace, 340. arose certain Hereticks called Ascitæ or Utricularii, Bottle-bearers, because they bare a bottle on their backs, affirming that they were no true Christians that did not so; and alledging this text for themselves, as if they were the only new bottles filled with new Wine. So those districtissimi Monachi, Puritan-Monks (as one Englisheth it) who made themselves wooden Crosses, and carried them on their backs, continually pleaded, Mat. 16.24. to make for them. This was, as M. Tindal saith in another case, to think to quench their thirst by sucking the Ale-powl.

Alsted. Chronol. p. 385.

Verse 18. Behold, there came a certain Ruler.] Jairus the Ruler of the Synagogue. Few such came to Christ: but this man was driven out of doors by the cross, as the wolf is out of the wood by hard hunger. It was his only daughter of a dozen-year old, that was now at point of death. This makes him seek out to Christ the best Physician. Men must be fatherless (childless) ere they find mercy (Hos. 14.3.) and a poor afflicted people ere they will be brought to trust in the name of the Lord, Zeph. 3. 12. The Hæmorroisse came not to Christ, whiles she had a half-penny to help her self.

Luke 8.41.

But come and lay thine hands upon her.] He thought Christ could not otherwise cure her: This was weakness of faith, far short of that of the Centurion, who yet was a Roman souldier; whereas Jairus was a learned Jew. Knowledge therefore is one thing, faith another: and the greatest Scholars, are not always the holiest men. Neither have all Gods people a like measure of true faith. This should humble and excite the weak, but not discourage them in their course: since the tallest Oak was once an Acorn, and the deepest Doctor was once in his Horn-book.

Verse 19. And Jesus arose and followed him.] As tendering the Rulers infirmity, and not taking advantages, or turning him off, for presuming to prescribe. Be we also ready to every good office, not picking quarrels, or pleading excuses.

Verse 20. And behold a Woman, &c.] This History and Occurrence comes in here by a Parenthesis, and by a sweet providence, for the exercise and encrease of Jairus's faith and patience. Jairus could have wisht her far enough at that time, because she hindered our Saviour from making haste to his dying daughter. But she shall be dead out-right, the woman cured, and he thereby confirmed, ere his desire shall be accomplished; that God in all may be glorified.

Isa. 46.6. Medici persæpè ægros officiosè occidunt. Pet. Molin. decogn. Dei.

Which was diseased, &c.] And had lavished money out of the bag for help, but had none. Nay, she had suffered many things of the Physicians, who had well nigh officiously killed her, and had utterly exhausted her. This made Chaucer take for his Motto, Farewell Physick: and the Emperour Adrian cry out upon his death-bed, Many Physicians have killed the King.

Verse 21. If I may but touch his garment,] This was a glorious faith of hers, and not much much inferiour to that of the Centurion. Let us in like sort, when we feel the bloody flux of natural filth issuing out at our eyes, mouthes, hands, and other parts, repair to Christ, and touch him by faith: so shall we feel that there goes a vertue out from him, to heal the soul. As fishes when they are hurt, heal themselves again by touching the Tench, finding the slime of his body to be a soveraign salve: so must we, when wounded with sin, have recourse to Christ, and our faith will make us whole every whit.

Verse 22. But Jesus turned him about.] To take notice of it himself, and to notifie it to others: For these reasons, saith Chrysostome: 1. To free the woman from fear, lest her conscience should call her Recreant, as one that had stole a cure. 2. To make up in her what was wanting to her faith, if she should have any such thought to do so. 3. To manifest her faith, for other mens imitation. 4. To make known his omniscience, and so his Divinity. 5. To confirm the Rulers faith, and so fit him for further mercy. 6. To teach her and us, that, not his garment, but himself did the cure. This makes against that Popish foppery in worshipping reliques, as the Syndon wherein Christs body was enwrapped, of the vertue whereof Paleottus Archbishop of Bonony, set forth a great book, An. Dom. 1617.

And the woman was made whole, &c.] That fable recorded by Eusebius is scarce worth relating; that this woman should set up at her door in Cesarea Philippi, a statue of brass in honour of our Saviour; near whereto grew a certain herb good for all diseases. Irenæus (far ancienter then Eusebius) reproveth the Hereticks, called Gnostici, for that they carried about them the Image of Christ made in Pilates time, after his own proportion: using also for declaration of their affection towards it, to set garlands upon the head of it. And in Epiphanius his time (who lived soon after Eusebius) images and statues of Christ or the Saints were abhorred by Christians. The Turks will not endure any image, no not upon their coyn, because of the second Commandment, and the Papists for their imagery, they call Idolaters.

Chap. X.

Verse 1. And when he had called the twelve.]

HE had set them to pray, and now he sets them to work. Ora & labora, is an old proverb, And Admotâ manu invocanda est Minerva, said the Heathens. To pray to pray, is to mock God, and lose ones labour. Solomon saith, we must as well dig as beg for knowledge, Prov. 2. 3,4. Else, to beg is bootless. The talk of the lips only brings want, Prov. 14. 23. Christ seemed here to say to his praying Disciples, as once he did to Moses, Why cryest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward: or as afterwards he did to Joshua, Chap. 7.10. Get thee up, Wherefore liest thou thus upon thy face? Chap. 9. 38. Exod. 14. 15.

Verse 2. Now the names of the twelve, &c.] Their names are registred and had in honour; when the Grandees of the earth, those men of renown in their generation, lie either buried in oblivion, or wrapt up in the sheet of shame: their memory, haply is preserved, but stinks in the keeping, as that rich glutton, Luke 16. who is not so much as named, as poor Lazarus is.

Peter and Andrew his brother, &c.] They go coupled, two and two together. And this first for their own sakes, Two are better then one, saith Solomon. For first if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow, as that which is stronger, shoreth up that which is weaker. 2. If two lie together, then they have heat. When Silas came, Paul burnt in spirit; whiles Jehoida lived, Joash was free and forward for God; he was the first that complained of the negligence of his best officers in repairing the Temple. Whiles Bradford was alive, he kept up Ridley, and so did Latimer Cranmer, from thinking upon revolt. 3. If one prevail, two shall withstand him. The enemy is readiest to assault, where none is by to assist; and much of our strength is lost in the loss of a faithful friend; whence Paul so rejoyced, that Epaphroditus recovered, Phil. 2.27. For their own mutual help and comfort was it therefore, that they were sent out by parts; σὺν τε δύω ἐρχομένω, as the Poet speaks of his Ulysses and Diomedes, sent to fetch in the Palladium. Secondly, for the sake of others, that the bad might be the sooner set down and convinced; the better, confirmed and settled in the truth, sith in the mouth of two or three witnesses, &c. For this it was, that God set forth those noble pairs, Moses and Aaron, Zerubbabel and Jehoshuah, Paul and Barnabas, the two faithful witnesses, Revel. 11.3. Luther and Melancthon, Zuinglius and Oecolampadius, &c. Eccles. 4.9,10, 11,12, Explained. Verse 3. Bartholomew.] This, say some, was that Nathaniel, John 1. He is by Dionysius quoted to have said of Divinity, Et Magnam esse & minimam: that it was large in a little room. Ambrose Chircher the Jesuit, tells of a tradition they have in China, that one Olo Puen, (or Bartholomew) was brought thither from Judea in the clouds, and preached Christianity amongst them; whereof he left twenty seven Tomes behind him. Sed fides sit penes authorem.

Matthew the Publican.] See here, as in a mirrour, Christs free grace in such a choice, and Matthews true grace in not dissembling his old trade, but shaming himself, that God might be glorified; and thankfully crying out with Iphicrates, ἐξ ὅσων εἰς ὅσα, from how sinful and shameful, to how high and honorable a calling and course of life am I advanced?

Verse 4. Simon the Canaanite.] Or a man of Cana in Galilee (as Judas Iscariot) that is, a man of Kerioth: see Josh. 15.25. Simon the Zelot, S. Luke calls him. Verse 5. These twelve Jesus sent forth] Out of deep commiseration of those poor scattered sheep, that lay panting for life, and well nigh gasping their last. Saul, that ravening wolf of Benjamin, and his fellow-Pharisees, not only breathed out threatnings, but worried Christs sheep, that bore golden fleeces. Now, because he could not go to them all himself in person, he sends out the twelve. Thereby also to teach them and us, that no Minister is so thoroughly furnished to all good works, but that he may need the advise ἐσκυλμένοι. Mat. 9. 30. Acts 9. 10. 2 Tim. 3. 17.

advice and help of his fellow-labourers. And this I conceive, was at first the end of erecting Colledges and Cathedrals.

Verse 6. To the lost sheep] This is the common condition of us all. All we like sheep have gone astray. The Prophet saith not, like dogs: for these, though lost, will find their way home again: Nor like swine; for these also when lugd, or against a storm, will hye to their home. But like sheep, that silly creature; then the which as none is more apt to wander, so neither any more unable to return.

Isa. 53.6.

Verse 7. The Kingdom of heaven is at hand.] Repent therefore. Men will do much for a Kingdom. And, nothing less then a Kingdom, and that of Heaven, can buy men out of their sweet sins. How many hear we daily making answer to the motion of this heavenly Kingdom offered them by God, as the Olive and Vine did in Jothams parable? Shall I leave my fat and sweet sins, to raign, though with God? And yet every man must be either a King or a Caitiff; raign in heaven, or roar for ever in hell. And this the Apostles were bid, where ever they came to preach, not to sing Mass, which is the chief office of Priests among the Papists. And for the people, they are taught to believe, that the Mass only is a work of duty: but the going to Sermons a matter of conveniency, and such as is left free to mens leisures, and opportunities, without imputation of sin.

Verse 8. Heal the sick.] God glorifies himself by the fruits of our sin, and the effects of his own wrath. This great Alchimist knows how to extract good out of evil. He can make golden afflictions, 1 Pet. 1. 7. medicinal sicknesses; fetch his own honor out of the depths of our sufferings, as wine draws a nourishing vertue from the flesh of vipers, and as scarlet pulls out the vipers teeth.

Freely ye have received.] And so have we in some sort, and in some sense; sith no pains we take, no cost we are at can possibly countervail so great a treasure as is concredited unto us.

Verse 9. Provide neither gold, &c.] To wit, for this present voyage (for at other times our Saviour had money, and he put it not in a penny-pouch, but in a bag so big, as that it needed a bearer) but now Christ would teach them, by experience of his fatherly providence in feeding and securing them, to trust him for ever.

Verse 10. Neither two coats] That may be a burthen to you.

Neither shoes] But sandals, a lighter kinde of wearing.

Nor yet staves] Either for offence or defence: a dog shall not wag his tongue at you: Or not a staff, that may cumber you. But take a staff (as S. Mark hath it) sc. that may ease and relieve you in your hard toil and travel. A staff they might have to speak them travellers, not souldiers; one to walk with, not to war with; a wand, not a weapon.

Mark 6. 8,9.

The workman is worthy of his meat] Of his wages, saith S. Mark; of both, as labourers in Gods harvest; of double honour, saith S. Paul, both countenance and maintenance.

Verse 11. Enquire, who in it is worthy] That is, faithful, as Lydia was, Acts 16.15. and Philip the Evangelist, Acts 21.8. and Mary the mother of Mark, Acts 12.12. Lo here whither Ministers should resort, and where should be their Rendezvouz, Psal. 26.4. and Psal. 16.3. In the excellent ones of the earth should be their delight. I forget Lords and Ladies, said good Mr. Fox, to remember Gods poor Saints.

Ver. 12. And when ye come into an house,] Into the Synagogues and other places of publike meeting, our Saviour sends them not as yet, because they were but yong beginners and wanted boldness and other abilities; but bids them teach privately, catechize from house to house, and not stretch the wing beyond the nest, till better fledged, and fitted for flight.

Verse 13. If that house be worthy] The Saints are the only Worthies, of whom the world is not worthy. These shall walk with Christ, for they are worthy. But the heart of the wicked is little worth, Prov. 10.20.

1. Not

1. Not to receive Christs Ministers to house and harbour, accounting themselves happy in such an entertainment. 2. Not to hear their words. The most good is done by Gods Ministers commonly at first coming. Then some receive the word with admiration, others are daily more and more hardned: as fish, though fearful, stir not at the great noise of the sea, whereunto they are accustomed; and as birds that build in a Belfree, startle not at the tolling of the bell.

Shake off the dust of your feet] In token that you sought not theirs, but them, and that you will not carry away so much as any of their accursed dust; that you will not have any communion at all with them, wait no longer upon them; that the dust of those feet (that should have been beautiful) shall be fatal and feral to them; that God shall henceforward beat them here as small as dust with his heavy judgements, as with an iron-mace, and that hereafter he shall shake them off as dust, when they come to him for salvation at the last judgement. Psal. 2.

Verse 15. It shall be more tolerable] God can better bear any thing, then the abuse of his free grace in the offers of mercy. Profligate Professors, and profane Gospellers, shall one day wish, Oh that I had been a Sodomite, that I had never heard a Sermon! Or O that I might hear but one Sermon more! &c. Should Solomon forsake that God that had appeared unto him twice? Good turns aggravate unkindnesses; and nothing more torments those in hell, then to think that they might have been happy, had they been worthy their years, as they say.

Verse 16. Behold, I send you forth, &c.] This might seem incredible to the Disciples, sith they were sent among the lost sheep of Israel. But strange though it seem, 'tis not so strange as true. Look for it therefore. Behold: Christ was in no such danger from Herod that Fox, as from those Wolves the Pharisees.

As sheep in the midst of Wolves] Who would make it their work to worry the flock, and suck their blood; as did Saul, that Wolf of the Tribe of Benjamin, and the Primitive Persecutors. Under Diocletian, seventeen thousand Christians are said to have been slain in one moneth, amongst whom also was Serena the Empress. Those ten Persecutions were so cruel, that S. Hierome writes in one of his Epistles, that for every day in the year were murthered 5000. excepting only the first day of January. S. Paul fell into the hands of that Lyon Nero, qui orientem fidem primus Romæ cruentavit, as Tertullian hath it, who therefore also calleth him, Dedicatorem damnationis Christianorum. All the rest of the Apostles are reported to have dyed by the hands of Tyrants, save only S. John: who, in contempt of Christianity, and of Christ (that is, by interpretation, Gods Anointed) was cast by Domitian into a vessel of scalding oyl, but came forth fresh and unhurt by a miracle. After this, the Arrian Hereticks raged extreamly, and made great havock of the innocent Lambs of Christ. Giezerichus an Arrian, King of Vandals, is said to have exceeded all that went afore him in cruelty towards the Orthodox side, of both sexes. In that Laniena Parisiensis 30000 Protestants were basely butchered in one moneth, 300000 in one year. Stokesly Bishop of London, boasted upon his death-bed, that he had been the death of fifty Hereticks in his time. His successor Bonner, was called the common cut-throat, and slaughter-slave general to all the Bishops of England. And therefore (said a good woman, that told him so in a Letter) it is wisdom for me, and all other simple sheep of the Lord, to keep us out of your butcherly stall, as long as we can. Especially, seeing you have such store already, that you are not able to drink all their blood, lest you should break your belly; and therefore let them lie still, and dye for hunger. Thus she. But that above all is most horrid and hateful, that is related of the Christians in Calabria, Anno 1560. For, being all thrust up in one house together (saith M. Fox.) as in a sheepfold, the Executioner comes in, and among them takes one and blindfolds him with a mufler about his eyes, and so leadeth him forth to a larger place, where he commandeth him to kneel down. Which being so done, he cutteth his throat, and so leaveth him half dead. Then, taking his butchers knife, and mufler all of gore blood, he cometh again to the rest; and so leadeth them one after another, and dispatcheth them all, to the number of 88 All the aged went to death more chearfully, the younger were more timerous. I tremble and shake (saith a Romanist, out of whose Letter to his Lord all this is transcribed) even to remember how the executioner held his bloody knife between his teeth, with the bloody mufler in his hand and his arms all in gore blood up to the elbows, going to the fold, and taking every one of them, them, one after another, by the hand, and so dispatching them all; no otherwise, then doth a butcher kill his calves and sheep. In fine, would any man take the Churches picture? saith Luther; then let him take a silly poor Maid, sitting in a wood or wilderness, compassed about with hungry Lyons, Wolves, Boars and Bears, and with all manner of cruel and hurtful Beasts; and in the midst of a great many furious men assaulting her every moment and minute: for this is her condition in the world.

Loc. Com. tit. de persecut. Ver. Eccl.

Be ye therefore wise as serpents, &c.] Let meekness be mixt with wariness, saith Nazianzen, that it may be the meekness of wisdom, James 3. 13. We must be neither Foxes, nor yet Asses. Meekness many times brings on injuries: A Crow will stand upon a sheeps back, pulling off wool from her side. Now therefore as we must labour for columbine simplicity, and be no horned beasts, to pelt or gore others (as the word here signifies) so for serpentine subtilty too, that we cast not our selves upon needless dangers. The Roman rule was, nec fugere, nec sequi, Christianity calleth us not to a weak simplicity; but allows us as much of the Serpent as of the Dove. The Dove without the Serpent is easily caught; the Serpent without the Dove stings deadly. Religion without Policy is too simple to be safe; Policy without Religion, is too subtil to be good. Their match makes themselves secure, and many happy. A Serpents eye is a singular ornament in a Doves head. For,

Harmless as Doves] That neither provoke the Hawk, nor project revenge, but when pursued, they save themselves, if they can by flight, not by fight. Sometimes they sit in their Dove-coats, and see their nests destroyed, their young ones taken away, and killed before their eyes; neither ever do they offer to rescue or revenge, which all other fowls do seem in some sort to do.

Verse 17 But beware of men] Absurd and wicked men, saith Paul; brutish men, skilful to destroy, saith the Prophet; Men-eaters, saith the Psalmist; Cannibals, that make no more conscience to mischief Gods people, then to eat a meals meat when they are hungry. These be those Lycanthropi, those wolves mentioned in the former verse. These are those mankind men, that S. Paul met with at Ephesus, 1 Cor. 15.32. He fought with beasts after the manner of men, that is (as some interpret it) men fought with him after the manner of beasts. Such a man was that monster of Millain, in Bodin. de Repub. Such were the Primitive Persecutors, and such are the Pseudo-Catholicks of these times. A Dutch woman they buried alive for Religion, with thorns under her. Another they shamefully defiled in the sight of her husband, and then forced her to draw a sword, and give her husband a deadly wound, her hands being ordered by them. The Town of Barre in France being taken by the Papists, all kind of cruelty was there used. Children were cup up, the guts and hearts of some of them pulled out, which in rage they gnawed with their teeth. The Italians which served the King, did for hatred of Religion, break forth into such fury, that they did rip up a living childe, and took his liver, being as yet red hot, and eat it as meat. John Burgeolus President of Turon, an old man, being suspected to be a Protestant, and having bought his life with a great sum of money, was notwithstanding taken and beaten cruelly with clubs and staves. And being stript of his cloathes, was brought to the bank of the River Liger, and hanged, his feet upward, and head downward in the water, up to his breast. Then, he being yet alive, they opened his belly, pull'd out his guts, and threw them into the river. And taking his heart, they put it upon a spear, carrying it with contumelious words about the City. Were these men? or rather Devils in the shape of men? What should I instance further in those late Irish unheard of cruelties, so well known, and so much written of? such as whereof the Devil himself might be ashamed, had he any shame in him. Lithgow a Scot, after he had with K. James his Letters travelled thorow the greatest part of the known world, was, as he returned through Spain, in the City of Maligo, surprized by nine Sergeants, and carryed before the Governor. By whose appointment, they stripped him of his cloathes, robbed him of his money, put him into a dark dungeon, shackled him, starved him, wounded him, &c. In ten hours he received seventy several torments: At last, all the Lords Inquisitors commanded him to receive eleven strangling torments at midnight, and to be burnt body and bones to ashes, though they had nothing against him but suspition of Religion. And yet after this, God wonderfully delivered vered him; He was brought on his bed to our King, wounded and broken, and made this relation to the face of Gundamor, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador.

They will ſcourge you] John Fortune, a Martyr in Q. Maries days, was thus threatned by one Mr. Foſter: You ſhall be whipt and burned for this gear, I trow: His anſwer was, I ſhould be full glad of that. For it is written, They will ſcourge you in their ſynagogues. And ſince the time that the ſword of tyranny came into your hand, I heard of none that were whipt. Happy were I, if I had the maidenhead of that perſecution. Act. and Mon.

Verſe 18. And ye ſhall be brought before Governours] Yea they offered themſelves to them, crying Chriſtiani ſumus, and ſo tyring them thereby, that one of them in a great chaſe cryed out, O miſeri, ſi libet perire, num vobis rupes aut reſtes deſunt? Can ye find no other way to diſpatch your ſelves, but that I muſt be troubled with you? Artids Antenius apud Tertul.

And before Kings, for my ſake.] As Paul before Agrippa, and afterwards Nero; Luther before Charls 5. Lambert before Hen. 8.

Verſe 19. Take no thought how, or what ye ſhall ſpeak] Be not anxious about either matter or manner of your apologie for your ſelves. Ye ſhall be ſupplied from on high both with invention and elocution. Demoſthenes, that great Orator, was many times out, when he ſpake to King Philip, and ſometimes ſo amated that he had not a word more to ſay. Moſes, that great ſcholar, feared he ſhould want words when he was to ſtand before Pharaoh, and profeſſeth, that ſince God had called him to that ſervice, he found leſs freedom of ſpeech then before. Latomus of Lovain, a very learned man, having prepared an eloquent Oration to Charls the fifth Emperor, was ſo confounded in the delivering of it, that he came off with great diſcredit, and fell into utter deſpair. No wonder therefore though the Apoſtles, being ignorant and unlettered men, were ſomewhat troubled how to do when brought before Kings and Keſars. Our Saviour here cures them of that care, by a promiſe of help from heaven: And they had it, Act. 2. & 4. & 5. & 7. And ſo had the Confeſſors and Martyrs in all ages of the Church. Neſcio unde veniunt iſtæ meditationes, ſaith Luther of himſelf in a letter to his friend. And in his book of the Babyloniſh captivity he profeſſeth, that whether he would or no, he became every day more learned then other. How bravely did Ann Aſkew, Alice Driver, and other poor women anſwer the Doctors, and put them to a nonplus? Was not that the ſpirit of the Father ſpeaking in them? Profitetur ſe quotidiè, velit nolit. Doctiorem fieri.

Verſe 20. But the Spirit of your Father] Who borroweth your mouth for preſent, to ſpeak by. It is he that forms your ſpeeches for you, dictates them to you, filleth you with matter, and furniſheth you with words. Fear not therefore your rudeneſs to reply. There is no mouth into which God cannot put words: And how oft doth he chuſe the weak and unlearned to confound the wiſe and mighty, as he did Balaams Aſs to confute his maſter?

Verſe 21. And the brother ſhall deliver up the brother] As Alphonſus Diazius did his own brother John at Neoberg in Germany. So, Doctor London, made Filmer the Martyrs own brother witneſs againſt him, cheriſhing him with meat and money, and telling him he ſhould never lack as long as he lived, &c. So, one Woodman was delivered by his own brother into his enemies hands. Of him and other Martyrs burnt with him, White, Biſhop of Wincheſter after Gardiner, falſly affirmed in a Sermon, Good people, theſe men deny Chriſt to be God, and the holy Ghoſt to be God, &c. In the civil Wars of France, the ſons fought againſt their fathers, and brothers againſt brothers, and even women took up arms on both ſides, for defence of their Religion. This is the effect of the Goſpel of peace, but by accident. Sleiden lib. 17. Act. and Mon. fol. 1112. Ibid. 1801. Ibid. 1813. Hiſt. of Coun. of Tren fol. 647.

And the father the child] As Philip King of Spain; who ſaid he had rather have no ſubjects then hereticks as he called them: And, out of a bloody zeal, ſuffered his eldeſt ſon Charls to be murdered by the cruel Inquiſition, becauſe he ſeemed to favor the Proteſtant ſide. Hieron. Catina.

Verſe 22. And ye ſhall be hated] Haud perindè crimine incendii quam odio humani generis convicti ſunt, ſaith Tacitus of thoſe poor Chriſtians, that by Nero were haled to death for ſetting the City of Rome on fire, which was done by himſelf. Tertullian telleth us, that their name, and not their crime was puniſhed in Chriſtians. So Luther complaineth that there was in his days no crime comparable to that, of profeſſing the Goſpel. Tertull. in Apol. *Nullum flagitium hodiè par eſt huic uni & ſummo ſacrilegio, ſc. But he that endureth to the end] Apostacy looseth the things that it hath wrought, 2 Joh. 8. Non quæruntur in Christianis initia, sed finis, saith Hierom. It is the evening that crowneth the day, and the last scene that commends the enterlude.

Verse 23. Flee ye into another.] That is, make all the haste that may be, as Cant. 8. 14. Fuge, fuge Brenti, citò, citius, citissimè, so friendly did a Senator of Hala advise Brentius. He did so, and thereby saved his life. There was one Laremouth, Chaplain to Lady Ann of Cleve, a Scotch man, to whom in prison it was said, as he thought, Arise, and go thy ways. Whereto when he gave no great heed at first, the second time it was so said. Upon this, as he fell to his prayers, it was said the third time likewise to him; which was half an hour after. So he arising upon the same, immediatly a piece of the prison wall fell down; and as the Officers came in at the outer gate of the prison, he leaping over the ditch escaped. And in the way meeting a certain beggar, changed his coat with him, and coming to the Sea-shore, where he found a vessel ready to go over, was taken in, and escaped the search, which was straitly laid for him all the Countrey over. Tertullian was too rigid in condemning all kind of flight in time of persecution.

Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel] This is another comfort to the Apostles and their successors, that though forced to flee from City to City, yet they shall still find harbor, and places of employment. They shall not have finished, that is taught and converted all the Cities of Gods Israel, both according to the flesh, and according to the faith, till the Son of man be come to judgement, see Mat. 24 30. Luk. 21. 27.

Verse 24. The Disciple is not above his Master] Sweeten we the tartness of all our sufferings, with this sentence, as with so much sugar. Blandina the Martyr being grievously racked and tortured, cryed out ever and anon, Christiana sum, I am a Christian: and with that consideration was so relieved and refreshed, that all her torments seemed but a pastime to her.

Verse 25. It is sufficient for the Disciple, &c.] And a fair preferment too, Joh. 21. 18. Peter thinks much that himself should be destined to die a Martyr, and not John. What shall he do? saith Peter, Follow thou me, saith our Saviour. I shall shew thee the way to an ignominious suffering, what ever becomes of John; though he shall suffer his part too. For if the head be crowned with thorns, should not the members feel the pain of it?

If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub] That is Master-fly, such as Pliny calleth Μυιαγρὸς. The men of Elis sacrificed to Iupiter Muscarius. He is otherwise called Iupiter stercorarius, this Beelzebub: as the Scripture calls all the vanities of the Heathen Gelulim, excrements, dunghill Deities: A name too good for them. David would not do them so much honor, as once to name them. And Absit (saith Hierom) ut de ore Christiano sonet Iupiter omnipotens, & Mehercule, & Mecastor, & cætera magis portenta quam numina. Beelzebub was the God of Ekron, that is the Devil of hell (for of Ekron comes Acheron.) How prodigiously blasphemous then were these Miscreants, that called Christ Beelzebub? Wonder it was, that at the hearing thereof the heaven sweat not, the Earth shook not, the Sea swelled not above all her banks.

How much more shall they call, &c.] So they called Athanasius Sathanasius, Cyprian Coprian, Calvin Cain, Farellus, Devil. When he came first to Geneva, and began the Reformation there, he was haled before the Bishop, and set upon in this sort: Quid tu diabole nequissime ad hanc civitatem perturbandam accessisti? What a devil meanest thou to meddle with the Scriptures (said Steven Wincheſter to Marbeck) seeing thou art so stubborn and wilfull, thou shalt go to the Devil for me.

If I cannot be master of another mans tongue, yet I can be of mine own ears. Dion writes of Severus, that he was carefull of what he should do, but careless of what he should hear. Do well, and hear ill, is written upon heaven gates, said that Martyr. For there is nothing hid, that shall not be known] q. d. Deal not unfaithfully in the Ministry: conceal not the truth in unrighteousnes, betray not the cause of God by a cowardly silence. For (whatsoever you may plausibly plead and pretend for your false-play) all shall out at length; and well it shall appear to the world, that you served not the Lord Christ, but your own turns upon Christ: and so your selves might sleep in a whole skin, let what would become of his cause and Kingdom. Fearful men are the first in that black bill, Rev. 21. 8. And God equally hateth the timorous as the treacherous.

Verse 27. What I tell you in darknes, &c.] q. d. See that ye be valiant and violent for the truth: declare unto the world all the counsel of God, which you have therefore learned in private, that ye may teach in publike; not fearing any colours, much les stealing from your colours, Heb. 10. 38. Quas non oportet mortes praeligere, quod non supplicium potius ferre, immo in quam profundam inferni abyssum non intrare, quam contra conscientiam attestari? saith Zuinglius. A man had better endure any misery then an enraged conscience.

Verse 28. And fear not them which kill the body] That cruelly kill it (as the word signifies) that wittily torture it, as those Primitive Persecutors, with all the most exquisite torments that the wit of malice could devise: that kill men so, that they may feel themselves to be killed, as Tiberius bad. Odult Gemmet suffered a strange and cruel death in France for Religion. For when they had bound him, they took a kind of creatures which live in horse-dung, called in French Escarbots, and put them unto his navel, covering them with a dish, the which, within short space, pierced into his belly, and killed him. The tragical story of their cruel handling of William Gardner Martyr in Portugal may be read in Mr. Foxes Martyrologie, fol. 1242. At the los of Heydelberg, Monsieur Millius an ancient Minister and man of God, was taken by the bloody Spaniards, who having first abused his daughter before him, tied a small cord about his head, which with truncheons they wreathed about, till they squeezed out his brains. So they rather roasted then burnt many of our Martyrs, as B. Ridley, and others: neither would they let the dead rest in their graves, as Paulus Phagius, whose bones they digged up and burnt: so they raged exceedingly upon the dead body of Zuinglius, after they had slain him in battle, &c. Now these that cruelly kill the body we must not fear. Our Saviour saith not, that can kill the body, at their pleasure, for that they cannot: but that do kill it, when God permits them to do it. And then too, occidere possunt, ladere non possunt, as he told the tyrant: they may kill the Saints but cannnot hurt them, because their souls are out of gunshot. St. Pauls sufferings reached no further then to his flesh, Col. 1. 25. his soul was unmouched, he possessed that in patience amidst all outward perturbations.

But are not able to kill the soul] As they would do fain, if it were in their power. David oft complains that they sought after his soul, that they satanically hated him, &c. Now we commit thy soul to the Devil, said the Persecutors to John Hus. The Popish Priests perswaded the people here at the burning of the Martyrs, that when the gunpowder (that was put under their armholes for a readier dispatch of them) gave a burst, then the Devil fetcht away their souls. When Cranmer often cryed in the fire, Lord Jesu receive my spirit, a Spanish Monk ran to a Noble-man then present, and would have perswaded him that those were words of despair, and that he was now entring into hell. Upon the patient and pious death of George Marsh, many of the people said he died a Martyr, which caused the Bishop shortly after to make a Sermon in the Cathedral, and therein he affirmed, that the said Marsh was an heretick, burnt like an heretick, and a fire-brand in hell. Of Nicolas Burton Martyr in Spain, because he embraced death for Christ with all gladnes and patience, the Papists gave out that the Devil had his soul, before he came to the fire, and therefore they said his senses of feeling were past already.

But rather fear him] As one fire, so one fear drives out another. Therefore, in the second Commandment, lest the fear of mens punishment should keep us from worshipping of God, great punishment is threatned to them that worship him not. If I forsake my profession, I am sure of a worse death then Judge Hales had, said that Martyr. There is martial Law for those that forsake their Captain, or else (under a colour of discretion) fall back into the rereward. They that draw back, do it to perdition, Heb. 10. 39.

And is it nothing to lose an immortal soul? to purchase an everliving death? Should servants fear their masters, because they have power over the flesh, Col. 3. 23. and should not we fear him that can destroy both body and soul in hell? Biron Marshal of France derided the Earl of Essex his piety at his death, as more befitting a silly Minister then a stout Warriour: as if the fear of hell were not a Christian mans fortitude; as if it were not valor but madness to fight with a flaming fire, that is out of our power to suppress. This Biron, within few moneths after, underwent the same death that Essex did, and then if he feared not hell, he was sure to feel it.

Verse 29. Are not two sparrows, &c.] Birds flying seem to be at liberty, yet are guided by an over-ruling hand: they flie freely, yet fall by Divine dispose, and not as the fowler will: But we are better then many sparrows. Gods providence is punctual, and particular, extending even to the least and lightest circumstances of all our occurrences; whatever Hierom thought to the contrary, and Pliny with his Irridendum verò curam agere rerum humanarum illud quicquid est summum: It is a ridiculous thing saith he to imagine that God takes care of our particular affairs. How much better St. Augustine, Deus sic curat universos quasi singulos, sic singulos, quasi solos. Gods providence extends to every particular, both person and occurence.

Verse 30. But the very hairs of your head, &c.] As things of price, and such as God sets great store by. Hence he enjoyned his Nazarites, when they had accomplished their vow, to shave their heads, and put the hair in the fire, under their peace-offering, for a sacrifice to the Lord. The Ammonites paid dear for the hair they shaved off the heads and beards of Davids messengers. So hath Bonner I believe, ere this, for the Martyrs beard he pulled off, part of it, causing the other part thereof to be shaved, lest his manly act should be seen to the world. The three Worthies were taken out of the fiery furnace with their hairs in full number, not one of them cinged.

Verse 31. Fear not therefore] This is the third time in six verses, that they and we are bid to banish this cowardly base passion, this causeless, fruitless, harmful, sinful fear of men. He that fears God, needs fear none else. Moses feared not Pharaoh, nor Micaiah Ahab, when they had once seen God in his Majesty. Micaiah will not budge or alter his tale; as the Lion fiercely pursued, will not alter his gate, they say, though he die for it. Doctor Tailour, Martyr, when being sent for by Steven Gardiner, his friends perswaded him not to appear, but fly; Fly you, said he, and do as your conscience leads you, I am fully determined, with Gods grace, to go to the Bishop, and to his beard, to tell him that he doth nought. This he resolved to do, and this he did accordingly. For at his first appearance, Art thou come, thou villain, said the Bishop? How darest thou look me in the face for shame? Knowest thou not who I am? Yes, I know who you are (said he again) Doctor Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, and Lord Chancellor, yet but a mortal man, I trow. But if I should be afraid of your Lordly looks, why fear you not God the Lord of us all? how dare you for shame look any Christian man in the face, seeing you have forsaken the truth, denied your Master Christ, and his Word, and done contrary to your own oath and writing? With what countenance will you appear before the Judgement seat of Christ, and answer to your oath? &c.

heart. Dissemble, go to Church, do what ye will, but Da mihi cor: be in heart a Papist, and go where you will. Christ will endure no such dealing. He will have heart and tongue too, Rom. 10. 9. he will be worshipped truly that there be no halting, and totally that there be no halving. We may as well (saith Zuinglius) do worship at the Altar of Jupiter or Venus, as hide our Faith for fear of Antichrist. He that is not with me is against me, saith our Saviour. He likes not these politick Professors, these neuterpassive Christians, that have fidem menstruam, as Hilary said of some in his time, that have religionem ephemeram, as Beza saith of Balduinus the French Apostate, that can turn with the times, comply with the company, be (as the Planet Mercury) good in conjunction with good, and bad with bad. These are they that do virtutis stragulam pudefacere, put honesty to an open shame, as the Philosopher could say: And shall these mens faith be found to praise, and honour, and glory? It is not likely.

1 Pet. 1. 7.

Verse 33. But whosoever shall deny me] Not onely utterly to renounce Christ, but out of base respects to dissemble him, is to deny him. Peter denyed his Master as well in saying, I wot not what thou sayest, as in swearing he never knew the man. The people of Israel, 1 King. 18. 11. that held their peace only, when the Prophet had said, If the Lord be God, follow him, are blamed, and worthily, for their detestable indifferency. Indeed they spake not against the Prophet, but they durst not speak with him. Many such cold friends religion hath now adays. This they will dearly repent and rue, when they come to give account, with the world all on a light flame about their ears, and the elements falling upon them, as scalding lead, or running Bell-mettle.

Him will I also deny before my Father] And the Father will entertain none but such as come commended to him by his Son Christ. He will surely cashire all others, as the Tirshatha did those proud Priests, that grew ashamed of their profession, and could not finde their Register, Ezr. 2. 62.

Verse 34. Think not that I came to send peace.] Peace is twofold, Temporis & pectoris, of Countrey and of Conscience. This later is Christs legacy, and the Saints are sure of it. But the former, they seldom finde here; In the world ye shall have trouble, saith our Saviour. Should we look for fire to quench our thirst? saith a Martyr: And as soon shall Gods true servants finde peace and favour under Christs regiment. This world is to the Saints as the Sea called Pacifique, then the which there is nothing more troublesom and tumultuous: Or as the straits of Magellan, where, which way soever a man bend his course, he shall be sure to have the winde against him.

His own Father coming with a staff, would have beaten him, but that the Officers kept him off. Julius Palmer, Martyr, coming to his Mother, and asking her blessing, Thou shalt, said she, have Christs curse and mine where ever thou goest. John Fetty, Martyr, was accused and complained of by his own wife, and she was thereupon struck mad. Another like example there is to be read of an unnatural husband, witnessing against his own wife, and likewise of children against their own Mother, &c. So this saying of our Saviour is fulfilled. And it was not for nothing that Antigonus praid so hard to be delivered from his friends; that Q. Elizabeth complained, That in trust she had found treason.

poor Christ. Salvian saith, That Christ is, mendicorum maximus, the greatest beggar in the world, as one that shareth in all his Saints necessities. Relieve him therefore in them: so shall you lay up in store for your selves a good foundation against the time to come; yea, you shall lay hold on eternal life, 1 *Tim.*6. 19. Of Midas it is fabled, that whatever he touched, he turned into gold. Sure it is that whatsoever the hand of charity toucheth, be it but a cup of cold water, it turns the same, not into gold, but into Heaven it self. He is a niggard then to himself, that is niggardly to Christs poor. If Heaven may be had for a cup of cold water, what a bodkin at the churls heart will this be one day? Surely the Devil will keep holy-day, as it were in Hell, in respect of such.

Verily, I say unto you, he shall in no wise,&c.] By this deep asseveration, our Saviour tacitely taxeth the worlds unbelief, whiles they deal by him, as by some patching companion or base bankrupt, trust him not at all, without either ready money, or a sufficient pawn. But what saith a grave Divine? Is not mercy as sure a grain as vanity? Is God like to break, or forget? Is there not a book of remembrance written before him, which he oftner peruseth, then Ahasuerus did the Chronicles? The Butler may forget Joseph, and Joseph his Fathers house: but God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have shewed toward his name, in that you have ministred to the Saints, and do minister, Heb. 6.10.

Verse 1. He departed thence to teach,&c.]

NEver out of action: the end of one good work was with our Saviour the beginning of another. So must it be with Ministers: let them never look to rest, till they come to Heaven: but (as S. Paul, that Insatiabilis Dei cultor, as Chrysostom called him) teach Gods people publikely and from house to house, unceasantly warning every one night and day with tears. Dr. Tailour Martyr, preached not onely every Sabbath-day and holy-day, but whensoever else he could get the people together. So did Bishop Ridley, Bishop Jewel,&c. So did not their successors, once a year was fair with many of them, (like the high-Priest in the Law) as if they had concurred in opinion with that Popish Bishop, that said, It was too much for any man to preach every Sunday, and that Bishops were not ordained to preach: but to sing Mass sometimes, leaving all other Offices to their suffragans. It is as rare a thing at Rome, said Doctor Bassinet, to hear a Bishop preach, as to see an Ass flee. A goodly thing he holds it to dissent from them, though in a manifest truth. So George Duke of Saxony was heard to say: Though I am not ignorant that heresies and abuses are crept into the Church: Yet I will never obey the Gospel that Luther preacheth. This was the ready way to win upon them, who might have ſuſpected a ſimple aſſertion, not ſeconded with ſuch undeniable arguments. Let our lives as well as our lips witneſs for us: Vivite concionibus, concionamini moribus, ſaith one. Nos non eloquimur magna, ſed vivimus, ſaid the Church of old. This is the way to ſlaughter envie it ſelf, and to raign in the hearts of the righteous.

Verſe 5. The blinde receive their ſight.] Our Saviour ſeems to ſay the ſame to John, that ſhe did to Judas, *Gen.*38.25. Diſcern I pray thee, whoſe (works) are theſe. The end of his Miracles was the proof of his Majeſty.

The poor have the Goſpel, &c.] Gr. are Goſpelized: they not onely receive it, but are changed by it, transformed into it. εὐαγγελίζονται.

Verſe 6. And bleſſed is he, &c.] This he adds, as correcting the prepoſterous emulation of Johns Diſciples, who ſtumbled alſo at his meanneſs. Howbeit our Saviour ſaith not, Curſed be ye for being offended in me: But Bleſſed is he, &c. Gods tender lambs muſt be gently handled. Evangelizatum, non maledictum miſſus es, ſaid Oecolampadius to Farellus, who was a moſt excellent Preacher, but over-carried perhaps ſometimes, by his zeal for God. I commend thine earneſtneſs, (as he there goeth on) ſo thou mingle it with mildneſs. Wine and Oyl are in their ſeveral ſeaſons to be poured into mens wounds. Shew thy ſelf to be a gentle Evangeliſt, and not a tyrannical lawmaker, &c. Laudo zelum, modò non deſideretur manſuetudo, &c. Oecolamp. Epiſt.

Verſe 7. And as they departed,] Due praiſe is to be given to the good parts and practiſes of others: but rather behinde their backs, then before their faces, leſt we be ſuſpected of flattery, then the which nothing is more odious: Ariſtobulus the Hiſtorian, wrote a flattering book, of the brave acts of Alexander the Great, and preſented it to him. He read it, and then caſt it into the River Hydaſpes, telling the Author that he had deſerved to be ſo ſerved as his book was. Tu dignior eras ut eodem præcipitareris, qui ſolus me ſic pugnantem ſatis. Ioh. 5.35.

A reed ſhaken with the winde.] A thing of nothing: A worthleſs, poyſleſs perſon. So the Jews eſteemed John Baptiſt after a while, whom at firſt they ſo much admired. But he ſoon grew ſtale to them: and then they ſhamefully ſlighted him. And did not the Galathians do the like by S. Paul? Once they could have pulled out their eyes for him: afterwards, they would have pulled out his eyes, if they could have come at him. Where is then the bleſſedneſs ye ſpake of, ſaith he? q.d. Once you held and profeſſed your ſelves a people much bleſſed in me: how comes it, that I am now ſo fallen out of your hearts? But people are over-ſoon ſated with the heavenly Manna, and their affections to godly Miniſters are as Joabs dagger, aſſoon in, and aſſoon out. Principes favebant Luthero, ſed jam iterum videtis ingratitudinem mundi erga Miniſtros, ſaid Melanchthon. Gal.4.15. μακαρισμὸς. Beatitudinis prædicatio. Beza. *Anno.*1559.

Verſe 8. A man clothed in ſoft?] Which moſt men gaze at, go after, fawn upon. Hunc homines decorant, quem veſtimenta decorant. Herein they reſemble thoſe dogs that kept Vulcans Temple: of which Hoſpinian tells us, that if any came to the Temple with brave clothes, they would fawn upon them: but if in ragged, they would tear them in pieces. Such a vanity as this was crept into the Church, *Jam.*2.2. Fulgent ferè monilibus, ſordent moribus. Cato could ſay, Cultus magnam curam, magnum virtutis eſſe inviriam. The Baptiſt was not a man of that make. His heart and his habit were equally plain, ſimple. Buchanan ſeldom cared for a better out-ſide, then a rug-gown girt cloſe about him. ἱμάτια ἁπλᾶ. *Peachams Compl. Gentlem. pag.*91.

ἀπόστολος Heb. 11.

Verse 9. And more then a Prophet.] Because he pointed out Christ with the finger, whom they onely saluted afar off. Chrysologus calleth him, Legis & Gratiæ fibulam. Another resembleth him to the Angel, that had one foot in the Sea, and another on the land. The Law he resembleth to the Sea, which is rough and moveable. The Gospel to the Land, which is firm and stable, &c.

Verse 10. Behold I send my Messenger.] Gr. Mine Angel. So Phinias is called an Angel, Judg. 2. 1. The Priest an Angel, Eccles. 5. 6. Ministers of the Gospel Angels, 1 Cor. 11. 10. Ministers and Angels have exchanged names and Offices: for are they not all Ministring spirits? Did not Angels first preach the Gospel, Luk. 2. the ministration whereof is now committed to us? so that if there be a Messenger, an Interpreter, one among a thousand to shew unto man his righteousnes, then will God be gracious unto him, &c.

Heb. 1. 14.

Verse 11. There hath not risen a greater] Because he was Christs immediate fore-runner, now the nearer to Christ, the more excellent: as the elements, the higher, the purer. John was beyond all the ancient Prophets, both in dignity and doctrine: Yet he came behinde the Evangelists and Apostles, not in the dignity of his office, but in the clearnes of his doctrine, concerning the Messiah, whom he saw present, but neither saw nor heard of suffering, dying, rising again, as they did. Macarius writeth that the Prophets knew, indeed, that Christ should be born into the world, for the work of our Redemption, but whether or no he should die and rise again, this they knew not. Verùm longè errat Macarius, saith one. The Prophet Isay writes of all these, more like an Evangelist then a Prophet, and is therefore called by an Ancient, The Evangelical Prophet. Now the Baptist knew more then any Prophet: being as the morning-star that precedes the Sun-rising. But how Aristotle should be said to be Christs fore-runner in Natural things, as John Baptist was in Supernatural, and that he was certainly saved, (all which the Divines of Colen affirmed in print, and shewed their reasons) I cannot conceive. And yet Sleidan tells us that in the Council of Trent, the salvation of Heathens, by the power of nature onely without Christ, was cryed up: and afterwards defended by Soto, Vega, & Victoria, as Valentia witnesseth.

Verse 12. And from the dayes of John, &c.] The Baptist is further commended from the good success of his ministry: a sweet seal, but no sure sign of a sanctified Preacher: sith many causes give that to others, that themselves have not. Thus the liveless Heaven gives life to divers creatures, the dull whetstone sharpens Iron. A stinking breath may sound a Trumpet with great commendation, &c. Howbeit, the fruitfulnes of the people, is the Preachers testimonial, 2 Cor. 3. 2. and God delights to honour those of most sincerity, with most success, as 1 Cor. 15. 10.

The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence.] Men are resolved to have it, whatever pains or peril they pass thorow. As Gods Israel violently invaded and over-ran the promised land: So do his Elect lay hold on the promised inheritance. This true treasure hitherto hid, Rom. 16. 26. is now discovered, and exposed to all that have a minde to it. Now therefore they are carryed with all strength of affection after Christ: him they must have, whatever else they go without: towards him they flie as a Cloud: and as a flock of doves they scour into the columbary, and rush into the windows, Isa. 60. 8.

And the violent, &c.] The valiant, Isay calleth them, that break thorow all difficulties, as did Davids Worthies; and walk about the world as so many Conquerours: yea more then Conqurours they are, Rom. 8. 37. and what can that be but Triumphers? 2 Cor. 2. 14.

Take it by force] Make a prey or a prize of it. Diripiunt as Hilary rendreth it, making it a metaphor, from a Tower or Town sackt and ransackt by the enemy. Cyprus is an Island so fruitful and pleasant, that it was anciently called Macaria, that is, blessed. And of it Sextus Rufus writeth, that being famous for riches, it thereby sollicited the poverty of the people of Rome, to seise upon it. This may be more fitly said of Heaven, that habitation of the happy ones, so eagerly and earnestly sought for by the Saints, that nothing else will satisfie them. Valdè protestatus sum me nolle sic à Deo satiari, said Luther, when great gifts were sent unto him, and a Cardinalship offered him by the Pope: God, he said, should not put him off with those petty things, he breathed after better. Heaven is had by the violent, Earth inherited by those that that are meek, Matth. 5.6. Where, though God would have his ſervants content with the leaſt mercies, (as being leſs then the very leaſt) yet not ſatisfied with the greateſt things in the world for their portion, ſith they are born to better. If they be, as moſt are, ſlothful in ſeeking to poſſeſs themſelves of Heaven: He chides them, as Joſhuah did the ſeven Tribes, for their negligence, Joſh. 18.2.

Verſe 13. For all the Prophets and the Law, &c.] i.e. The Miniſtery of the Prophets, and the ſhadows of the Law determined in Johns preaching. As for the ſubſtance of the Law, Chriſt came not to deſtroy, but fulfill it, Matth. 5.17,18. See the notes thereon.

Verſe 14. This is Elias.] Not the Thisbite, but yet the ſame that Malachy foretold ſhould come in the ſpirit and power of Elias. And ſurely, if we obſeve it, (as here Chriſt ſaith to the Jews, If ye will receive it) there is a wonderful agreement between the times of Elias and John Baptiſt, between Ahab and Herod, between Jezebel and Herodias, &c. The Jews alſo have a ſaying amongſt them at this day, when they are puzzled in any point, Elias cum venerit, ſolvet omnia.

Verſe 15. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear] Let him attentively liſten, not with that outward ear onely, that griſtle that grows upon his head: but let him draw up his heart to his ears, that one ſound may pierce both at once. Thus hear, and your ſouls ſhall live, Iſa. 55.3. A heavie ear is a ſingular judgement, Iſa. 6. The good Hebrews are taxed for their dull hearing, Heb. 5.11. Such ears are likely to be forced open by correction, Job 33.16. and be made hear the rod, Mich. 6.9. So that if they did but ſee their danger, they would do, as the Prophet requires, cut their hair and caſt it away, under the ſenſe of the horror of Gods heavie diſpleaſure, Jer. 7.24,29. Iſa. 30.8,9.

Verſe 16. But Whereunto ſhall I liken this generation?] So great was the contumacy and obſtinacy of this perverſe people, the Phariſees eſpecially, that the wiſdom of God ſeems to be at a want for a fit word to utter to them, for their better conviction. And do not ſome ſuch ſit before us at this day, as ſenceleſs every whit of what is ſaid to them, as the ſeats they ſit on, the pillars they lean to, the dead bodies they tread upon? We may ſpeak to them, alas, till we ſpet out our lungs, and all to as little purpoſe, as Bede did, when he preached to an heap of ſtones.

Verſe 17. We have piped unto you, &c.] It is probable that children, in thoſe days, were wont to ſolace themſelves with ſongs in this ſort: And thence our Saviour ſeeks to repreſs the pride, and ſet forth the ſin of his untoward hearers. Fit ſimilies do excellently illuſtrate: And he's the beſt Preacher, ſaith Luther, that delivereth himſelf vulgarly, plainly, trivially: not ſpeaking in a Roman, Engliſh, or other lofty language, that the hearers are nothing the wiſer for: nor yet puzzling them with ſcholaſtical craggy diſquiſitions, that breed winde, and not nouriſhment. But ſo attempering their diſcourſes to the hearers capacities, that their deſires and endeavours may anſwer his: as it was between S. Paul and the Elders of Epheſus, Acts 20.31.—37. He tells them of his tears, and they anſwer him with tears: O happy compliance! But moſt of our hearers are like theſe in the Text, which whether piped to, or mourned to, are nothing at all affected.

Verſe 18. For John came neither eating, &c.] So froward men are and frample, that no Preacher can pleaſe them. If he preach plainly, it will ſeem careleſs ſlubbering: if elaborately, curious affectation. And for his life; Auſtere John hath a devil, ſociable Chriſt is a wine-bibber. And it was the worſe, becauſe from Scribes and Phariſees, whoſe word muſt carry ſuch credit with it, as alone to condemn Chriſt; and whoſe life muſt be a rule to others. Do any of the Phariſees believe in him? In this caſe duty muſt be done, however it be conſtrued. Evil men, when they learn to think well, will learn to report well. Let our lives, and labours in the Lords work confute them: and though they ſhould by their reproaches bury our good names in their throats, thoſe open ſepulchers, yet at utmoſt, when Chriſt comes to judgement, there ſhall be a reſurrection of names as well as of bodies. Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord, James 5.7.

And they ſay he hath a devil] So Staphylus and Surius ſaid, that Luther learned his Divinity of the Devil. The Jeſuites affirm, that he was ſtirred up by the Devil, and they were ſent out by God to reſiſt him. Himſelf knew all this, and took it well aworth. Prorſus ſatan eſt Lutherus (ſaith he in an Epiſtle to Spalatinus) ſed Chriſtus vivit & regnat: Amen: he adds his Amen to it.

Verſe 19. The Son of man came eating and drinking] Teaching us thereby, in the uſe of things indifferent, to do what we can to preſerve our good eſteem with others, that we may the ſooner prevail with them. This was S. Pauls, All things to all men. He turned himſelf into all ſhapes and faſhions both of ſpeech and ſpirit, to win men to God. S. Auſtin ſpake broken barbarous latine to the Roman Colonies in Africk, to the end that they might underſtand him. When I come to Rome, ſaith Ambroſe to Monica, I faſt on the Saturday: when I am at Millain I faſt not. So you, to what Church ſoever you come, ejus morem ſerva, do as others do; not giving offence careleſly, nor taking offence cauſeleſly. Calvin was caſt out of Geneva, for refuſing to adminiſter the Lords Supper with wafer-cakes or unleavened bread. De quo poſtea reſtitutus nunquam contendendum putavit (ſaith Beza in his life) of which, being afterwards reſtored, he thought beſt to make no more words, but to yield: though he let them know, that he had rather it were otherwiſe. Chriſt ſets us to learn of the unjuſt Steward, by all lawful (though he did it by unlawful) means, to maintain our reputation with men. For this defect he noted in the beſt, when he ſaid, The children of this world are wiſer in their generation, then the children of light.

Luk. 16. 8.

But Wiſdom is juſtified of her children] Who all having a right eſtimate of her worth, do meanly eſteem of other courſes and diſcourſes, do ſtand to her, and ſtickle for her, though never ſo much ſlighted by the world. There are that read it thus: But Wiſdom is judged of her children, viz. the perverſe Jews, who prepoſterouſly paſs ſentence upon their Mother, whom they ſhould rather vail to, and vote for.

Judicatur, vel ſententia pronunciatur. Camerar. Scultet.

Verſe 20. Then began he to upbraid] Haply, becauſe theſe Cities, drawn by the authority of the Phariſees, made leſs account of our Saviours doctrine or Miracles, by them maliciouſly depraved and diſparaged. The blinde led the blinde, but both fell into the ditch, though their leaders lay undermoſt.

Becauſe they repented not.] There is a heart that cannot repent; that hath loſt all paſſive power of coming out of the ſnare of the Devil; that is become ſuch, through long trading in ſin, as neither miniſtry, nor miſery, nor miracle, nor mercy can poſſibly mollifie. Upon ſuch you may write, Lord have mercy upon them. O! ſaid a reverend man, If I muſt be put to my option, I had rather be in Hell with a ſenſible heart, then live on earth with a reprobate minde.

Rom. 2.

Verſe 21. Wo unto thee Chorazin] Theſe littorals, or thoſe that dwell by the Sea-Coaſt, are noted to be duri, horridi, immanes, omnium denique peſſimi, rough, harſh, theeviſh, peeviſh people, and as bad as thoſe that are worſt. But that which aggravated theſe mens ſin, and made it out of meaſure ſinful, was the contempt of the Goſpel: which, as it is poſt naufragium tabula, ſo how ſhall they eſcape that neglect ſo great ſalvation? See that ye ſhift not off him that ſpeaketh from Heaven, &c. Hierom tels us, that Chorazin was in his time turned into a Deſart, being two miles diſtant from Capernaum. As for Bethſaida, our Saviour had therehence taken three of his Apoſtles at leaſt, to be lights of the world, but the Inhabitants of this Town, loved darkneſs rather then light; the Apoſtles their Country-men could do no good upon them. Our Saviour therefore would not ſuffer ſo much as the blinde man whom he had cured to be their Preacher, but led him to the Towns end, and there reſtoring him to ſight, ſent him away.

μὴ παραιτήσησθε. Heb. 12.

They would have repented long ago] Blinde Heathens, when any miſery was upon them, would to their ſackcloth and ſorrows, thinking thereby to pacifie God, and ſo they reſted. In like ſort, there are amongſt us, that, when they are afflicted, eſpecially in conſcience, ſet upon ſome duty, ſo to lick themſelves whole again, Iſa. 58. 5. They do as Crows, that when they are ſick give themſelves a vomit, by ſwallowing down ſome ſtone, and then they are well. They reſt in their repentance: Hence Auſtin ſaith, Repentance damneth more then ſin.

Idcò deteriores ſumus quia meliores eſſe debemus. Salvian.

Verſe 22. It ſhall be more tolerable] Men are therefore the worſe, becauſe they ought to be better: and ſhall be deeper in Hell, becauſe Heaven was offered unto them, but they would not. Ingentia beneficia, flagitia, ſupplicia, ſay the Centuriſts. Good turns aggravate unkindneſſes: and mens offences are encreaſed by their obligations. If Turks and Tartars ſhall be damned, debauched Chriſtians ſhall be double-damned: becauſe, though they defie not, yet they deny the Lord that bought them; whileſt by their unchriſtian converſation they tell the world, that either there is no ſuch thing thing as Christ, or if there be, yet that he is but a weak Christ, and that there is no such power in his death, or efficacy in his resurrection to sanctifie those that belong unto him.

Verse 23. Which art exalted unto heaven] viz. In the abundance of the means of grace, many times called the Kingdom of heaven: for as the harvest is potentially in the seed, so is eternal life potentially in the Ordinances. God sends up and down the world to offer salvation. Hence that phrase, My salvation is gone forth: Hence, they that reject the word preached, are said to judge themselves unworthy of everlasting life, Acts 13.46. Hence, while Israel was without a teaching Priest, they are said to have been without the true God, 2 Chron. 15. 3. Hence the Psalmist makes the blessings that come out of Sion, to be better then any other that come out of heaven and earth, Psal. 134. 3.

Shalt be brought down to hell] With a violence, with a vengeance. As Ahashueroth said of Haman, that so much abused his favour, Hang him on the gallows that is 50 cubits high: so shall God say of such: Plunge them into hell much deeper then others, that whiles they were on earth, set so light by my grace, though it even kneeled unto them, wooing acceptance, 2 Cor. 5. 20.

It would have remained untill this day.] But God rained down hell from heaven upon them, and turned them into ashes saith Peter, yea their fire burnt to hell saith Jude. Some footsteps of it are yet to be found in the place, as Josephus relateth: and something also may be read of it in Tacitus and Solinus. Both St. Peter and St. Jude say, they were set forth for an example, Alterius perditio tua sit cautio. Let their destruction be our instruction; lest heathen Herodotus rise up in judgement against us, who said, that the coals and ashes of Troy burnt by the Greeks, were purposely set before the eyes of men, for an example of this rule, that National and notorious sins, bring down national and notorious plagues from a sin-revenging God. 2 Pet. 2. 6. Iude 7. De bell. Iud. lib. 5. τῶν μεγάλων ἀδικημάτων μεγάλαι εἰσὶν τιμωρίαι παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

Verse 24. It shall be more tolerable] Infidelity then is, in some respect, a worse sin then Sodomy, and a heavier doom abides it. They that suffer least in hell, suffer more then they can either abide or avoid. All they suffer here, is but typical of the wrath to come. Here the leaves only fall upon them, as it were, but there the whole trees too. Here they sip of the top of Gods cup, there they must drink the dregs, though it be eternity to the bottom. Howbeit Sodom shall suffer less then Capernaum, mitiùs punietur Cicero quam Catilina, saith an Ancient, non quòd bonus, sed quod minùs malus. The beast and the false Prophet were cast alive into the burning lake (which imports a most direfull and dreadful degree of torment) when the rest of the Antichristian rabble shall be first slain with the sword (not cast in alive) and then thrown to the infernal vultures, to be torn in pieces as a prey. Rev. 19. 20, 21. Diriſſimum exitii genus. Pareus.

Verse 25. At that time Jesus answered] Here to answer, is to continue to speak. Albeit if we compare herewith, Luke 10. 21. it may seem to be spoken in answer to the seventy Disciples now returning, and relating what they had said and done in their voyage.

Latius est quoties magno sibi constat honestum. Lucan.

Verse 26. Even so father, for so, &c.] Christ being tired out as it were by the untractableness of his hearers, turns him to his Father, and comforts himself with the consideration of his most wise decree and counsel, so must we in like case: accounting that we are a sweet savour unto God howsoever, even in them that perish, and that God shall have his end upon them, though we have not ours. 2 Cor. 2. 14.

Verse 27. All things are delivered unto me] This the worlds wizzards acknowledge not; hence they stand off. But Christ is the Fathers Plenipotentiary and Privy-Counsellor, unto all that are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God, as light as the world makes of him. But the more men see into his worth, the more they will repair to him. 1 Cor. 1. 24.

And he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him] Qui non habet Christum in horoscopo, non habet Deum in medio coeli.

Verse 28. Come unto me] Why do ye go about, as Jeremy hath it, and fetch a compass? Why labour ye for that which satisfieth not, Isa. 53. 3. Can the son of Jesse give you vineyards and olive-yards, &c. as Saul said? so say I, Can the world or the Devil do Jer. 31. 22.

for you as I can? Why come ye not unto me that ye may be saved? Can you mend your selves any where? &c. But the poor soul is ready to hang her comforts on every hedge, shift and shark in every by-corner for comfort, and never come at Christ with the hemorrhois, till all be spent, till she be forsaken of her hopes. Men will not desire Christ, till shaken.

Hag. 2. 7.

All ye] All, is a little word, but of large extent. The promises are indefinite, and exclude none. It is not for us to be interlining Gods Covenant, and excepting our selves, how bad soever, if broken-hearted.

And are heavy laden] Poised to an inch, ready to be weighed down to hell, with the turn of a scale, with the dust of a ballance superadded. Others might have Christ, if they would come to him. But till then, none will come. Steep thy thoughts in this sweet sentence, thou burdened soul, and come away to the Master, (as they said to blind Bartimeus) for behold he calleth thee.

And I will give you rest] No rest to the weary soul but in Christ, (as the dove found no rest till she returned to the Ark) It flees from this thing to that, as the bee doth from flower to flower to get honey, as Saul sought his asses from place to place. But as he found them at home after all, so must we find rest and refreshing in Christ, or not at all Let him that walketh in darkness, and hath no light, trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God. As for those that will kindle a strange fire, and compass themselves about with the sparks of their own tinderboxes, let them walk while they will in the light of their fire, and in the sparks that they have kindled, But this shall they have of Christs hand, they shall lye down in sorrow, Isa. 50. 10, 11.

Verse 29. Take my yoak upon you] q. d. Though freed by me from the damning and domineering power of sin, you must not think to live as you list. To argue from mercy to liberty is the Devils Logick: from mercy to duty is the right reasoning, as Rom. 12. 1. Christians must not be Yoakless, Awless, Masterless, Belialists, that wander at will as wild asses, or canes ἀδέσποτοι, but they must yield the obedience of faith, and be adding to their faith vertue, and to vertue knowledge, &c. linking the graces hand in hand as in a dance (so the word signifies) so shall they have an entrance ministred unto them further and further into Christ glorious Kingdom.

And learn of me] The archprophet, the Counsellor, that excellent speaker, as he is called in Daniel, that came out of the fathers bosome, and hath his fathers will at his fingers ends. Besides what he taught us by himself and his servants, he hath written for us those excellent things of his Law, those lively Oracles. He hath also left us, as here, his own practice for a pattern of the Rule, and for a compleat copy (as Saint Peter calleth it) to write after. Pindarus saith of Hiero Siracusanus, that he had cropt off the tops of all vertues. Melancthon, of Friderick the Elector of Saxony, that he had pickt out the flower of all noble abilities and endowments. The same Author proposeth George Prince of Anhalt for an example of unparalleld piety, worthy of all mens imitation. Machiavel sets forth Cæsar Borgia (a far worse man) as the only pattern for a prince to express. St. Hierom having read the religious life and death of Hilarion, folding up the book said, Well; Hilarion shall be the Champion whom I will imitate. How much rather should we say so of Christ: every of whose actions, whether moral or mediatory, were for our imitation. In his moral actions we should learn of him by doing as he did, 1 Pet. 2. 23. In his mediatory, by translating that he did to our spiritual life, as to die to sin, live to righteousness, &c.

And ye shall find rest unto your souls] These Christian vertues have virtutem pacativam, they lodge a sweet calm in the heart, freeing it from perturbations and distempers. An humble man saith, who am I but I may be despised, abused, injured? And that which will break a passionate mans heart, will not break a meek mans sleep.

And my burden light] Such as you may as easily bear away, as Sampson did the gates of Gaza; such as you may well run under, as a horse doth without a load, or a hinde upon the Mountains. It is no more burden then the wings are to the bird, wherewith it flies aloft where it listeth.

CHAP. XII.

Verse 1. Jesus went on the Sabbath day]

SAint Luke calleth it the second Sabbath after the first, chap. 6. 1. that is the second Anniversary or solemn-feast, from the first, to wit from the Passeover-Sabbath, and this was Pentecost.

δευτεροπρώτου.

And his Disciples were an hungred] Hereby he hardned and inured them to further and future trials: teaching them also to depend upon Gods good providence for their necessary maintenance. The Martyrs had their bread made of meal half mixt with saw-dust.

Act. and Mon.

To pluck the ears of corn and to eat] This was their best Sabbath-days dinner: May not we be glad of mean fare on any day, when our betters fared no better on so high a day? See my common-place of Abstinence.

Verse 2. Behold, thy Disciples do that which is not lawfull] This was as the proverb is, Sus Minervam, when blind Pharisees will be teaching Christ, how the Sabbath is to be sanctified. Not Hebrews only, but also Greeks and Barbarians rested from work on the seventh day: witness Josephus, Clemens Alexand. and Eusebius. Howbeit, to the Hebrews at mount Sina, God for a special favor, made known his holy Sabbath, Nehem. 9. 14. commanding them to do no servile work therein, Levit. 23. 7. 8. This excludes not works of Piety, Charity, and Necessity, such as was this of the Disciples in the text. The Iews in their superstition, would not fight on the Sabbath, and therefore lost their chief City to the Romans, under the command of Pompey, who took the advantage of the day, to do his utmost then against them. In after-times they grew more rigid in this point: for on the Sabbath they would not spet, ease nature, get out of a jakes, if by mishap they had fallen into it, as that Jew of Tewksbury. This ever was, and is the guise of hypocrites, to strain at gnats and swallow camels. Witness our modern Pharisees the Monks and Jesuites, who stumble at straws, and leap over mountains. Their Schoolmen determined that it was a less crime to kill a thousand men, then for a poor man to mend his shoe on the Sabbath-day.

Levius esse crimen mille homines jugulare, quam semel die Dominico pauperi calceum consuere.

Verse 3. But he said unto them] They had not proved a breach of the Sabbath, neither could they. A breach it had been, had not the Disciples been hungry, and he denies it not, but confutes their present cavils by clear Syllogisms, one in the neck of another, such as they could not answer, nor abide: and therefore sought to destroy him, ver. 14. See here the lawfull use of Logick in Divinity, and mistake not Saint *Hierom. David did when he was an hungred] Note here, that our Saviour excuseth David from his necessity, not from his dignity, which in point of sin God regards not; Potentes potenter torquebuntur. And yet how many are there who think, that when they have gotten an office, they may oppress at pleasure, swear by authority, drink and swill without controul? But height of place ever adds two wings to sin, example and scandal. And ill accidents ever attend such great ones, as being absolute in power, will be too resolute in will, and dissolute in life. Queen Elizabeth said, that Princes owe a double duty to God. 1. As men. 2. As Princes, Sedes prima & vita ima, is as unsutable, as for those that are clothed in scarlet to embrace the dunghill, Lam. 4. 5.

ἄρτους προθέσεως, ἐνώπιος προκειμένης. Joh. 6. 27.

Verse 4. And did eat the shew bread] The bread of proposition, as the Greek text hath it, the face-bread, as the Septuagint call it, or that which was daily set before the Lord, to in-mind him, as it were, of the twelve Tribes by those twelve loaves: and to teach us, to labor every day in the week (and not on the Sabbath only) for the bread that endureth to everlasting life; which the son of man will give to every hungry David.

Act. and Mon. fol. 858.

Verse 5. Prophane the Sabbath] As ye count profaning of it: or they profane it by Divine dispensation, whiles they do servile works in slaying sacrifices, and other things tending to the service of God, such as is now the ringing of the Sermon-bell amongst us, as amongst the Protestants in France, the letting off of a harqueburz or pistolet, whereby they congregate.

Col. 1. 19.

Verse 6. But I say unto you] q.d. whereas you will here object, that that was done in the Temple: I tell you I am greater then the Temple: for in me the God-head dwelleth bodily; as in the Temple was the Ark, where the glory of God appeared, so that it filled the Temple sometimes. Take notice here (by the way) how good it is to have some grave and godly man to be a beholder and Judge of our actions, to whom we may approve them, whatever other ill-affected think of them---Equitem mihi plaudere curo, saith the Heathen Poet. And Libanius (though an Atheist) could say, If Basil commend me, I care not what all others say of me. Christs white stone will comfort a Christian against the black coals of the worlds censures. If Demetrius have a good report of the truth, and such an one as St. John to bear record for him, he need not care though Diotrephes prate as fast against them both with malicious words, as the Pharisees did here against the Diciples, when Christ defended them.

Verse 7. But if ye had known] And it was a foul shame for them not to know. Who is blind as my servant? &c. Varro justly upbraided the Roman Priests, that there were many matters in their own rites and religions, that they understand not. What kinde of men they were, Tully in one place gives us to know in these words of his, Ut majores nostri Cincinnatum illum ab aratro abduxerunt, ut Dictator esset, sic vos de Pelasgis omnibus colligitis bonos illos quidem viros, sed certè non pererauditos, good honest men, but not guilty of much learning.

Ye would not have condemned the guiltless] Ignorance is the mother of misprision: the wisdom from above is without judging, Iam. 3. 17. And as any man is more wise, he is more sparing of his censures. Zanchy wonders that Lutherans, who profess to eat Christ corporally, should censure so bitterly.

Verse 8. The son of man is Lord of the Sabbath] q.d. Say they were not innocent, yet have you no cause to condemn them for Sabbath-breach; sith I am Lord of the Sabbath, and may do with mine own, as me seems best. True it is that Christ hates sin by nature, not by precept only; and therefore cannot dispense with the breach of his own Laws, those that be moral in themselves, such as are all the ten, but the fourth. The fourth Commandment is moral, not by nature, but by precept, saith one, and so the Lord of the Sabbath may dispense with the literal breach of the Sabbath.

Verse 9. He went into their Synagogue] These were Chappels of ease to the Temple, of ancient use, Act. 15. 21. and Divine authority, Psal. 74. 8. This here is called the Pharisees Synagogue, because they did Dominari in concionibus, Rom. 2. 19, 20. and are for their skill called Princes, 1 Cor. 2. 8.

Verse 10. Which had his hand withered] So have all covetous Caitiffs, who may well be said, amidst all their hoards, to have no currant coyn, no quick-silver. They sit abrood upon what they have got, as Euclio in the Comedian: and when, by laying out their money, they might lay hold on eternal life, they will not be drawn to it. But as Alphonsus King of Spain, when he stood to be King of the Romans, was prevented of his Verſe 11. What man ſhall there be, &c.] If a ſheep ſlipt into a ſlow muſt be relieved, how much more Chriſts reaſonable ſheep, all which bear golden fleeces, and every thing about whom is good either ad eſum, or ad uſum?

Verſe 12. Is it lawful to do well?] Nay it is needful, ſith not to do well is to do ill, and not to ſave a life, or a ſoul, is to deſtroy it, Mark 3. 4. Not to do juſtice is injuſtice, and not to ſhew mercy is no better then cruelty. Non faciendo nocens, ſed patiendo fuit.

Verſe 13. And he ſtretched it forth] So would our hold-faſts ſtretch out their hands to the poor, would they but come to Chriſt, and hear his voyce, as this man did. But till then, they will as eaſily part with their blood as with their good: All their ſtrife is, who (like the Toad) ſhall fall aſleep with moſt earth in his paws: As when they dye, nothing grieves them more, then that they muſt leave that which they have ſo dearly loved, whiles alive. I read of one wretch, who being at point of death, clapt a piece of gold in his own mouth, and ſaid, Some wiſer then ſome, I mean to have this with me howſoever. Aulo. de Claud. Rogers of love.

Verſe 14. How they might deſtroy him] All envy is bloody: Men wiſh him out of the world, whom they cannot abide; and would rather the Sun ſhould be extinguiſhed, then their candle obſcured. David durſt never truſt Sauls Proteſtations, becauſe he knew him to be an envious perſon. Nero put Traſeas to death for no other cauſe, but for that it was not expedient for Nero, that ſo worthy a man as he ſhould live by him. Dio.

Verſe 15. Great multitudes followed him] Maugre the malice of earth and hell. Or (as Melanchthon rendereth that Text) Vi erumpit, procedit, enititur: viſcilicet ſpirituali, ut ſol enititur per nubes: ergo irriti hoſtium conatus: It burſts through all. βιάζεται.

Verſe 16. That they ſhould not make him known] This, his ambicious Kinſmen, who ſought to get credit and glory among men by his worthy works, upbraid him with, John 7. 4. If thou do theſe things, ſhew thy ſelf to the world, ſay they; and ſo proclaim that they believed not in him, John 7. 5. with John 5. 44. John 12. 43.

Verſe 17. That it might be fulfilled] The old Teſtament, is the new foretold; the new Teſtament is the old fulfilled. Ezekiel ſaw a wheel within a wheel. This is, ſaith Bonaventure, the one Teſtament in the other.

Verſe 18. Behold my ſervant] My ſervant the Meſſias, as the Chaldee Paraphraſt renders and expounds it. The Septuagint ſomewhat obſcure the Text by adding to it, Behold my ſervant Jacob, and mine elect Iſrael. They are ſaid to have tranſlated againſt their wills; no wonder then they deal not ſo faithfully. Sure it is, that they have perverted ſundry clear Propheſies concerning Chriſt; as this for inſtance; which therefore our Evangeliſt and the reſt of the Apoſtles alledge not out of their tranſlation, but out of the Hebrew verity. The Latins drink of the pundles, the Greeks of the Rivers, but the Hebrews of the fountains, ſaid Johan. Reuchlin.

Whom I have choſen, my beloved, &c.] Ecce electum, dilectum. The Latins have a proverb, Deligas quem diligas. Chuſe for thy love, and then love for thy choice. God hath alſo choſen us in the beloved, Epheſ. 1. 6. that we ſhould be the beloved of his ſoul, or as the Septuagint there emphatically render it, his beloved ſoul. Ier. 12. 7. ἐδωκα τὴν ἠγαπημένην ψυχὴν μου. Dilectam animam meam, Vulg.

And he ſhall ſhew judgement] That is the doctrine of the Goſpel (whereby is convey'd into the heart that ſpirit of judgement and of burning (Iſa. 4. 4.) or the ſweet effect of it, true grace, which is called judgement a little below, Verſe 20.

Verſe 19. He ſhall not ſtrive] To bear away the bell from others.

Verſe 20. A bruiſed reed ſhall he not break] A reed ſhaken with the wind is taken for a thing very contemptible at the beſt, how much more when bruiſed? The wick of a candle is little worth; and yet leſs when it ſmoaks, as yielding neither light nor heat, but only ſtench and annoyance. This men bear not with, but tread out: So doth Mat. 11. 7.

doth not Christ, who yet hath a sharp nose, a singular sagacity, and soon resents our provocations. He hath also feet light burning brass to tread down all them that wickedly depart from his statutes, Psalm 119. 118. But so do not any of his, and therefore he receiveth and cherisheth with much sweetness, not the strong oaks only of his people, but the bruised reeds too; nor the bright torches only, but the smoaking wick: He despiseth not the day of small things. Smoak is of the same nature with flame; for what else is flame, but smoak set on fire? So, a little grace may be true grace, as the filings of gold are as good gold (though nothing so much of it) as the whole wedge. The least spark of fire, if cherished, will endeavour to rise above the ayr, as well as the greatest: So the least degree of grace will be aspiring to more. Now those very pantings, inquietations, and unsatisfiableness, cannot but spring from truth of grace, which Christ makes high account of. That's a sweet saying of Brentius, Etiamsi Fides tua, &c. Albeit thy faith be so small that it neither yields light to others, nor heat to thine own heart, yet Christ will not reject thee, Modo incrementum ores; so be it thou pray for more faith.

Verse 21. Shall the Gentiles trust] This trust is here put for the whole service of God, it being the least, and yet the best we can render to him. And the more we know of his name, the more we shall trust in him, Psal. 9. 10.

Verse 22. One possessed with a devil blind and dumb.] A heavy case, and yet that that may be any mans case. Cuivis potest contingere, quod cuiquam potest. Every one that seeth another stricken, and himself spared, is to keep a Passover for himself; and to say, Thou hast punished me less then my sins have merited, Ezra 9. 13. The Devil had shut up from this man all passages to faith, saith Theophylact, by bereaving him of the use of his eyes, ears, and tongue. See a mercy in the use of our senses, &c. Multò plures sunt gratiæ privativæ quam positivæ, saith Gerson.

Mimus. πᾶν σχεσθὲν καὶ ἄθῳον ὄντα. Xenophon.

Verse 23. And all the people were amazed] Admiration bred Philosophy, saith the Heathen: It bred superstition, saith the Scripture, when the world went wondering after the Beast. We may say too, that it bred piety in this people, and still we see the Word never works kindly, till men hear and admire it. Let others censure with the Pharisees; let us wonder with the multitude.

Admiratio peperit philosophiam. Revel. 13. 3.

Verse 24. This fellow doth not cast out Devils, &c.] The Devil that was cast out of the demoniacks body seems to have got into these mens hearts. But he was not his crafts-master: for what a senseless slander hear we? He should have arted it a little better, to have been believed. Tenue mendacium pellucet, saith Tacitus. This was such a lye as might be easily looked thorow. But envy never regards how true, but how mischievous. Witness the Popish Pharisees, who tell the poor misled and muzzled people in their Sermons, that the Protestants are blasphemers of God and all his Saints; that the English are grown barbarous, and eat young children; that ever since the Pope excommunicated us, we are as black as Devils; that the Powder-treason was plotted, and should have been acted by the Puritans; that the fall of Blackfryers in London, likewise was wrought by the Puritans, who had loosned the rafters &c. That these are the opinions we hold and teach, 1. To worship no God. 2. To frame our Religion to the times. 3. To account gain godliness. 4. To pretend publike liberty to our private lusts. 5. To break our oathes, when it makes for our advantage. 6. To cover hatred with flattery. 7. To confirm tyranny with blood-shed, &c. These and the like, that Cacodæmon Joannes, the black-mouth'd Jesuit tells the world in print are our tenets and practises. Now the Lord rebuke thee, Satan. But what reward shall be given to thee, thou false tongue? Even sharp arrows, with hot burning coals; yea those very coals of hell, from whence thou wert enkindled.

be damned together with him: So doth the Devil out of his deep and desperate malice to mankind, draw some into this sin, that he may drown them in the same destruction with himself.

And said unto them] He could, as he did oft no doubt, have answered them with silence, or punished them with contempt, committing his cause to him that judgeth righteously. He could have turned them off, as one did his railing adversary, with, Tu lingua, ego aurium Dominus: But inasmuch as Gods glory was highly concerned, and his cause might have suffered, if this cursed calumny had not been confuted. Our Saviour makes a most grave apology in the behalf of his doctrine and miracles, which he maintains and makes good by many demonstrative arguments. Tacitus. Seneca.

Every Kingdom divided against it self] Divide & impera, saith Machiavel. Make division and get dominion. Every subdivision, saith another, is a strong weapon in the hand of the adverse party. Where strife is (saith the Scripture) there is confusion, as Castor and Pollux, if they appear not together, it presageth a storm. Si collidimur frangimur, If we clash we cleave, said the two earthen pots in the fable, that were swimming down the stream together. The daughter of division is dissolution, saith Nazianzen. This the Jesuites know, and therefore do what they can to keep up the contentions between the Lutherans and the Calvinists. This the Turks know, and therefore pray to God, to keep the Christians at variance. Discord was the destruction of our Ancestors, as Tacitus testifieth, who was here in this Island with his father in law Agricola, and saw it. And the Lord Rich in his speech to the Justices of England in Edward the sixths Raign, could say; Never forraign power could yet hurt, or in any part prevail in this Realm, but by disobedience and disorder in themselves. That is the way wherewith God will plague us, if he mind to punish us. And so long as we do agree among our selves, and be obedient to our Prince, and to his godly orders; we may be sure that God is with us, and that forraign power shall not prevail against us, nor hurt us. Verse 26. He is divided against himself] But so he is not. There is a marvellous accordance even betwixt evil spirits. Squamæ Leviathan ita cohærent, ut earum opere textili densato quasi loricatus incedat Satan & cataphractus, as Luther elegantly and truly phraseth it. The Devils in the possessed person were many, yet they say, My name (not our name) is Legion. Though many, they speak and act as one in the possession. That kingdom, we see, is not divided. Luther de sacr. dere Concordiæ.

Verse 27. By whom do your children, &c.] That is, your Countreymen. Not the Disciples (as Augustin, and other Ancients would have it) but the Jewish exorcists, of whom see, Mark 9.38. Acts 19.9. As if our Saviour should have said, Unless that be a blemish in me, that you hold to be a beauty in others, why should you condemn me for a Conjurer? Why doth your malice thus wilfully cross your consciences? Certain it is, saith Erasmus, that the self same things are condemned as heretical in Luthers books, that in Augustine and Bernards works are read and regarded as pious and orthodox sentences. So these passages were gathered as heresies out of Tindals works, He is not a sinner in the sight of God that would be no sinner. He that would be delivered, hath his heart loose already. It is impossible that the word of the Cross should be without affliction and persecution. The Gospel is written for all persons and estates, Prince, Duke, Pope, Emperor. We cannot be without motions of evil desires, but we must mortifie them in resisting them. God made us his children and heirs, while we were his enemies, and before we knew him. Men should see that their children come to Church to hear the Sermon, &c. Were not these perilous heresies? Saith not the Scripture the same in sundry places? Is not this to have the glorious faith of our Lord Jesus Christ in respect of persons, James 2.1. So the greatest errours that Henry Voes and John Esch, Martyrs, were accused of, were, that men ought to trust only in God; for so much as men are lyars, and deceitful in all their words and deeds; and therefore there ought no trust or affiance to be put in them. Verse 28. Then the Kingdom of God is come unto you.] A certain sign of the setting up whereof among you, is this casting out of Devils by the spirit of God; or as Luke hath it, by the finger of God: for the Holy Ghost is the essential power of the Father and the Son.

Verse 29. A strong mans house, &c.] The Devil is strong, but over-powered by Christ. He ἐῤῥύσατο. Col. 1, 13.

He hath forcibly delivered us from the power of darkness, snatcht us out of the Devils danger; so that, though he shake his chain at us, he cannot fasten his fangs in us. Stronger is he that is in the Saints, then he that is in the world: Through Christ we shall overcome him, Rom. 8. 37.

Verse 30. He that is not with me, is against me.] But the Devil is not with me, saith Christ; for all I do or suffer, is to destroy his works. Let this sentence also be noted against Neuters and Nicodemites, who stand halting betwixt two, and will be sure to hold themselves on the warm side of the hedge howsoever. Such were of old the Samaritans, Nazarites, Ebionites, and those Corinthians that would neither be of Paul, nor Apollos, nor Cephas, but of Christ; that is, as some Neuters say now-adays, they are neither Cavaliers nor Round-heads, but good Protestants; others are neither Papists nor Protestants, but Christians, that is just nothing, Atheists. Christ hates neutrality, and counts it enmity: he loathes lukewarmness, accepts not of any excuse in that case, Judge 5. 16, 17. Dan and Ephraim are passed by in the reckoning up of the Tribes, Rev. 7. as if they were Souldiers put out of pay, and cut out of the rolls. So are all testable indifferents, out of Gods book of remembrance, Mal. 3. 17.

Verse 31. All manner of sin and blasphemy, &c.] All without exception, yea though it be blasphemy, Isa. 44. 22. God blots out the thick cloud as well as the cloud, enormities as well as infirmities. Man cannot commit more then he can and will remit to the penitent. The Sun by his force can scatter the greatest mist, as well as the least vapour; and the Sea by its vastness, drown mountains as well as mole-hills. The grace of our Lord abounds to flowing over, saith S. Paul. The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin, saith S. John. Ego admisi, unde tu damnare potes me, sed non amisisti unde tu salvare potes me, saith S. Augustine. And yet Novatus the proud Heretick, denyed possibility of pardon to them that had any whit fallen off in times of persecution, though they rose again by repentance. But Gods thoughts of mercy are not as mans, Isa. 55. 8. he can and will pardon such sins, as no God or man can do besides, Micah 7. 18. Who is a God like unto thee? For what? That pardoneth all sorts of sin, &c. This none can believe without supernatural grace: we are ready to measure God by our model.

But the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, &c.] This is nothing else, saith John Diazius, to that Butcher his brother, quam agnitam veritatem flagitiose insectari, a malicious persecuting of the known truth. A sin it is of malice after strong conviction, expresst in words by a tongue set on fire by hell, and in actions coming from a venemous spirit, and tending to opposition, and bitter persecution, if their malice be not greater then their power. This was commited by Saul, Julian, Latomus of Lovain, Rockwood, a chief persecutor at Callice in Henry the 8. days, who, to his last breath, staring and raging, cryed he was utterly damned, for that he had fought maliciously the deaths of a number of the honestest men in the town, &c. Steven Gardiner said as much also in effect of himself, when he lay on his death bed, and so both stinkingly and unrepentantly dyed, saith M. Fox.

And when, saith he, they had at my command, called upon the gods, offered incense to the Emperors Image, and cursed Christ (which those that are Christians indeed, will never be drawn to do) I thought good to dismiss them.

But whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost.] Not his person or essence (for many Sabellian, Eunomian, Macedonian Hereticks did so of old, and repenting found mercy) but his grace and special operation, by the which God comes nearer to man, then he is in nature or person. This sin is against the immediate effects, work and office of the Holy Ghost, against that shining light kindled by Gods spirit in mans soul, and that sweetness and comfort felt in Christ, that taste of the good word of God, and of the powers of the world to come, Heb. 6. 4, 5, 6.

It shall not be forgiven him, &c.] And why? Not because it is greater then Gods mercy, or Christs merits: but first by a just judgement of God upon such sinners for their hateful unthankfulness in despising his spirit; whence follows an impossibility of repentance, *Heb.*6.6. and so of remission, Luke 13.3. Secondly such a desperate fury invadeth these men, that they maliciously resist and repudiate the price of repentance, Acts 5.31. and the matter of remission, 1 John 1.7. viz. the precious blood of Jesus Christ, whereby if they might have mercy, yet they would not: but continue raving and raging against both physick and Physician, to their unavoidable ruth and ruine. How bold therefore is Bellarmine, who interpreteth this text of the difficulty and rarity only of remission, and not of an utter impossibility.?

Verse 33. Either make the tree good, &c.] q. d. Your blasphemy is therefore irremissible, because it is the fruit of so base a root of bitterness, as the desperate malice of your hearts, wilfully crossing your consciences: a wretched despising and despiting of God, and the work of his spirit out of revenge, Heb. 10.29. Draw not therefore a fair glove over so foul a hand, but shew your selves in your own colours.

Verse 24. How can ye being evil, &c.] The stream riseth not above the fountain; the bell is known of what mettal by the clapper; what is in the well, will be in the bucket; what in the ware-house, will be in the shop: so what is in the heart, will be in the mouth. Qualia sunt principia, talia & principiata.

Æra puto nosci tinnitu: pectora verbis:
Sic est; namq; id sunt utraque, quale sonant. Beza in poem.

Verse 35. Out of the good treasure, &c.] Out of his habit of heavenly mindedness, out of that law of grace in his heart, his mouth speaketh wisdom, and his tongue talks of judgement; Psal.37.30,31. Works not done from a principle of life within, are dead works, saith the Author to the Hebrews, be they for the matter never so good and praise worthy. This moved Luther to say, that good works make not men good; but good we must be first, ere good can be done by us. This moved Austin to say, that Omnis vita infidelium peccatum est, the whole life of an unbeliever is sin, though Spira the Popish Postiller censure that saying for a cruel sentence. Bona opera non faciunt bonos: sed prius oportet bonos esse quam faciamus bona. Luth. Crudelis est illa sententia.

An evil man out of the evil treasure, &c.] Carnal hearts are stews of unclean thoughts, shambles of cruel and bloody thoughts, exchanges and shops of vain thoughts, a very forge and mint of false, politick, undermining thoughts, yea oft a little hell of confused and black imaginations, as one well describeth them.

Verse 36. That every idle word, &c.] Idle and waste words are to be accounted for; what then evil and wicked? Therefore let thine own words grieve thee, as David somewhere hath it, thy frivolous and fruitless speeches: for among a thousand talents of common communication (saith Cassiodore) a man can scarce find an hundred pence of spiritual speeches, imo nec decem quidem obolos, nay not ten half-pence truly. It may be observed saith another, that when men get into idle company (which perhaps they like not) the very complement of discoursing, extracteth idle, if not evil speaking, to fill up the time. Plato and Xenophon, thought it fit and profitable, that mens speeches at meals and such like meetings should be written. And if Christians should so do, what kind of books would they be? Cassiod. in cap. 1. Matth.

Verse 37. For by thy words thou shalt be justified] Our Saviour insists upon this subject, because by words they had sinned against the Holy Ghost. A mans most and worst sins be his words. S. Paul making the anatomy of a natural man, stands more on the organ of speech, then all the other members, *Rom.*3. S. James saith, that the tongue is not a City or Countrey, but a world of iniquity, James 3.6. It can run all the world over, and bite at every body, when the Devil fires it especially. Peraldus reckons up four and twenty several sins of the tongue: he might have made them more. God hath set a double hedge afore it, of teeth and lips, to keep it up; he hath also placed it between the head and the heart, that it might take counsel of both. Children he wil not suffer to speak, till they have understanding and wit: and those that are deaf, are also dumb, because they cannot hear instruction, nor learn wisdom, that they may speak advisedly. Tom. 1. pag. 264.

Verse 38. Then certain of the Scribes and Pharisees] Had not these, as one said of Nero, Os ferreum, cor plumbeum, an iron face, a leaden heart, that could call for a sign after so many signs? But it is a sign from heaven they would have (as Moses called for Manna from thence Samuel for rain, Elias for fire, &c.) and much the near, they would have been, should our Saviour have gratified them. But he never meant it.

They were now so clearly convinced of their blasphemy, that they had nothing to say for themselves; but fawningly to call him Master, whom before they had called Beelzebub; and to pretend themselves to be willing to learn, if they might see a sign. They could not see wood for trees, as they say. And who so blind as he that will not see. Sic fit, ubi homines majorem vitæ partem in tenebris agunt, ut novissimè solem quasi supervacuum fastidiant, saith Seneca. Men that have lived long in the dark, may think the Sun superfluous.

Senec Epist.

Verse 39. An evil and adulterous generation, &c.] Spuria soboles, a bastardly brood. So he calleth them, because utterly degenerate from their fore-fathers faith and holiness.

Seeketh after a sign] Seeketh with utmost earnestness, as if it were such a business as must be done, or they were undone. It is the guise of hypocrites, to be hot in a cold matter, to shew great zeal in nifles, neglecting the main mean while.

But the sign of the Prophet Jonas.] Nor that neither, but for a further mischief to them; as their fathers had quails to choak them, a King to vex them, &c. and as Ahaz had a sign, whether he would or no, to render him the more inexcusable. Deus sæpe dat iratus, quod negat propitius. God gives his enemies some giftless gifts, as Saul gave Michol to David, to be a snare to him; or as Christ gave Judas the bag, to discover the rottenness of his heart.

ἄδωρα δῶρα. Soph.

Verse 40. For as Jonas was three days, &c.] In the history of Jonas, Christ found the mystery of his death, burial and resurrection; teaching us thereby to search the Scriptures, to search them to the bottom; as those that dig for gold, content not themselves with the first or second oar that offers it self, but search on till they have all. This we should the rather do, because we need neither climb up to heaven with these Pharisees, nor descend into the deep with Jonas, sith the word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thine heart, &c. Rom. 10. 7, 8.

So shall the Son of man be three days, &c.] Taking a part for the whole. So Esther fasted three days and three nights, Chap. 4. 16. and yet on the third day she went to the King, Chap. 5. 1. So then, the fast lasted not three whole days and nights, but two nights, one full day, and two pieces of days.

Verse 41. They repented at the preaching of Jonas] At one single Sermon of a meer stranger, who sang so doleful a ditty to them, as the destruction of their Town; and yet they repented. What will become of us? Væ torpori nostro. If M. Bradford so complained of his own unprofitableness under means, in those dim days, what cause have we now much more? Here in London, saith he, be such godly, goodly, and learned Sermons, which these uncircumcised ears of mine do hear, at the least thrice a week, which were able to burst any mans heart to relent, to repent, to believe, to love and fear that Omnipotent gracious Lord. But mine adamantine, obstinate, most unkind, unthankful heart, hearing my Lord so sweetly calling and crying unto me, now by his Law, now by his Gospel, now by all his creatures, to come, to come even to himself: I hide me with Adam, I play not only Samuel running to Eli, but I play Jonas running to the sea, and there I sleep upon the hatches, until he please to raise up a tempest, to turn and look upon me as he did upon Peter, &c.

Acts and Mon. fol. 250.

Verse 42. The Queen of the South, &c.] The Ethiopian Chronicles call her Macheda, and further tell us, that she had a son by Solomon, whom she named David. Sure it is that she came from a far Country to hear Solomon, and was so taken with his wisdom, that she could have been content to have changed her Throne for his footstool. Now our Saviour took it ill (and well he might) that men came not as far, and set not as high a price upon him and his doctrine, as she did upon Solomon and his wisdom, how much more that these hard-hearted Jews esteemed it not, though brought home to their doors?

Verse 43. When the unclean spirit] Unclean the Devil is called, 1. Affectione (saith Jacobus de Voragine) because he loveth uncleanness. 2. Persuasione, because he perswades men to it. 3. Habitatione, because he inhabits unclean hearts; he finds them foul, he makes them worse. Wheresoever the great Turk sets his foot once, no grass grows, they say, ever after. Sure it is, no grace grows where the Devil dwels. Pura Deus mens est, saith one: And Religion loves to lie clean, saith another. The holy Spirit will be content to dwell in a poor, but it must be a pure house. The Devil, on the contrary, delights in spiritual sluttishness: Harpy-like, he defileth all he toucheth; and Camel-like, drinks not of that water that he hath not first fouled with his feet.

Is gone out of a man] In regard of inward illumination, and outward reformation; such as was found in B. Bonner, that breathing devil, who at first seemed to be a good man, a favourer of Luthers Doctrines, a hater of Popery, and was therefore advanced by the Lord Cromwel; to whom he thus wrote in a certain Letter: Steven Gardiner for malice and disdain may be compared to the Devil in hell, not giving place to him in pride at all. —— I mislike in him, that there is so great familiarity and acquaintance, yea and such mutual confidence between him and M. as naughty a fellow, and as very a Papist as any that I know, where he dare express it. Who can deny but that the Devil was gone out of this man, for a time at least? 2 Pet. 2. 20. Act. and Mon. fol. 993. Ibid. 997.

He walketh thorow dry places.] Here the Proverb holds true, Anima ficca sapientissima, Sensual hearts are the fennish grounds that breed filthy venemous creatures, Job 40. 21. Behemoth lieth in the fenns. This, Gulielmus Parisiensis applyeth to the Devil in sensual hearts. Contrariwise, the spirits of Gods Saints, which burn with faith, hope and charity, and have all evil humours dryed up in them by that spirit of judgement and of burning, these the Devil likes not. The Tempter findeth nothing in them, though he seek it diligently. He striketh fire, but this tinder takes not. Cupid complained he could never fasten upon the Muses, because he could never find them idle. So here. Or thus, He walketh thorow dry places; i.e. he is discontented and restless (see the like Jer. 17. 5, 6.) for otherwise dry and wet is all one with him. In locis dormit humentibus, hoc est, in omnibus deliciis madentibus.

Verse 44. He findeth it empty] That is, idle and secure, swept of grace, garnished with vice, the Devils fairest furniture. Otia dant vitia.

Verse 45. And taketh seven other spirits] As the Jaylor lays more load of irons on him that had escaped his hands, and is now recovered.

And they enter in and dwell there] So they never do in a heart once truly sanctified. Lust was but a stranger to David (no home-dweller) as Peter Martyr observes out of that passage in Nathans parable, 2 Sam. 12. 4. And there came a traveller to the rich man, &c. Faith leaves never a sluts-corner, Acts 15. 9.

And the last state of that man is worse] An Apostate cannot chuse unto himself a worse condition. It is with such, as in that case, Lev. 13. 18, 19, 20. If a man had a bile healed, and it afterwards brake out, it proved the plague of leprosie. These are called forsakers of the Covenant, Dan. 11. 30. and wicked doers against the Covenant, ver. 32. Renegate Christians prove the most desperate Devoto's to the Devil. We see by experience, that none are worse then those that have been good and are naught; or those that might be good, and will be naught. Such as were these Jews in the Text, to whom therefore our Saviour applies the parable in these words.

Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation] Their sins were not common sins (but as those of Korah and his complices) therefore they dyed not common deaths. As they pleased not God, but were contrary to all men, so wrath came upon them to the uttermost, 1 Thess. 2. 16. as Josephus witnesseth. And M. Fox relates of Bonner that wicked Apostate, that as he wretchedly dyed in his blind Popery (after he had been long time prisoner in the raign of Q. Elizabeth) so, as stinkingly and blindly at midnight was he brought out, and buried in the outside of all the City, among thieves and murtherers. A place, saith he, right convenient, with confusion and derision both of men and children, who trampling upon his grave, well declared how he was hated both of God and man. Acts and Mon. fol. 1915.

Verse 46. Desiring to speak with him] Either out of curiosity or ambition, as Ambrose thinks; certain it is, at a most unseasonable time. Now as fish and flesh, so every thing else is naught out of season.

Verse 47. Behold thy mother, and thy brethren] This was a weakness in his mother, though otherwise full of grace, yet not without original sin, as the Sorbonists contend, but had need of a Saviour, as well as others, Luke 1. 47. Scipio permits not a wise man so to do amiss once in his whole life, as to say, non putaram. How much better Crates the Philosopher, who said that in every Pomgranate there is at least one rotten kernel to be found; intimating thereby, that the best have their blemishes, their faults and follies. Nemo non. Omnibus malis Punicis inest granum putre.

Verse 48. Who is my mother, and who, &c.] This meekest Lamb was stirred with a holy indignation at so absurd an interruption, and sharps him up that delivers the message. Great is the honour that is due to a mother. Solomon set Bathsheba at his right right hand, and promised her any thing with reason. Nescitne Antipater unicam matris lacrimulam omnes istius criminationes posse delere? Knows not Antipater, that one tear of my mothers, can easily blot out all his accusations against her, said Alexander the Great? Brethren also, or neer-allyes (as these were to our Saviour) are dearly to be respected, and greatly gratified, as were Josephs brethren by him in his greatness. But when these relations, or their requests, come in competition with Gods work or glory, they must be neglected, nay rejected and abominated. For is there any friend to God? or any foe like him? Men be they pleased or displeased, he must be obeyed, and his business dispatched, be the contrary occasions never so urgent in shew, the pretences never so specious and plausible.

Verse 49. Behold my mother and my brethren] Sanctior est copula cordis quam corporis. Spiritual kindred is better then carnal: There is a friend that sticketh closer then a brother, Prov. 18.24. Christ is endeared to his in all manner of neerest relations and engagements. Oh then the dignity and safety of a Saint! and O the danger and disaster of such as either by hand or tongue malign or molest them! What? will they wrong Christs mother to his face? Will they force the Queen also in the house, &c. If Jacobs sons were so avenged for the indignity done to their sister Dinah, if Absolom for Tamar, what will Christ do, or rather what will he not do for his deerest relations? How will this greater then Solomon arise off his throne, at the last day, to meet his mother half-way, and to do her all the honor that may be in that great Amphitheatre? How sweetly will he accost his brethren that have been long absent from him in the flesh, though present ever in spirit, with Δεῦτε. Come ye blessed, &c. q.d. where have you been all this while? They also shall be bold to say to him, as Ruth did to Boaz, Spread thy skirt over us, for thou art our near kinsman, or, one that hath good right to redeem.

1 Kings 2.19.

Ruth 3.9.

Verse 50. For whosoever shall do the will] Lo here's the right way of becoming a kin to Christ; and can we better prefer our selves? It was an honour to Mark, that he was Barnabas his sisters son. David durst not in modesty think of being son in law to a King. Elymas the Sorcerer, affected to be held allyed to Christ, and therefore stiled himself Barjesus: as Darius in his proud Embassy to Alexander, called himself King of Kings, and Cousin of the Gods. But the right way to be ennobled indeed, and inrighted to Christ and his Kingdom is, to believe in his name, and obey his will. This, this is to become Christs brother, and sister, and mother. Sister is named, to shew that no sex is excluded. And mother last mentioned, that the prerogative of the flesh may be set aside and disacknowledged.

CHAP. XIII.

Verse 1. The same day]

WHerein Christ had had a sharp bout and bickering with the Scribes and Pharisees in the forenoon, he sat and taught the people (as it may seem) in the afternoon. A president of preaching twice a day. Chrysostomes practise was to preach in the afternoon, and by candle-light; as appears by his Note on 1 Thess. 5. 17. where he fetcheth a similitude from the lamp he was preaching by. Luther likewise preached twice aday; which because one Nicolas White commended him in, he was accused of heresie in the Raign of Henry 8. And this commendable course began to be disgraced and cryed down in our days as Puritanical and Superfluous. A learned Bishop was highly extolled in print, for saying that when he was a Lecturer in London, he preached in the morning, but prased only in the afternoon. A fair commendation for him.

Quench not the spirit σβέννυσι δὲ ὑπόκρισις ἀναισθησίας. Chrys.

He sate by the sea-side] As waiting an opportunity of doing good to mens souls; which was no sooner offered, but he readily laid hold on. So S. Paul took a text of one of the Altars in Athens, and discourseth on it to the superstitious people. honey and wax) accounting employment a preferment, as our Saviour did, Iohn 17. 4.

Verſe 2. He went into a ſhip and ſat] Thinking, perhaps, there to repoſe himſelf, after his hard conflict with the Phariſees. But the ſight of a new audience, incites him to a new pains of preaching to them. And as he held no time unſeaſonable, ſo no place unfit for ſuch a purpoſe. We find him eftſoons teaching, not in the Temple only and ſynagogues on the Sabbath day (as he did conſtantly) but in the mountains, in Cities, in private houſes, by the Sea-ſide, by the way ſide, by the wells ſide, any where, every where, no place came amiſs to him, no pulpit diſpleaſed him.

Verſe 3. And he ſpake many things to them in parables] A Parable, ſaith Suidas, is διήγημα ἐξ ὁμοίων πραγμάτων, a ſetting forth of the matter by way of ſimilitude from ſomething elſe that differs in kind, and yet in ſome ſort reſembleth and illuſtrateth it. Chriſt, the Prince of preachers, varieth his kinde of teaching, according to the nature and neceſſity of his audience, ſpeaking as they could hear, as they could bear, ſaith St. Mark. Miniſters, in like ſort, muſt turn themſelves, as it were into all ſhapes and faſhions both of ſpirit and ſpeech, to win people to God.

Behold a ſower went forth] Our Saviour ſtirs them up to attention by a Behold. Which though it might ſeem not ſo needfull to be ſaid to ſuch as came far, and now looked thorow him, as it were, for a Sermon: yet he, well knowing how dull men are to conceive heavenly myſteries, how weak to remember, hard to believe, and ſlow to practiſe, calls for their utmoſt attention to his Divine Doctrine, and gives them a juſt reaſon thereof in his enſuing diſcourſe. It fares with the beſt, whiles they hear, as with little ones, when they are ſaying their leſſon; if but a bird flie by, they muſt needs look after it: beſides the Devils malice ſtriving to diſtract, ſtupifie, or ſteal away the good ſeed, that it may come to nothing.

Verſe 4. And when he ſowed, ſome ſeed, &c.] The word is a ſeed of immortallity. For, 1. As ſeeds are ſmall things, yet produce great ſubſtances, as an Acron an Oak, &c. ſo by the fooliſhneſs of preaching ſouls are ſaved, like as by the blowing of rams-horns the walls of Jericho were ſubverted. 2. As the ſeed muſt be harrowed into the earth, ſo muſt the word be hid in the heart, ere it fructifie. 3. As the ſeedſman cannot make an harveſt without the influence of heaven: ſo, let us to the wearing of our tongues to the ſtump (as that Martyr expreſſed it) preach and pray never ſo much, men will on in their ſins, unleſs God give the bleſsing; Paul may plant, &c. 4. As good ſeed if not caſt into good ground yields no harveſt: ſo the word preached, if not received into good and honeſt hearts, proves in-effectual. The Phariſees were not a button the better for all thoſe heart piercing Sermons of our Saviour, nay, much the worſe. 5. As the harveſt is potentially in the ſeed: ſo is eternal life in the word preached, Rom. 1. 16. As the rain from heaven hath a fatneſs with it, and a ſpecial influence more then other ſtanding waters, ſo there is not the like life in other Ordinances, as in Preaching. None to that, as David ſaid of Goliahs ſword.

Mr. Bardſord Serm. of Rep. Meam eſt docere, veſtrum auſcultare, Dei perficere. Cyrill.

Verſe 5, 6, 7, 8. Some fell upon ſtony places, &c.] Our Saviour, his own beſt interpreter, explains all this to his Diſciples, verſe 18, 19. The intent of theſe ſeveral Parables ſeems to have been, to confirm that which he had ſaid in the former Chapter, verſe 50. that they that do the will of his heavenly Father, ſhall be owned and crowned by him, as his deareſt relations and alliances. As alſo to teach the people not to reſt in hearing, ſith three parts of four hear and periſh. Which loſs is yet ſweetly repaired by the fruitfulneſs of the good hearers, ſome whereof bring forth an hundred fold, ſome ſixty, ſome thirty, the fertilty of one grain making amends for the barrenneſs of many; ſo that the ſower repents not of his pains: Its well worth while, if but one ſoul be gained to God by a whole lifes-labour.

Verſe 9. Who hath ears to hear, &c.] q.d. Some have ears to hear, ſome not. So he divideth his hearers into Auritos & ſurdos. All men have not faith, ſaith St. Paul. Mens ears muſt be boared as Davids, their hearts opened, as Lydias, ere the word can enter. Pray we that Chriſt would ſay Epphata unto us, and that when he opens our ears, and by them our hearts, that he would make the bore big enough: ſith with what meaſure we meat, it ſhall be meaſured to us, and unto us that hear, ſhall more be given, Mat. 4. 24.? The greater diligence we uſe in hearing, the more apparent ſhall be our proficing.

Verse 10. And his Disciples came and said unto him] They came to him for satisfaction Note this against those captious and capricious hearers, that maliciously relate to others, that which to them seems not so well or wisely said by the Preacher, and come not to the Preacher himself, who can best unfold his own mind (all cannot be said in an hour) and make his own Apologie. Some sit behind the Pillar, as Eli dealt by Hannah, to watch and catch what they may carp and cavil at. They content themselves to have exercised their criticks upon the Preacher, and thats all they make of a Sermon, though never so savoury and seasonable. These are Herodian hearers.

Verse 11. Because it is given to you] Plutarch thinks that life is given to men meerly for the getting of knowledge. And the Greeks call man Φῶτα for the inbred desire of light and knowledge that is naturally in all. But desire we never so much, none can attain to sound and saving knowledge, but those only to whom it is given from above, into whose hearts Christ lets in a ray of heavenly light. Hence Prov. 30.3,4. to know heavenly things, is to ascend into heaven. And Luke 12.48. to know the Masters will, is the great talent of all other: there is a [Much] set upon it.

But to them it is not given] By a secret, but most just, judgement of God, who hath mercy on whom he will, and whom he will he hardneth. The reason of many things now hid from us, we shall see at the last day. Have patience, and be content in the mean while, with a learned ignorance.

Verse 12. For whosoever hath, to him shall be given] &c. If he have it for practise, not else, Zach. 11.17. Men, to the hearing of the word, must bring with them the loan and advantage of former Doctrine communicated to them, if they mean to do any good of it. And then, as Manoah believed (before the Angel vanished in the sacrifice) and sought no such sign to confirm him, yet had it: so God will heap favours upon them, and every former shall be a pledge of a future. God gives grace for grace, that is, say some, where he finds one grace he gives another.

From him shall be taken away even that he hath] That he seems to have, saith St. Luke, for indeed all he hath is but a seeming, a semblance, he walketh in a vain shew, he hath only the varnish of vertue, which God shall wash off with rivers of brimstone. Albeit hypocrites are commmonly detected even in this life: how else should their names rot, as every wicked mans must.

Verse 13. Therefore speak I to them in Parables] Because their wilful blindness and stubborness deserves I should do it. They are sinners against their own souls, let them rue it therefore.

And hearing they hear not] Audientes corporis sensu, non audiunt cordis assensu, saith Augustine.

Verse 14. In them is fulfilled] Ἀναπληροῦται is again fulfilled q. d. It is even with these now, as it was with those then. The same fable is acted, the scene only changed. Mens hearts are as hard as ever they were, the grace of the Gospel hath not mended them a whit, nor ever will do, till God strike the stroke.

And shall not understand] Deus iis in lingua sua Barbarus, qui in Christo, suis Atticus, their wit serves them not in spirituals.

ἐὰν μὴ, ἀπαρρεπτικῶς. Beza.

Seeing ye shall see, and not perceive] As Hagar saw not the fountain that was afore her, till her eyes were opened.

Verse 15. For this peoples heart, &c.] A fat heart is a fearfull plague. Their heart is fat as grease, but I delight in thy law, Psal. 119. 70. None can delight in Gods law that are fat hearted. Feeding cattel we know, are most brutish and blockish. And Physiognomers observe, that a full and fat heart, betokens a dull and doltish disposition. Eglons fat paunch would not part with the ponyard: and Pliny tells of bears so fat that they felt not the sharpest prickles.

Νωθροὶ ταῖς ἀκοαῖς. Heb 5.11. Tusc. quest.

Their ears are dull of hearing] So were the believing Hebrews, for the which they are much taxed and tutored by the Apostle. Surdaster erat M. Crassus: sed illud pejus, quòd malè audiebat, saith Tully. These here hear very ill, for their no better hearing.

The blind eye is opened, the deaf ear unstopped, the dull heart affected, &c. God first puts his Laws into mens minds, that they may know them, and then writes the same in their hearts, that they may have the comfort, feeling and fruition of them: And then it is, I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people, Heb. 8. 10.

Verse 16. But blessed are your eyes, &c.] Demarathus of Corinth was wont to say that those Grecians lost a great part of the comfort of their lives, that had not seen great Alexander sitting on Darius his throne. St. Austin wished but to have seen three sights, Romam in flore, Paulum in ore, Christum in corpore, Rome in the flourish, Paul in the Pulpit, Christ in the flesh. Plutarch.

And your ears, for they hear] The Turtles voice, the joyfull sound, the lively Oracles, the precious promises of the word, therefore called the word, by a specialty, because our ears should listen after no other word but that. Origen chides his hearers for nothing so much, as for this, that they came so seldom to hear Gods word: and that when they came, they heard it so carelessly, rectè judicans, saith Erasmus, hinc esse præcipuum pietatis profectum aut defectum, as one that well knew that mens growth in grace, is according to their heed in hearing. Erasm. præfat. ad Orig. opera.

Verse 17. Desired to see those things that ye see, &c.] They saw them, and saluted them only afar off, and in the dark glass of the ceremonies. But we all with open face, &c. 2 Cor 3.18. The Sea about the Altar was brazen, and what eyes could pierce thorow it? Now our Sea about the Throne is glassie, like to Crystal, clearly conveying the light and sight of God to our eyes. All Gods Ordinances are now so clear, that you may see Christs face in them. Yea, as the glass set full against the Sun, receives not only the beams, as other dark bodies do, but the image of the Sun: so the understanding with open face beholding Christ, is transformed into the image and similitude of Christ. 1 King 7.23. Revel. 4.6.

Verse 18. Hear ye therefore the Parable, &c.] The Disciples had asked him concerning the multitude, verse 10. Why speakest thou to them in Parables? They pretended that the multitude understood him not, and therefore he should do well to shew them the meaning. They were ashamed, belike, to bewray their own ignorance: but our Saviour calls to them also to hear the Parable explained. We are all willing to make the best of our own case, to hide our crooked legs with long garments, &c. Nature need not be taught to tell her own tale.

Verse 19. The word of the Kingdom] So called, because it points to, and paints out the way to the Kingdom: and is therefore also called, The word of life, the power of God to Salvation: Heaven is potentially in it, as the harvest is in the seed, as above I noted.

And understandeth it not] Considereth it not, as the Syriack here hath it, using the same word that David doth, Psal. 41. 1. Blessed is the man that wisely considereth the poor and needy. Consideration sets on the Word when it hath been heard (which else lies loose, and is driven away as chaff before the wind) maketh it to become an ingraffed Word, as the Siens graffed into the stock, or as a tree rooted by the rivers side, that removes not. λόγῳ ἔμφυτον. Iam. 1. 21.

Then cometh the wicked one] The troubler of Israel, the master of misrule; he's one at Church, whosoever is the other. A Doeg, a Devil may set his foot as far within the Sanctuary, as a David. The sons of God cannot present themselves before the Lord, but Satan comes also amongst them, to do ill offices. ὁ πονηρός. Iob 1. 6.

And catcheth away that which was sown in his heart] That is, upon his heart: for into his heart the seed never came, because the Devil had made a path way over it. People are now so Sermon-trodden many of them, that their hearts like foot-paths grow hard by the Word, which takes no more impression, then rain doth upon a rock: they have brawny brests, horny heart-strings, dead and dedolent dispositions. Hence they become a prey to the Devil, as Abrahams sacrifice would have been to the fowls of the air, had he not huffed them away. ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ, pro ἐπὶ τῇ καρδίᾳ. Gen. 15. 11.

Verse 20 And anon with joy receiveth it] Anon, or immediately. Temporaries are too sudden: and, or ere they be soundly humbled, will be catching at the comforts, as children do at sweet-meat, stuffing themselves pillows with the promises, that they may sin more securely: Præsumendo sperant, & sperando pereunt, as one saith. These

These are your leap-Christians, so hot at first that they can never hold out. Swift at hand gives in ere night, when soft and fair goes far.

With joy receiveth it] Or with the grief, if the nature of the Doctrine require it. For by one affection we are to understand the rest also. There's no grace but hath a counterfeit; Faciunt & vespæ favos, & simiæ imitantur homines. The Sorcerers seemed to do as much as Moses. Many Apostates have had many meltings, and much sudden strong joy, so as they have professed the joy they have found at the hearing of the Word, hath been so great, that if it had continued but a while, they could not have lived, but their spirits would have expired. Many examples there are of such. Howbeit in these flashings, the truths of God (saith a Divine) pass by them, as water thorow a Conduit, and leave a dew; but soak not, as water into the earth.

M. Burroughs.

Verse 21. Yet hath he not root in himself] These flashy affections have not principles to maintain them, and therefore come to nothing. They are enlightned only as by a flash of lightning, and not by the Sun-beam; they do no more then taste of the good Word of God, as Cooks do of their sawces, they let nothing down, they digest it not. A good man is satisfied from himself, saith Solomon, hath a spring within his own breast. Hic sat lucis, said Oecolampadius, clapping his hand upon his heart: This the temporary cannot say, He is moved by some external Principle, as are Clocks, Winde-mils, and the like: The root of the matter is not in him. He wants depth of earth. Οὐκ ἐβάθυνε, saith another Evangelist the plow hath not gone deep enough: and therefore, though the earth be good, and the seed good, yet being uncovered, unburied, it miscarries. Exoriuntur, sed exuruntur, His roots are dried up beneath, and above is his bud cut off, Job 18. 16.

Heb. 6. 4, 5. Prov. 13. 14. Iob 19. 28.

For when tribulation or persecution ariseth] As it will, for Ecclesia heres crucis, saith one. And opposition is, Evangelii genius, saith another. It is but a delicacy to go about to divide Christ and his Cross.

Calvin.

By and by he is offended,] Vadat Christus cum suo Evangelio, saith he. Let Christ keep his heaven to himself, if it can be had upon no other terms: he is resolved to suffer nothing. When it comes to that once, he kicks up profession, and may possibly prove a spitefull adversary of the same ministry, which he once admired, as Herod; and a proud contemner of the same remorse, with which himself was sometime smitten, as Saul. Chrystal seems a precious stone, till it come to the hammering.

Verse 22. He that received the seed among thorns] So the love of money is called, because it chokes the word, pricks the conscience, harbours vermine lusts. Magna cognatio, ut rei sic nominis, divitiis & vitiis. Let rich men look to it, saith Gregory, that they handle their thorns without pricking their fingers; that whiles they load themselves with earth, they lose not heaven, as Shimei seeking his servants, lost himself. Set not thy heart upon the Asses (said Samuel to Saul) sith to thee is the desire of all Israel. Set not your hearts, say I, on this worlds trash, sith better things abide you. Martha was troubled about many things, but neglected that one thing necessary, to sit, as her sister did, at Christs feet, and hear his word. This Christ checks her for.

Dum peritura paras per malè parta perdis. Viderint divites quomodò spinas sine punctione contrectent.

And the deceitfulness of riches] The world is a subtil, sly enemy, that doth easily insinuate and dangerously deceive. We may safely say of it, as he sometimes did of an Historian, Both its words and shews are full of fraud. As the Panther hides his deformed head, till the sweet sent have drawn other beasts into his danger: so deals the world, alluring men by the deceitfulness of riches, and masking the monstrous and deformed head, the end thereof, under the gilded shew of good husbandry, or disguised shape of sin. In a word, these outward things, howsoever as hosts they welcome us into our Inn with smiling countenance, yet, unless we look better to them, they will cut our throats in our beds.

Δολερὰ μὲν τὰ ῥήματα, δολερὰ δὲ τὰ φήματα. Plutar. de Herodoto.

And he becometh unfruitfull] Because the thorns over-top the corn; whereas the good ground, though it hath many thorns, yet the corn ascends above them, grace is superior to corruption, the fruit springs up and encreaseth, as St. Mark hath it. These thorny-ground-hearers, though they stood out persecution, and shranck not in the wetting, as the stony-ground did, yet, because the plow had not gone so low as to break up the roots, whereby their hearts were fastened to earthly contents, they proved also unfruitfull. See how far a man may go, and yet be never the near after all. The stony and thorny ground were nearer to the nature of the good ground, then that of the high-way, and yet fell short of heaven.

Verse 23. But he that received seed, &c.] Which is but a fourth part, if so much, of those that have the word purely and powerfully preached unto them. As at Ephesus, so in our Church-assemblies, the more part know not wherefore they are come together. They will say, to serve God, and hear his Word, but who this God is, or how his Word is to be heard, they neither know nor care. If the belly may be filled, the back fitted, &c. They have as much as they look after. And of such dust-heaps as these, all corners are full: Our Church is as much pestred, and even dark with these Epicures and Atheists, who yet will not miss a Sermon, as Egypt was with the Grashoppers. These are those last and loosest times, wherein, by reason of the over-flow of iniquity, The love of many is waxen cold, but he that endureth to the end shall be saved. Where note, that for many that lose their love to Gods word, it is but a He in the singular number that holds out therein to the end.

Some an hundred fold] As Isaacs seed did, that he sowed in the land of Canaan. This is not every mans happiness: yet we must propound to our selves the highest pitch. And let as many as are perfect be thus minded. That man for heaven, and heaven for him, that sets up for his mark, The resurrection of the dead, Phil. 3. 11. that is, that perfection of holiness that accompanieth the estate of the resurrection.

Some sixty, some thirty] It befalls not every man to excell, but it behoves every man to exact of himself such a growth in grace, that his profiting may apppear to all, and that he is neither barren, nor unfruitfull in the knowledge of Jesus Christ. The vine is the weakest of plants, yet bears abundantly. Thyatira had but a little strength, yet a great door opened. The Colossians were but quickned, and not born, yet preciously esteemed of God. He accepteth according to that a man hath, be it more or less, he blesseth our buds. Courage therefore, though not so fruitfull as thou wouldst be. Thine earnest pantings, inquietations and desires of better cannot but commend thee much to God. Prima sequentem honestum est in secundis tertiisq; consistere, saith one. And Summum culmen affectantes, satis honestè vel in secundo fastigio conspiciemur, saith another. Aspire to the highest pitch, but be not discouraged, though ye fall somewhat short of it. Every man cannot excel.

As God prepared Paradise for Adam, so he hath heaven for his. Howbeit he reserves not all for hereafter; but gives a grape of Canaan in this wilderness, where by righteousness, and peace, and joy in the holy Ghost, Gods people do even eat, and drink, and sleep eternal life, as it was once said of a reverend Divine of Scotland.

Which sowed good seed in his field] Among the Romans it was, probrum censorium agrum malè colere, a fault punishable by the Censors, to be an ill seedsman. And when they would highly commend any, they would say, He is an honest man, and a good plow-man.

Verse 25. But while men slept] Christ the Lord of the husbandry neither slumbereth nor sleepeth: but the under-labourers and land-holders, to whom he lets out his vineyard, are frequently found to be supine and secure, Zech. 4 1. It fared with the good Prophet, as with a drowsie person; who, though awake and set to work, is ready to sleep at it. And albeit we watch against greater, yet lesser evils are ready to steal upon us at unawares, as Austin hath it.

His enemy came] This is the Ministers misery: Other men find their work as they left it; but when Ministers have done their best on one Sabbath-day, the enemy comes ere the next, and mars all. Thy sleep and are fearless, he wakes for a mischief, and is restless. Learn for shame of the Devil (said father Latimer to careless Ministers) to watch over your flocks. God will shortly send out summons for sleepers; and the Devil waketh and walketh, seeking whom to devour. His instruments also are wondrous active in evil. O pray (said a dying man in the beginning of the German Reformation) that God would preserve the Gospel: for the Pope of Rome and the Council of Trent to bestir themselves wonderfully! May not we say as much and more now-adaies?

And ſowed tares among the wheat] Better it were rendred, blaſted corn, that yields nothing better at harveſt then duſt and chaff; though it be in all things like the good corn, and the contrary appeareth not till towards harveſt, when the duſt is driven away by the wind, the chaff caſt into the fire. Hereby are meant hypocrites and hereticks, Qui nobiſcum in horreo eſſe poſſunt, in area non poſſunt, who ſhall be ſifted out one day.

And went his way] As if he had done no ſuch thing. Satan hides his cloven feet, as much as he can, and would ſeem no other then an Angel of light. Or abiit, id eſt, latuit, ſaith one: he went away, that is, he lurked, as his imps uſe to do, under the fair pent-houſe of Zeal and ſeeming Devotion, under the broad leaves of formal profeſſion.

Verſe 26. Then appeared the tares alſo.] Hypocrites are ſure ſooner or later to be detected. All will out at length. Sacco ſoluto apparuit argentum. When God turns the bottom of the bag upwards, their ſecret ſins will appear: They ſhall find themſelves in all evil, in the midſt of the Congregation and Aſſembly. They that turn aſide unto their crooked ways, ſhall be led forth with the workers of iniquity.

Verſe 27. So the ſervants of the houſholder, &c.] Godly Miniſters are much vexed at hypocrites, and fruitleſs hearers. So was our Saviour at the Phariſees, Mark 3. 5. he looked on them with anger, being grieved at the hardneſs of their hearts. So was Paul at Elymas the ſorcerer: he ſet his eyes upon him, as if he would have looked thorow him; after which lightning, followeth that terrible thunder-clap, O full of all ſubtilty, &c. So was Peter at Simon Magus. and St. John at Diotrephes, *I would they were even cut off that trouble you. But that which our Saviour here obſerveth and applieth in it, is, the ſmalneſs of the ſeed, the greatneſs of the ſtalk or tree that comes of it, and the uſe of the branches for birds to build in. This grain of muſtard-ſeed ſowed, is the word preached: which though it ſeem ſmall and contemptible, proves quick and powerfull: Hitherto flee the birds of the ayr, Gods elect for ſhade in proſperity, for ſhelter in adverſity. Yea, as the trees of America. but eſpecially of Braſile, are ſo huge, that ſeveral families are reported to have lived in ſeveral arms of one tree, to ſuch a number as are in ſome petty Village, or Pariſh here: So is the growth of the Goſpel, it runs and is glorified, 2 Theſ. 3. 1.

as the Jeruſalem-Artichoke over-runs the ground, whereſoever it is planted. It was a juſt wonder how it was carried, as on Angels wings, over all the world by the preaching of the Apoſtles at firſt, and now again, in the late Reformation, by Luther and ſome few other men of mean rank, but of rare ſucceſs. Theſe were thoſe Angels that came flying with the everlaſting Goſpel (no new Doctrine as the Adverſaries ſlander it) in the midſt of heaven, or betwixt heaven and earth; becauſe their Doctrine at firſt was not ſo clearly confirmed to others, nor ſo fully underſtood by themſelves. Melanchon confeſſeth, Quod fugiamus habemus, ſc. Pontificios: quos ſequamur, non intelligimus. And Cardinal Wolſey (ſaith the ſame Melanchon) reading the Ausborough-Confeſſion, ſaith, that our cauſe concerning the righteouſneſs of faith, was ſtronger in the confirmation, then in the confutation of the contrary opinion. Quod verum eſt, as he there yieldeth, quia facilius conſtruere in ſophiſticis quam deſtruere: In Phyſicis contra. But our John Wickliff, long before Luther, wrote more then two hundred Volumes againſt the Pope. The Lady Ann, wife to King Richard the ſecond, ſiſter to Wenceſlaus King of Bohemia, by living here was made acquainted with the Goſpel. Whence alſo many Bohemians coming hither, conveyed Wickliffs books into Bohemia; whereby a good foundation was laid for a future Reformation. After this, were ſtirred up there by God, John Huſs, and Hierom of Prague; who ſo propagated the truth in that Kingdom, that in the year of Chriſt 1451. the Church of God at Conſtantinople, congratulated to the Univerſity of Prague their happy beginnings, and exhorted them to perſeverance. For before the Huſſites, by the mediation of Queen Sophia, who favoured them, had obtained of the King the free exerciſe of their Religion thorowout Bohemia. Howbeit, ſoon after this, they ſuffered great perſecution by the Popiſh party, who yet could ſay no worſe of them then this; In their lives they are modeſt, in their ſpeeches true, in their love one towards another fervent; but their Religion is incorrigible and ſtark naught, ſaith Jacobus Leilcſtenius the Dominican. And why ſtark naught? Reinerius another of their Perſecutors ſhall tell you: Their Doctrine, ſaith he, is moſt peſtilent, 1. Becauſe of ſo long ſtanding. 2. Becauſe ſo far ſpread. 3. For their ſhew of purity, &c. This paved a way for the great work which Luther began in Germany, the laſt of October 1617. And it was ſtrangely carried on; 1. By diligent preaching. 2. Printing good books. 3. Tranſlating the holy Scriptures into vulgar tongues. 4. Catechiſing of youth. 5. Offering publike diſputation. 6. Martyrologies. Here in England was a great door opened at the ſame time, but many adverſaries. The eſtabliſhing of that Reformation, how unperfit ſoever; to be done by ſo weak and ſimple means, yea by caſual and croſs means (ſaith one) againſt the force of ſo puiſſant and politick an enemy, is that miracle, which we are in theſe times to look for. It is ſuch a thing (ſaith another) as the former age had even deſpaired of, the preſent age admireth, and the future ſhall ſtand amazed at. King Henry the eighth, whom God uſed as an Inſtrument in the work, had firſt written againſt Luther, and afterwards eſtabliſhed thoſe ſix ſacrilegious Articles. And ſitting in Parliament, he thus complained of the ſtirs that were made about Religion. There are many, ſaith he, that are too buſie with their new Sumpſimus, and others that dote too much upon their old Mumpſimus. The new Religion though true, he and they all, for moſt part, envied: the old, though their own, they deſpiſed. John Frith withſtood the violence of three of the moſt obſtinate amongſt them, Rocheſter, Moor and Raſtal: Whereof the one by the help of the Doctors, the other by wreſting the Scriptures, and the third by the help of natural Philoſophy had conſpired againſt him. But he, as another Hercules (ſaith Mr. Fox) fighting with all three at once, did ſo overthrow and confound them, that he converted Raſtal to his part: Rocheſter and Moor were afterwards both beheaded for denying the Kings Supremacy. Reformation hath ever met with oppoſition, and never more then now, men fighting for their luſts, which they love as their lives, and are loth to part with. But Chriſt ſhall raign when all's done: and thoſe golden times are now at hand, that the new Jeruſalem, which ſignifies the ſtate of the Church in this world, when it hath paſſed the furnace of affliction, preſently upon it, ſhall be all of fine gold. Let us contribute thereunto our earneſt prayers and utmoſt pains; not abiding among the ſheep-folds with Reuben, nor remaining in ſhips with Dan, &c. Jud. 5, 16, 17. not ſtanding off, and caſting perils, as the Prieſts and Levites in Hezekiahs days; but beginning the Reformation as Gideon did at our own hearts and houſes, leſt with Uzziah, inſtead of making up the breach, we prove makers of breaches. Were our dangers greater, thy single reformation may do much to prevent them, Jer. 5. 1. Verse 32. Which indeed is the least of all seeds] That is, one of the least; for there is as little, or less then it, as Poppy-seed, &c. Cypress seeds are said to be so small, that they can hardly be seen asunder; and yet of them grows so great and tall a tree, Nusquam magis tota natura quam in minimis, saith Pliny. Tremellius testifieth, that things almost incredible are related of the wonderfull growth of the Jewish mustard-seed. Maldonat also telleth us, that in Spain he had seen little woods of mustard-seed-trees; and that the bakers therehence fetch fuel to heat their ovens, and do other offices. The word of God (a thing worth observation, saith a modern Divine) is in the Gospel compared to mustard-seed; which (as one gathereth out of Pythagoras) of all seeds is most in ascent, taketh deepest root, and being mixt with vineger is soveraign against serpents. Right so the word of God worketh effectually in us, begets an ascent in our affections, lays in us a sure foundation, and though it touch us sharply as vineger, yet is a most powerful preservative against that old serpent.

During the time of Mr. Bradfords imprisonment in the Kings-bench and Counter in the Poultrey, he preached twice a day continually, unless sickness hindred him: where also the Sacrament was administred. And through his means (the Keeper so well did bear with him) such resort of good people was daily at his lecture, and ministration of the Sacrament, that commonly his chamber was well nigh filled therewith. Concerning the Christian Congregation (saith the same Author) in Queen Maries time, there were sometimes forty, sometimes one hundred, sometimes two hundred met together. I have heard of one, who being sent to them to take their names, and to espie their doing, yet in being among them was converted, and cryed them all mercy.

Verse 34. And without a Parable spake he not, &c.] A singular judgement of God upon them for their contumacy and contempt of the Gospel: So is it now upon many people, that God taketh sometimes from their most illuminate teachers, clearness and perspicuity of expression, for a punishment of their unthankfulness and rebellion against the light. Thieves and Malefactors that affect darkness (because the light discovers their evil deeds) are worthily cast into a dark dungeon: so here, Ezekiel, by the just judgement of God upon them, was no more understood by his hearers, then if he had spoken to them in a strange language. Heraclitus, for his obscurities, was called the Dark Doctor, and it seems he affected it; for he oft commanded his schollers to deliver themselves darkly. A minister is studiously to shun obscurity in his Doctrine. But if nevertheless he prove obscure and hard to be understood, let the people see a hand of God in it, and rather accuse their own impiety, then the preachers inability.

Ab obscuritate dictus est σκοτεινὸς. Ad hoc etiam discipulos erudiebat, cum illud sapius ingereret. Σκότιον obscurus esto. Ioh. Bodin. Eructabo vel Palam proloquar. Paulùm sepultæ distat inertiæ, celata virtus. Horat.

Verse 35. I will utter things, &c.] I will freely and plentifully eventilate them, as a fountain casteth out her waters constantly and without spare. Charity is no churl: True goodness is communicative, and accounts that it hath not that good thing that it doth not impart: as that Bishop of Lincoln never thought he had that thing which he did not give. It is not pouring out, but want of pouring out, that dryes up the streams of Grace, as of that oyl, 2 King. 4. 6. The liberal soul shall be made fat: and he that watereth shall be watered also himself, Prov. 11. 25.

Verse 36. Declare unto us the Parable] Private conference hath incredible profit. The Minister cannot possibly say all in an hour: seek settlement from his lips, who both must preserve, and present knowledge to the people: Junius was converted by conference with a country-man of his, not far from Florence, Galeacius Caracciolus, by a similitude of Peter Martyrs in his publike Lectures on 1 Corinth. seconded and set on by private discourse. David was more affected by Nathans, Thou art the man; then by all the Lectures of the Law, for a twelvemoneth before.

Verse 37. Is the Son of man] i.e. Signifies the Son of man: as Circumcision is the Covenant; that is, the sign of the Covenant. And as Christ saith of the Sacramental bread. This is my body, which Luther interprets synecdochically, for in, or under this is my body. Calvin, after Tertullian and Augustine, interprets it metonymically, for this is the sign or the figure of my body. Hence the Jesuites presently cry out, The spirit of God disagreeth not with it self. But these interpretations do utterly disagree; therefore they are not of the Spirit. But let them first agree among themselves, before they quarrel our disagreements; for their own Doctors are exceedingly divided even about this very point of the Eucharist, and know not what their holy Mother holdeth. Bellarmine teacheth, that the substance of the bread is not turned into the substance of Christs body Productivè, as one thing is made of another, but that the bread goes away, and Christs body comes into the room of it Adductivè, as one thing succeeds into the place of another, the first being voided. And this, saith he, is the opinion of the Church of Rome, himself being Reader of Controversies at Rome. But Suarez, Reader at Salamanca in Spain, confutes Bellarmines opinion, terming it Translocation, not Transubstantiation, and saith it is not the Churches opinion.

Verse 38. The field is the world] The Christian world, the Church, not the Roman Catholick Church only, the Popes Territories, as he would have it. The Rogatian Hereticks would needs have made the world believe, that they were the only Catholicks. The Anabaptists have the same conceit of themselves. Muncer their Chieftain, in his book written against Luther, and dedicated to Christ the most illustrious Prince (as he stileth him) inviegheth bitterly at him, as one that was meerly carnal, and utterly void of the spirit of Revelation. And Pareus upon this Text tells us, that in a conference at Frankendal the Anabaptists thus argued. The field is the world, therefore not the Church; that by the same reason they might deny, that tares breed in the Church. But tares are and will be in the visible Church, as our Saviour purposely teacheth by this parable.

The tares are the children of that Wicked one] So called partly in respect of their serpentine nature, those corrupt qualities, whereby they resemble the Devil; and partly because they creep into the Church by Satans subtilty, being his Agents and Emissaries. Agnosco te primogenitum diaboli, said S. John of that Heretick Cerinthus. And Hypocrites are his sons and heirs, the very free-holders of hell, and other sinners but their tenants, which have their part or lot with hypocrites. Matth. 24.

Verse 39. The enemy that sowed them, &c.] As Esther said, the adversary and enemy is that wicked Haman: So Satan. Why then have men so much to do with him? The Jews as often as they hear mention of Haman in their Synagogues, they do with their fists and hammers beat upon the benches and boards, as if they did knock upon Hamans head. We have those also that can bid defiance to the Devil, spet at his name, curse him haply; but in the mean space listen to his illusions, entertain him into their hearts by obeying his lusts. These are singularly foolish. For it is as if one should be afraid of the name of fire, and yet not fear to be burnt with the flame thereof.

Verse 40. So shall it be in the end of this world] As till then there can be no perfect purgation of the Church. Nevertheless Magistrates, and all good people must do their utmost within their bounds to further a Reformation a little otherwise then the Cardinals and Prelates of Rome; whom Luther fitly compared to Foxes, that came to sweep a dusty house with their tails, and instead of sweeping the dust out, sweep it all about the house, so making a great smoak for the time, but when they were gone, the dust falls all down again.

Such were those proud, contentious, covetous Prelates in the Primitive Church, that Ammianus Marcellinus stumbled and stormed at. the wicked. Such was Pope Clement the fifth, who so ill governed the Church, that Frederick King of Sicily began to call the truth of Christian Religion into question, and had fallen utterly off from it, had he not been settled and satisfied by Arnoldus de Villanova, a learned man of those times. Forasmuch as Christians (the Papists he meant) do eat the God whom they adore, Sit anima mea cum Philosophis, said Averoes the Mahomitan, let my soul be with the Philosophers rather. Nothing more stumbleth that poor people the Jews, and hindreth their conversion then the Idolatry of Papists, and blasphemies of Protestants. Oh that God would once cut off the names of those Idols, and cause the unclean spirit to pass out of the Land, according to his promise, Zach. 13.2. Fiat, Fiat.

Verse 42. And shall cast them into a furnace of fire] Lo the good Angels are executioners of Gods judgements. There cannot be a better and more noble act, then to do justice upon obstinate malefactors: Howbeit, at Rome they would not suffer the common executioner to dwell within the City, nay not so much as once to be seen in it, or draw breath in the ayr of it. This was very strict in them, and that was very just in God, that Twiford, which was Executioner of Frith, Bayfield, Bainham, Tewkesbury, Lambert, and other good men, dyed rotting above ground, so that none could abide to come near him.

Verse 43. Then shall the righteous shine] Those that have here lain among the pots, smucht and sullied, shall then outshine the Sun in his strength. Shine they shall in their bodies, which shall be clarified, and conformed to Christs most glorious body the standard, Phil. 3. In their souls, those spirits of just men made perfectly holy and happy. And in their whole person, as the Spouse of Christ. Uxor fulget radiis mariti, she shall shine with the beams of his beauty. Three glimpses of which glory were seen in Moses face, in Christs transfiguration, in Stevens countenance.

Who hath ears to hear, let him hear] q. d. This is worth hearing. Lend both your ears to such a bargain as this is. What shall we say to these things? saith the Apostle, after he had spoke of Glorification, Rom. 8.31. q.d. We can never satisfie our selves in speaking, you should never shew your selves sated in hearing.

Verse 44. Like unto treasure hid, &c.] A treasure is an heap of precious things laid up for future uses. By the treasure in this Text, we are to understand either Christ, or life eternal gotten for us by Christ, or the Gospel that offereth unto us Christ, and with him eternal life. The field wherein this true treasure lies hid, is the Church. The spades and mattocks wherewith it is to be digged up and attained unto, are hands and eyes, not poring in the earth, but praying toward heaven.

Θησαυρὸς παρὰ τὸ τιθέναι εἰς ἄνειον.

He hideth it] Ne quis eum antevertat, that none remove it, ere he hath made himself master of it. Holding fast that he hath, that no man take his crown from him. This he ensures to himself, and cannot rest till he hath done it. He likes not to have with the Merchant an estate hanging upon ropes, and depending upon uncertain winds, but makes sure work for his soul.

Fortunam videntibus aptam

Selleth all that he hath] Ever when justifying faith is infused, there is a through-sale of all sin: the pearl of price will never else be had. And for outward comforts and contentments, every true son of Israel will be glad to purchase the birth-right with pottage, spiritual favours with earthly; as did Galeacius the Marques of Vico, Martinengus Earl of Barcha, &c.

And buyeth that field] Accounting it an excellent penny-worth, whatever it stand him in. Other faint-hearted Chapmen cheapen heaven only, being loth to go to the price of it. A price they have in their hands, but they, like fools, look upon their money, and have no mind to lay it out upon any such commodity. Oh what mad men are they that bereave themselves of a room in that City of Pearl, for a few paltry shillings or dirty delights!

Verse 45. The Kingdom of heaven, &c.] The wise Merchant, besides, the pearl of Price, seeks out other goodly pearls, common gifts, which also have their use and excellency; but he rests not in them as Philosophers, Politicians and Temporaries. These, as Alchymists, who though they miss of their end, yet find many excellent things by the way so though they failed of the glory of God, yet they have many commendable good parts and properties. The wise Merchant so seeks after these, that he minds chiefly the main, the one thing necessary, in comparison whereof he counts all things else, though never so specious, dung, and dogs-meat.

Verse 46. Who when he had found one pearl, &c.] Of far greater price then that precious Adamant, that was found about Charls Duke of Burgundy, slain in battel by the Switzers at Nants, Anno 1476. This Adamant was first sold by a souldier that found it, to a Priest for a Crown; the Priest sold it for two Crowns; afterwards it was sold for 7000 florens, then for twelve thousand duckets, and last of all for twenty thousand duckets, and set into the Popes Triple-crown, where also it is to be seen at this day. Christ is a commodity far more precious; surely he is better then rubies, saith Solomon, and all the things that may be desired, are not to be compared unto him. No mention shall be made of Coral or of Pearls: for the price of wisdom (this essential wisdom of God) is above rubies. Pearls are bred in shel-fishes of a celestial humour or dew: so was Christ by heavenly influence in the Virgins womb Tanti igitur vitreum? Quanti verum margaritum? Christ is to be sought and bought with any pains, at any price. We cannot buy this gold too dear. Joseph, the jewel of the world, was far more precious, had the Ishmaelitish Merchants known so much, then all the balms and myrrhs they transported. So is Christ, as all will yield that know him. The Pearls usually cast out with the flood, and gathered at the ebb, drew Cæsars affections for the Conquest of Brittain, as Suetonius tells us. Shall not that unconceivable worth that is in Christ attract our hearts? &c.

Is like unto a net &c.] An elegant comparison, wherein the Fishers are the Ministers, the Sea the World, the Net the Word, the Ship the Church, the Fishes the Hearers. Basil comparing the Gospel to a net, makes fear to be the lead that sinketh it, and keeps it steady; and hope to be the cork, which keepeth it always above water. Without the lead of fear, saith he, it would be carried hither and thither; as without the cork of hope, it would utterly sink down.

Verse 48. And cast the bad away] Algam, silices, arenulas, sordes. Here was of both sorts, till the separation was made. The visible Church resembles the Ark, which was full of creatures of divers kinds, but most unclean. Fair she is, but as the Moon, which is not without her blemishes. Separatists that leave her therefore, yea deny her, and remain obstinate for trifles, are not unfitly by one compared to the Hedge-hog; which, saith Pliny, being laden with nuts and fruits, if the least filbeard fall off, will fling down all the rest in a pettish humour, and beat the ground for anger with his bristles.

By that signum salutare that God hath set upon them, that mark in their foreheads, Ezek. 9. Besides, by the lightsomness of their looks shall the Elect be known, lifting up their heads, because their redemption then draweth nigh; when reprobates shall look gastly and uggly, being almost mad with the sight of their eyes, that they shall see, and the fear of their hearts wherewith they shall fear, Deut. 28 34, 67.

Verse 50. And shall cast them into the furnace] An exquisite torment is hereby deciphered. This our Saviour had said in the same words, but a little afore, Verse 42. He here repeats it, that men may the better observe it. And I would to God, saith Chrysostome, that men would every day, and every where discourse of hell torments, that they would take a turn in hell ever and anon by their meditations. Certainly did men believe the torments of hell, that weeping for extremity of heat, and that gnashing of teeth that's there for extremity of cold, they durst not but be more innocent; they would never offer to fetch profits or pleasures out of those flames. It was a speech of Gregory Nyssen, He that doth but hear of hell is without any further labour or study taken off from sinful pleasures: thus he then. But alas mens hearts are grown harder now-adays; they can hear of hell, and be no more moved, then they are to handle a painted Toad.

catechising in the Christian Church. So afterwards, Credis? Credo. Abrenuncias? Abrenuncio, were the primitive Questions and Answer. Origen and Cyril were Catechists. In the Reformation, catechising of youth was one main means of propagating the Gospel. And the Jesuites observing as much, have taken the same course for the propagating of their superstition, and have set forth divers Catechisms. I remember, saith Melancthon, that Eberhard, the good Duke of Wittemberg, would constantly hear the young Gentlemen about the Court once a week rehearsing their Catechisms; which if any did not well, he was well whipt in the presence of the Duke and his Courtiers. Bishop Ridley, in a letter of his to the brethren; I hear, saith he, that the Catechism in English is now (after Q. Mary came in) condemned in every Pulpit. O devilish malice, and most spitefully injurious to the salvation of mankind! Indeed Satan could not long suffer that so great light should be spread abroad in the world. He saw well enough that nothing was able to overthrow his Kingdom so much, as if children being godly instructed in Religion should learn to know Christ, whiles they are yet young. Whereby, not only children, but the elder sort also and aged, that before were not taught in their child-hood to know Christ, should now even with children and babes be forced to know him.

Bishop Latimer, notwithstanding both his years, and other pains in preaching, was every morning ordinarily both Winter and Summer about two of the clock at his book most diligently. And as the Rabbins have a proverb, Lilmod lelammed, Men must therefore learn that they may teach, so did he. The Hebrew word Shachal signifieth, 1. To understand. 2. To teach. 3. To prosper. Insomuch that they were astonished] It's a lamentable thing that men should hear, rejoyce and wonder at the word, and for matter of practice, leave it where they found it. And yet what more ordinary? Men look round about a Minister: and though they cannot but admire his doctrine, yet, if they can finde ever a hole in his coat, thorow which to slip out, as here, be it but the meaness of his birth, or the unsightliness of his person, or the lefsomness of his delivery, &c. it is enough.

Verse 55. Is not this the Carpenters son?] Why? but was he not Architect of the world? S. Mark hath it, Is not this the Carpenter? Why yes; it may be so. Justin Martyr an ancient Writer testifieth, that our Saviour ere he entred upon the Ministry, made ploughs, yokes, &c. But was not that an honest occupation? And did not this Carpenter make a Coffin for Julian that persecuting Apostate, as a Christian School-master fitly answered Libanius, sarcastically demanding: what the Carpenters son was now a doing? Thus those three miscreants, Saul, Shimei and Sheba, took occasion to despise David, as the son of Jesse, who was vir bonus & honestus, minùs tamen clarus, as one saith of him, a good honest man, but there's little said of him.

Verse 56. Whence then hath this man, &c.] Hath he not got his skill by ill arts? yea by the black Art, doth not he work these wonders? sure he never came by all these things honestly, and in Gods Name. Think it not much to be miscensured.

Verse 57. A Prophet is not without honour, &c.] This was an ordinary saying of our Saviours, recorded by all four Evangelists, and is therefore much to be marked. How common is it, for familiarity to breed contempt? for men to scorn their own things, because at hand, though never so excellent and useful, to admire forreign things, though nothing comparable. Our corrupt nature heeds nothing we enjoy, as the eye seeth nothing that lies on it. Copy of the best things breeds satiety. God therefore usually teacheth us the worth of them by the want. Bona à tergo ferè formosissima. Good things are most beautiful on the backside:

Verse 58. He did not many mighty works] Mark saith he could not do much for them. Christ, that could do all things by his absolute power, could hardly do any thing by his actual power (could not, because he would not) for unbelievers. Note here that this journey of his to Nazareth, must be distinguished from that set down, Luke 4. though the same things are said of both: his Country-men, we see, were no changelings, but continued as bad as before, not a jot the better for that former visit.

Because of their unbelief] A sin of that venomous nature, that it transfuseth, as it were, a dead palsie into the hands of omnipotency. This infectious Sorceress can make things exceeding good, to prove exceeding evil.

Verse 1. At that time, &c.]

WHen he was cast out by his Country-men, he was heard of at the Court. The Gospel, as the Sea, what it loseth in one place, it getteth in another. But what? had not Herod heard of Christ till now? It is the misery of many good Kings, that they seldom hear the truth of things. Alphonsus King of Arragon bewailed it. And of M. Aurelius, one of the best Roman Emperours, it is said, that he was even bought and sold by his Court Parasites. As for Herod, he may seem to have been of Gallio's Religion, even a meer irreligon. He lay melting in filthy pleasures, and minded not the things above. Whoredom, wine and new wine had taken away his heart. S. Luke adds, that he desired to see Christ, but yet never stirred out of doors to go to him; Good motions make but a thorow-fare of wicked mens hearts: they pass away as a flash of lightning, that dazleth the eyes onely, and leaves more darkness behind it.

viction and horror. As those that were condemned to be crucified, bare their cross, that should soon after bear them: So God hath laid upon evil-doers the cross of their own consciences, that thereon they may suffer afore they suffer: and their greatest enemies need not wish them a greater mischief. For assuredly, a body is not so torn with stripes, as a minde with the remembrance of wicked actions. And here Cain runs to building of Cities, Saul to the delight of Musick, Belshazzar to quaffing and carrousing, Herod to his Minions and Catamites; so to put by, if possible, that melancholly dumps and heart-qualms, as they count and call inward terrors. But conscience will not be pacified by these sorry Anodynes of the Devil. Wicked men may skip and leap up and down for awhile, as the wounded Deer doth: sed haeret lateri lethalis arundo, the deadly dart sticks fast in their sides, and will do, without true repentance, till it hath brought them, as it did Herod, to desperation and destruction, so that he laid violent hands upon himself at Lions in France, whither he and his Curtizan were banished by Augustus.

This is John the Baptist] Herod had thought to have hugged his Herodias without controul when once the Baptist was beheaded: but it proved somewhat otherwise. Indeed so long as he plaid alone, he was sure to win all. But now conscience came in to play her part, Herod is in a worse case then ever: for he imagined still that he saw and heard that holy head shouting and crying out against him, staring him also in the face at every turn; as that Tyrant thought he saw the head of Symmachus, whom he had basely slain, in the mouth of the fish that was set before him on the table. And as Judge Morgan, who gave the sentence of condemnation against the Lady Jane Gray, shortly after he had condemned her, fell mad, and in his raving cryed out continually to have the Lady Jane taken away from him, and so ended his life.

Neither bound onely, but beheaded without any Law, right, or reason, as though God had known nothing at all of him, as that Martyr expresseth it. All this befell the good Baptist, for telling the truth. Veritas odium parit. If conscience might but judge, how many of our Hearers would be found to have an Herods heart towards their faithful Ministers? Were there but a sword (of authority) in their hand, as he said to his Ass, they would surely slay them. They would deal by them no better then Saul did by David, 1 Sam. 18. 10. whiles he was playing upon his Harp to ease Sauls distracted mind, he cast a spear at him. The most savovry salt (if they can do withall) must be cast out, and trodden under foot; as Calvin and other faithful Ministers were driven out of Geneva at the first: whereupon he uttered these gracious words. Truly, if I had served men, I had been ill rewarded: but it is well for me that I have served him who never faileth his, but will approve himselfe a liberal pay-master, a rich rewarder.

And put him in prison] Having first laid hold upon all the principles in his own head, that might any way disturb his course in sin, and locked them up in restraint, according to that Rom. 1. 18. wicked men detain the truth, that is, the light of their own consciences (which is as another John Baptist, a Prophet from God) this they imprison in unrighteousnesse, and become fugitives from their own hearts, as Austin hath it.

For Herodias sake, his brother, &c.] Quam vulpinando fratri eripuerat, as one phraseth it: And he had her not onely for his wife, but for his mistress: for she ruled him at her pleasure, as Jezabel did Ahab: of which wretched couple it is said, that Regina erat Rex, Rex vero Regina. But it never goes well when the hen crows. How many have we known, whose heads have been broken with their own rib? Satan hath found this bait to take so well, that he never changed it since he crept into Paradise. And it is remarkable, that in that first sentence against man, this cause is expressed, Because thou obeyedst the voyce of thy wife.

Verse 4. For John had said unto him, It is not lawful] Others knew it to be so, but none durst tell him so but John. In like sort Eliah told Ahab, that he had troubled Israel (those times, and these did very much suit: John was another Elias, Herod and Herodias answered to Ahab and Jezebel.) So Latimer presented, for a New years gift to King Henry the eighth, a New Teſtament, with a napking, having this poſie about it, Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. He alſo wrote a Letter to the King, after the Proclamation for aboliſhing Engliſh Books: where we may ſee and marvel at his great boldneſs and ſtoutneſs, who as yet being no Biſhop, ſo freely and plainly durſt to ſo mighty a Prince, in ſuch a dangerous caſe, againſt the Kings Proclamation, ſet out in ſuch a terrible time, take upon him to write, and to admoniſh that which no Councellor durſt once ſpeak unto him, in defence of Chriſts Goſpel. King Aſa, though a godly Prince, impriſoned the Prophet for dealing plainly with him. Archbiſhop Grindal loſt Q. Elizabeths favour, and was confined, for favouring Prophecies, &c. as it was pretended: but in truth, for condemning an unlawful marriage of Julio an Italian Phyſitian with another mans wife, whiles Leiceſter in vain oppoſed againſt his proceedings therein. Gods truth muſt be told, however it be taken, and not be betrayed (as it is too too oft,) by a cowardly ſilence.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1594. Ibid. 1591. Camd. Elizab.

It is not lawfull for thee to have her] And yet the Pope frequently diſpenſeth with ſuch inceſtuous marriages. King Philip the third of Spain, were he now alive, might call the Arch-duke Albert both brother, couſin, nephew, and ſon: for all this were he unto him either by blood or affinity; being uncle to himſelf, couſin-german to his Father, husband to his ſiſter, and father to his wife, and all by Papal diſpenſation. Abhorred filth!

Verſe 5. And when he would have put him to death] Why, what had the good Baptiſt done, that he muſt dye? The people muſt be made believe that he ſuffereth for practiſing againſt the King. But this was ſo thin a falſhood that it might be tranſparently ſeen through. Therefore Herod durſt not kill him, though he much deſired to do it, leſt the people ſhould move and mutiny. He knew himſelf hated by them already for his cruelty and other crimes. Now if he ſhould exaſperate them afreſh by executing the Baptiſt, whom they highly honoured, who knew what they would do? Tyrants, how terrible ſoever, have their fears, that curb and keep them in for a time at leaſt, from many notorious outrages. In the beginning of Q. Maries Reign, after the tumult at Bourns Sermon at the Croſs (where the people flang daggers, and were ready to pull him limmeal out of the Pulpit, for perſwading them to Popery) the L. Major and Aldermen were willed to call a Common-Counſel, and to ſignifie to the ſaid aſſembly the Queens determination, ſc. that albeit her Graces conſcience is ſtaid in matter of Religion, yet ſhe graciouſly meant not to compel or ſtrain other mens conſciences, otherwiſe then God ſhall, as ſhe truſted, put in their hearts a perſwaſion of the truth that ſhe is in, through the opening of the Word unto them by godly, vertuous, and learned Preachers.

Verſe 6. But when Herods birth-day was kept] All this was a meer plot, as S. Mark alſo intimateth, in thoſe words of his, Chap. 6. 21. And when a convenient day was come. This birth-day then was the day appointed long before by Herod and his Harlot for the acting of this Tragedy. A great Feaſt muſt be prepared, the States invited, the Damoſel muſt dance, the King ſwear, the Baptiſt thereupon be beheaded, that the Queen may be gratified. And this Tragedy was new-acted at Paris, Anno 1572. when the French Maſſacre was committed under pretence of a wedding Royal. Cardinal Lorrain gave a great ſum of money to him that brought the firſt news thereof to Rome, and the Pope cauſed it to be painted in his Pallace.

The daughter of Herodias danced] Tripudiabat, tripped on the toe in a moſt immodeſt manner, as they uſed to do in their Bacchanals, as the word ſignifieth. This old fornicator ſeemed to be taken and tickled with the ſight, that like a mad-man he ſwears to give her her requeſt, to the half of the Kingdom, which yet was more then he could do, the Kingdom being not his, but the Emperor of Romes to diſpoſe of. So as Robert Duke of Normandy paſſed through Falaiſe, he beheld among a company of young Maids dauncing, one Arlet a Skinners Daughter, whoſe nimbleneſs in her daunce ſo enamoured the Duke, that he took her for his Concubine, and on her begat our William the Conqueror. Such and no better commonly are the effects of mixt dauncings, which made Chryſoſtome ſay, where dauncing is, there the Devil is. And another Ancient calleth dauncing a Circle whoſe Center is the Devil blowing up the fire of concupiſence in the hearts both of the Actors and Spectators. Auguſtine ſaith, that every caper in the daunce is a leap into a deep jakes. No ſober man doth daunce, ſaith Cicero. Verse 7. He promised with an oath] He not onely swore rashly, but confessed himself bound thereby to perform his oath (as the Greek word signifieth) to give her whatsoever she would ask; as Judah did Tamar, and as wantons use to do to their sweet-hearts. Ask me never so much dowry and gift, saith Shechem, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me : but give me the damosel to wife.

Κακὴ κεφαλὴ κακὸν ὄ.ν. ἐτέκνεν αὐτῷ.

Verse 8. And she being before instructed, &c.] Partus sequitur ventrem, the birth follows the belly. Here was like mother like daughter, neither good bird nor good egg, as they say. The mother and daughter both had an aking tooth at the Baptist, and sought an opportunity to be meet with him: which now having gotten, they pursued to the utmost. The Damosel came with haste to the King, saith S. Mark, chap. 6.25. when once she had her lesson, as fearing, belike, she should come too late. Such another huswife as this, was Dame Alice Pierce a Concubine to our Edward the Third. For when as at a Parliament in the fiftieth year of that Kings reign, it was petitioned that the Duke of Lancaster, the Lord Latimer Chamberlain, and this Dame Alice might be amoved from Court, and the Petition was vehemently urged by their Speaker Sir Peter la Mare; this Knight afterwards, at the suit of that impudent woman (working upon the Kings impotencies) was committed to perpetual imprisonment at Nottingham. And another such History we have of one Diana Valentina, Mistriss to Henry 2. King of France, whom she had so subdued, that he gave her all the confiscations of goods made in the Kingdom, for cause of Heresie. Whereupon many were burned in France for Religion, as they said, but indeed to maintain the pride, and satisfie the covetousness of that lewd woman. This was in the year 1554. And in the year 1559. Ann du Bourge, a Counsellor of State, was burnt also for crime of Heresie; not so much by the inclination of the Judges as by the resolution of the Queen, provoked against him: because, forsooth, the Lutherans gave out that the King had been slain, as he was running at Tilt, by a wound in the eye, by the providence of God, for a punishment of his words used against Du Bourge, that he would see him burnt.

Verse 9. And the King was sorry] Johns innocency might haply so triumph in Herods conscience, as to force some grief upon him at the thought of so foul a fact. But I rather think otherwise, that all was but in hypocrisie. For lasciviousness usually sears up the conscience (till the time of reckoning for all comes) and brings men to that dead and dedolent disposition, Ephes. 4.19. Onely this fox fains himself sorry for John, as his father fained himself willing to worship the Lord Christ, Matth. 2. as Tiberius (Herods Lord and Master) would seem very sorry for those, whom, for his pleasures sake onely, he put to death, Gallius Germanicus, Drusus, &c. And as Andronicus the Greek Emperour, that deep dissembler, would weep over those whom he had for no cause caused to be executed, as if he had been the most sorrowful man alive. Dissimulat mentis sua malitiam artifex homicida. This cunning murtherer craftily hides his malice, saith S. Hierom, and seeming sad in the face, is glad at heart to be rid of the importunate Baptist, that he may sin uncontrolled.

Turk. Hist. fol. 50.

For the oaths sake, and them which sate] All this was but pretended to his villany, and that he might have somewhat to say to the people, whom he feared, in excuse for himself. As that he beheaded the Baptist indeed, but his guests would needs have it so, because he had promised the Damosel her whole desire, and she would not otherwise be satisfied. Besides, it was his birth-day, wherein it was not fit he should deny his Nobles any thing, who minded him of his oath, &c. But the Oath was wicked, and therefore not obligatory. He should have broken it, as David in like case did, 1 Sam. 25. when he swore a great oath what he would do to Nabal. But Herod, for the avoyding of the sands, rusheth upon the rocks, prevents perjury by murther, not considering the rule, that no man is held so perplexed between two vices, but that he may finde an issue without falling into a third.

shew'd him his sin, and opposed his sentence. But that is not the guise of godless parasites, those Aiones & Negones aulici, qui omnia loquuntur ad gratiam, nihil ad veritatem. These Court Parasites and Parrots know no other tune or tone; but what will please their Masters quorum etiam spuetum lingunt, as one saith, soothing and smoothing, and smothering up many of their foul facts, that they thereby may the better ingratiate. Principibus ideo amicus deest quia nihil deest: there is a wonderful sympathy between Princes and Parasites. But David would none of them, Psal. 101. and Sigismond the Emperour cuffed them out of his presence. And surely if wishing were any thing (said Henricus Stephanus) like as the Thessalians once utterly overthrew the City called Flattery, so I could desire, that above all other Malefactors, Court-Parasites were utterly rooted out, as the most pestilent persons in the world.

Verse 10. And he sent and beheaded John] Put him to death in hugger-mugger, as the Papists did and do still (in the bloody Inquisition-house especially) many of the Martyrs. Stokesby Bishop of London caused Mr. John Hunne to be thrust in at the nose with hot burning needles, whiles he was in the prison, and then to be hanged there; and said he had hanged himself. Another Bishop having in his Prison an innocent man, because he could not overcome him by Scripture, caused him privily to be snarled, and his flesh to be torn and pluckt away with Pinsers; and bringing him before the people, said the Rats had eaten him. And I have heard of a certain Bishop, saith Melancthon, that so starved ten good men whom he held in Prison for Religion, that before they dyed, they devoured one another. Quis unquam hoc audivit in Phalaridis historiâ, saith he? who ever heard of such a cruelty? But so it pleaseth God, for excellent ends to order that all things here come alike to all, yea that none out of Hell suffer more then the Saints. This made Erasmus say, upon occasion of the burning of Berquin, a Dutch Martyr, Damnari, dissecari, suspendi, exuri, decollari piis cum impiis sunt communia. Damnare, dissecare, in crucemagere, exurere, decollare, bonis judicibus cum piratis ac tyrannis communia sunt. Varia sunt hominum judicia; ille fœlix, qui judice Deo absolvitur. The Athenians were very much offended at the fall of their General Nicias, discomfited and slain in Sicily; as seeing so good a man to have no better fortune. But they knew not God, and therefore raged at him. But we must lay our hands upon our mouths when Gods hand is upon our backs or necks: and stand on Tiptoes, with Paul, to see which way Christ may be most magnified in our bodies, whether by life or by death, Phil. 1. 20.

Verse 11. And his head was brought, &c.] This was merces mundi, the worlds wages to John for all his pains in seeking to save their souls. Surely as Cæsar once said of Herod the great, (this mans Father) It were better to be Herods Swine then his Son: So (saith one) many Ministers have, through the corruption of the time, cause to think, It were better to be Herods Minstrel then Minister, Player then Preacher, Dancer then Doctor.

And given to the Damesel] The Romans condemned it for a detestable cruelty in Quintus Flaminius, that to gratifie his Harlot Placentina, he beheaded a certain Prisoner in her presence at a Feast. This Livy calleth facinus sævum atq; atrox, a cursed and horrid fact: And Cato the Censor cast him out of the Senate for it. Neither was it long ere this Tyrant Herod had his payment from Heaven. For Aretas King of Arabia (offended with him for putting away his Daughter, and taking to wife Herodias) came upon him with an Army, and cut off all his Forces. Which loss all men interpreted, saith Josephus, as a just vengeance of God upon him, for his unjust usage of the Baptist. And within a while after, being accused at Rome by his brother Agrippa, and convicted that he had 70000 Arms in readiness against the Emperour, he was banished into France (as is above said) together with his Herodias, where he became his own deathsman.

hazard their bodies, to save their souls. How far are they from this that will not put themselves to any pain or cost for Heaven? and if held awhile beyond the hour at a Sermon, are as ill settled, as if they were in the stocks, or in a fit of an ague: they go out of the Church as out of a Goal.

This is a desart place, &c.] Christ knew all this better then they could tell him: and to take upon them to tell him, was as if the Ostrich should bid the Storks be kind to her young Ones. Ac si struthio camelus ciconiam de pietate admoneret. Cartuo.

Verse 16. They need not depart]. Whither should they go from the great Housekeeper of the world, the All-sufficient God? Habet certè omnia, qui habet habentem omnia. Christ hath a cornucopia, a horn of salvation, plenteous redemption, &c. And if he give us a crown, will he deny us a crust? The earth is the Lords and the fulness thereof. He feeds the Ravens, and clothes the Lilies. If meat be denyed, he can take away our stomacks. He can feed us by a miracle, as he did Elias of old, and the Rochellers of late. Augustin.

Verse 17. And they say unto him, We have here] And were therefore ready to say with Nicodemus, How can this be? Christ had said, Give ye them to eat, to try them onely, as S. John hath it. And upon triall, he found them full of drosse, as appears by their answer. But the comfort is, he hath promised to try his people indeed, but not as silver; lest they should not bear any so exact a trial, as having more drosse in them then good oar. And where he finds any the least grain of true grace, he cherisheth, and inhanceth it, by a further partaking of his holiness. The Disciples here were as yet very carnal, and spake as men: They were ready to limit the Holy One, and say to with those of old, Can he prepare a Table in the Wilderness? They measured him by their model, and looked as Naaman did, upon Jordan with Syrian eyes. This was their fault, and must be our warning; that when we think of God, we shut out Hagar, and set up Sarah, silence our reason, and exalt our faith; which killeth and quelleth distrustful fear, and believes against sense in things invisible, and against reason in things incredible. Joh. 6. 6. Isa. 48. 10. Heb. 12. 10.

But five loaves and two fishes] Tyraboscо was hardly driven, when from these five loaves and two fishes he concluded seven Sacraments. Two, belike of Gods making, and five of the bakers. So Cenalis Bishop of Auranches, would prove the Church of Rome the true Church, because it had Bells by which their Assemblies be ordinarily called together: But the Church of the Lutherans was reported to be congregated by claps of Harquebuzes and Pistolets: And so makes a long Antithesis, by the which he would make good, that Bells are the makers of the true Church. Verse 18. Bring them hither to me] Bring we all we have and are to Christ, that he may take off the curse, and add the blessing. What the Apostle saith of meat and marriage, is true of the rest, All things are sanctified by the Word and Prayer. To teach the people this, it was, that the Fruit of the Trees was not to be eaten, till the Trees were circumcised, Lev. 19. 23. 1 Tim. 4. 3.

Verse 19. And looking up to Heaven, he blessed] Heathens consecrated their cates before they tasted them, as appears by many passages in Homer and Virgil. Some say that the Elephant ere he eats his meat, turns up with his Trunk the first sprig towards Heaven. The Scripture, we are sure, sayes, that men eat to God when they give thanks, Rom. 14. 6. To whom then do they eat that give none?

And the Disciples, to the multitude] They grudged not of their little to give others some, and it grew in their hands, as the widdows oyl did in the cruse. Not getting, but giving is the way to thrive. Nothing was ever lost by liberality.

Verse 20. And were filled] So Davids cup over-flowed: he had not onely a sufficience, but an affluence. So, at the marriage of Cana, Christ gave them wine enough for 150 guests. Howbeit he hath not promised us superfluities. Having food and raiment, let us be content. A little of the creature will serve to carry us through our pilgrimage. Psal. 23. 5. Joh. 2. 1 Tim. 6.

Lest they should take part with the rash many-headed multitude, who would have made him a King, Joh. 6. thus he many times prevents sin in his, by removing occasions. 2. To inure them to the Cross, and to teach them, as good Souldiers, to suffer hardship, which the flesh takes heavily. 3. To give them proof of his power, now perfected in their weakness, when they were ready to be shipwrackt, and to teach them to pray to him absent, whom present they had not prised to the worth, as appears, vers. 17. When we cast our precious things at our heels, as children, our heavenly Father layes them out of the way another while, that we may know the worth by the want, and so grow wiser.

Cant. 1. 7. He sent the multitudes away] That he might shun even the suspition of sedition: We must not only look to our consciences but to our credits. Why should I be as one that turneth aside? saith the Church, or as one that is veiled and covered, which was the habit of an Harlot? Why should I seem to be so, though I be none such? We must shun appearances of evil, whatsoever is but evil-favoured.

Quicquid fecerit malè coloratum. Bern. Verse 23. He went up into a mountain apart to pray] Secret prayer fats the soul, as secret morsels feed the body: Therefore is it said to be the banquet of grace, where the soul may solace her self with God, as Esther did with Ahashuerosh at the Banquet of wine, and have whatsoever heart can wish, or need require. Only (because Anima dispersa fit minor) get into such a corner, as where we may be most free to call upon God without distraction, remembring our own fickleness, and Satans restlesness.

Numb. 23. When the evening was come, he was there alone] Retire we must sometimes, and into fit places to meet God; as Balaam did, but to better purpose: solacing our selves and entertaining soliloquies with him, as Isaac did in the Fields, Jacob upon the way, Ezekiel by the River Ulai, Peter upon the Leads, Christ here upon the Mountain, Whiles the Disciples were perilling, and well-nigh perishing, Christ was praying for them: so he is still for us, at the right hand of the Majesty on high.

Isa. 54. 11. Verse 24. Tossed with waves] So is the Church oft, therefore stiled, O thou afflicted and tossed with tempest, that hast no comfort. Jesus was absent all the while, so he seemeth to be from his darlings in their desertions; he leaveth them, as it were in the suburbs of Hell, and (which is worst of all) himself will not come at them. Howbeit as the Eagle when she flieth highest of all from the nest, doth evermore cast a jealous eye upon her young; so doth this heavenly Eagle.

Camden. For the wind was contrary] So it is ever lightly to the Church: This world being like the straits of Magellan, wherein which way soever a man bends his course, he is sure to have the winde sit cross to him. But the comfort is, that whether North or South blow, they both blow good to a Christian, Cant. 4. ult.

Verse 25. And in the fourth watch, &c.] Then and not till then. His time is best, whatever we think of it: his help most sweet, because most seasonable: his hand commonly kept for a dead lift.

Verse 26. They were troubled] Ere they were helped: Things oft go backward, ere they come forward with us. Deus plagam sanaturus, graviorem infligit: he knows how to commend his mercies to us.

Verse 28. If it be thou, bid me come unto thee, &c.] This fact of Peter some extol, as an argument of his strong faith and love to Christ. But others of better judgement, censure it as an effect of unbelief, and rashness in him, requiring to be confirmed by a miracle; to the which though our Saviour assented, yet we cannot say that he approved it. The other Disciples believed Christ upon his bare word, but Peter must have a sign. He had it, but with a check, verse 31.

Verse 29. And he said, Come.] Had the Pharisees asked a sign, they should have gone without, and have heard, wicked and bastardly brood, as Matth. 12.39. But a Peter shall have it, rather then he shall halt betwixt two, as the word is, Verse 31. Christ condescends to his infirmity, and bids him, Come. And the like was his dealing with that vertuous Gentlewoman Mistress Honywood; who doubting much of her salvation, was often counselled by a worthy Minister, to take heed of enquiries further then Gods word, &c. Yet still did the temptation grow upon her, insomuch that having a Venice-glass in her hand, and the same Minister sitting by her: You have often told me, said she to him, that I must seek no further then Gods word. But I have been long without comfort, and can endure no longer; therefore if I must be saved, let this glass be kept from breaking, and so she threw it against the walls. The glass rebounds again, and comes safe to the ground; which the Minister having gotten into his hands, saith, Oh repent of this sin, bless God for his mercy, and never distrust him more of his promise; for now have you his voyce from heaven in a miracle, telling you plainly of your estate. This was curiosity, saith mine Author, and might have brought despair; yet it was the Lords mercy to remit the fault, and grant an extraordinary confirmation of her faith.

Verse 30. But when he saw the wind boisterous] Every bird can sing in a sun-shine day; and it is easie to swim in a warm bath; but to believe in an angry God, as David; in a killing God, as Job, to stick to him in deepest desertion, as the Church, Psal. 44.17,18. to trust in his name, and stay upon his word, where there is darkness and no light, as Isa 50.10. to cast anchor even in the darkest night of temptation, when neither Sun nor Stars appear, as Paul and his company, Acts 27.20. praying still for day, and waiting till it dawn, O quam hoc non est omnium! this is not in the power of every Peter, who yet shall be graciously supported that they faint not, neither sink under the heaviest burthen of their light afflictions. It was not so much the strength of the wind, as the weakness of his faith, that put Peter into this fit of fear. Be we faithful in weakness, though weak in faith, and it shall go well with us. Be as a ship at anchor, which though it move much, yet removes not at all.

Verse 31. O thou of little faith, &c.] Thou petty-fidian, small-faith: Christ chides Peter, and yet helps him. Involuntary failings, unavoidable infirmities discard us not: as Robberies done by Pirats of either Nation, break not the league between Princes; as lesser failings dissolve not the marriage-knot. Christ knew us well before he took us, yet took us for better, for worse. 2. Much will be so born with, where the fault is of passion meerly, or of incogitancy and inadvertency, as here.

Verse 32. The wind ceased] As if it had been weary of blowing so big, and now desired rest after hard labour; as the word here used importeth. Herodotus useth the same word in the same sense, where he speaks of a tempest layed by the Magicians. Rupertus calleth the winds the worlds beesoms, which are used by God to sweep his great house, and purge the ayr. If the Prince of the ayr make use of them to sweep Gods children, as he did Jobs children out of the world, it cannot be said, as 1 Kings 19.11. that God is not in that wind: for he numbreth their hairs, and counts their flittings; and, being the great Æolus, lays laws upon the winds and waves, which instantly obey him. No sooner was Christ in the ship, but they were all at land.

should be kept as the apple of the eye, Prov. 7. 2. They are broken by omissions, commissions and failings in the manner; like as a man may miss the mark by shooting short, or beyond, or wide. These Pharisees, as those Athenians of old (whereas they had most excellent Laws, but most lawless natures) chose rather to live by their lusts, then by their Laws. They had many traditions, and unwritten verities, pretended to be invented and prescribed them by their Elders, that by the observation thereof they might be the better enabled to keep Gods Commandments. These traditions they stiled, Mashlamnathoth, Completions or Perfections; because thereby they conceited, that the written Law was made more compleat and perfect. And say not the Papists as much of their traditions?

This the Stork and the Mouse teach us, by their singular love to their aged Sires. Cornelius was the staff of his fathers age, and thereby merited the honorable name of Scipio among the Romans, Epaminondas rejoyced in nothing more, then that he had lived to chear up the hearts of his aged parents, by the reports of his victories. Our parents are our houshold gods, said Hierocles. Æneas is sirnamed Pius, for his love to his father, whom he bore upon his back out of the fire of Troy. And Aristotle tells how that when from the hill Ætna, there ran down a torrent of fire that consumed all the houses thereabouts, in the midst of those fearful flames Gods special care of the godly shined most brightly. For the river of fire parted it self, and made a kind of lane for those who ventured to rescue their aged parents, and pluck them out of the jaws of death.

By the same arts at this day the Lady of Loretto, as they call her, hath her Churches so stuffed with vowed presents and memories, as they are fain to hang their Cloisters and Churchyards with them. The rood of grace in this Kingdom had a man within it, enclosed with an hundred wiers to make the image goggle with the eyes, nod with the head, hang the lip, move and shake his jaws according as the value was of the gift that was offered. If it were a small piece of silver, he would hang a frowning lip; if a piece of gold, then should his jaws go merrily. The like was done by the blood of Hales, brought afterwards by the Lord Cromwell to Pauls Cross, and there proved to be the blood of a Duck. In the year 1505. Pope Alexander sent a Bull of pardons for money into England; dispensing thereby with such as kept away, or by any fraud had gotten the goods of other men, which they should now retain still without scruple of conscience; so as they paid a ratable portion thereof to his Holiness his receivers. Thus have you made the Commandment of none effect] Ye have sought to shoulder God out of his throne, to devest and spoil him of his rule and authority, to ungod him as it were, by making his Commandment void and invalid. And do not Papists as much as all this, whiles they teach that a Monk may not leave his cloister, to relieve his father, but must rather see and suffer him to dye for hunger in the streets? Lyra hath these very words, Filius per professionem factam in religione, excusatur à subveniendo parentibus. This Lyra was a famous English Jew, but an arrant Papist, as for most part, all were then; for he flourished, Anno 1320.

Verse 7. Well did Isaias prophecy of you] Of such as you, and so of you too. The Prophets and Apostles then spake not of them only with whom they lived, and to whom they wrote (as the Jesuites blaspheme) but their oracles and doctrines do extend still to men of the same stamp and making. In the volumn of thy book it is written of me, saith David; he found his own name in Gods book. The reverence they shew (saith Sir Edwin Sands, who saw it) is in standing up at times, and the gesture of adoration, in the bowing forward of their bodies. For kneeling they use none (no more do the Grecians) neither stir they their bonnets in their Synagogues to any man; but remain still covered. They come to it with washen hands, and in it they burn lamps to the honour of God: but for any shew of devotion or elevation of spirit, that yet in Jews could I never discern: but they are as reverend in their Synagogues, as Grammer-boys are at school, when their master is absent. In sum, their holiness is the very outward work it self, being a brainless head, and soulless body. Thus he.

And honoreth me with their lips] But prayer is not the labour of the lips, but the travel of the heart; the power of a petition is not in the roof of the mouth, but root of the heart. To give way to wilful distractions, is to commit spiritual whoredom in Gods presence. Is it fit to present the King with an empty cask? or to tell him a tale with our backs towards him? Behold, I am a great King, saith God; and they that stand before him, must look to their feet, saith Solomon, that they stand upright, and that they offer not an heartless sacrifice, for that is the sacrifice of fools, and ever held ominous.

But their heart is far from me] And so all they do is putid hypocrisie. God loves truth in the inward parts, Psal. 41. 6. and calls for the heart in all services; as Joseph did for Benjamin, as David did for Michal, Thou shalt not see my face, unless thou bring it. In all spiritual Sacrifices we must bring him the fat and the inwards. The deeper and hollower the belly of the Lute or Viol is, the pleasanter is the sound; the fleeter, the more grating and harsh in our ears. The voyce which is made in the mouth is nothing so sweet, as that which cometh from the depth of the breast, Ephes. 6. 6. Do the will of God from the heart. But wo be to all careless Professors, to all loose and ungirt Christians; the Lord will make all the Churches to know that he searcheth the hearts and reigns, and that he will kill with death all such as had rather seem to be good, then seek to be so.

Verse 10. And he called the multitude] The Pharisees, those deaf adders, sith they would not be charmed, Christ will lose no more sweet words upon them; but turns them up as desperate, with this inscription on their fore-heads, Noluerunt incantari; I would have healed these hypocrites, but they would not be healed. Yea, When I would have healed Ephraim, then (to cross me) their iniquity was discovered, as the leprosie in their fore-heads. Verse 11. Not that which goeth into the man, &c.] Whether with clean or foul hands, taken meat makes not the man guilty of Gods wrath. What? Not if abused to surfeting and drunkenes? saith Bellarmine, who is angry with Christ for this Doctrine (as making against theirs directly) and therefore seeks to disprove him. We answer for and with Christ: that he speaks here of the moderate use of meats, which is indifferent. As for the abuse of it to surquedry and excess, this is an evil that cometh out of the heart, and defileth the man, as being a flat breach of the Law of God, who every where condemns it.

Object.

But that which cometh out of the mouth] That is, out of the heart, that muck-hill, thorow the mouth, as thorow a dung-port, that defileth a man worse then any jakes can do. Hence sin is called filthiness, abomination, the vomit of a dog, the Devils excrements, &c. The very visible heavens are defiled by it, and must therefore be purged by fire, as those vessels were that held the sin-offering. As for the soul, sin sets such engrained stains upon it, as nothing can fetch out, but the blood of Christ that spotless Lamb.

Verse 15. Declare unto us this Parable] It was no Parable, but a plain discourse, and easie to be understood, had not they been dull of hearing, and somewhat soured with the Pharisaical leaven of the necessity of washing hands afore meat; though for that time, by a singular Providence of God, they neglected; which both gave occasion to the Pharisees quarrel, and to this question, whereto our Saviour maketh a most plain and plenary answer.

1 Tim. 4. 15. Annis adhuc pro annis, at these years; now that you are at full stature, and in your full vigour?

Verse 16. Do not ye yet understand?] What? Not at these years, and after so long standing? Will ye stand, till ye waxe sour again, and not give your selves wholly to to these things, that your profiting may appear to all? Is it not a shame to have no more wit at sixty year old, then at six? to be always learning, yet never come to the knowledge of the truth? Verse 17. Whatsoever entereth in at the mouth] In nature, Animantis cujusq; vita est fuga: Life, were it not for the repair by daily nourishment, would be soon extinguished. Hence it is called, The life of our hand, because maintained by the labour of our hands. But that which our Saviour here driveth at, is, to set forth the ridiculous madness of the Pharisees, whiles they placed a kind of holiness in those things that were evacuated and thrown into the draught. And do not Papists the very same? Qui gustavit ovum trahitur in carcerem, cogiturq; de hæresi causam dicere, saith Erasmus. To eat flesh, or but an egg in Lent, is punished with death. Whereas in the year of Christ 330. Spiridion a godly Bishop in Cyprus, having not what else ready to set before a guest that came to him in the Lent, set him a piece of pork to feed on. And when the stranger made scruple of eating flesh in Lent, saying, I am a Christian, and may not do it: Nay, therefore thou maist do it, said he, because to the pure all things are pure, and the Kingdom of God consisteth not in meats and drinks, &c.

Epist. ad Episc. Basilien. de delectu ciborum.

Rom. 14.

Verse 18. Come forth from the heart] That forth of sin, and fountain of folly: for as a fountain casteth forth her waters, so doth the heart of man cast out its wickedness, Ier. 6.7. and if the tongue be a world of wickedness. Jam. 2. what is the heart, that seminary of sin, wherein is a παντσπερμια as Empedocles saith in Aristotle. In this Sea are not only that Leviathan the Devil (who there sets up his forts and strong holds, 2 Cor. 10.4. and doth entrench and incage himself) but creeping things innumerable, Psal. 104.26. making that which should be the Temple of God a den of thieves, a pallace of pride, a slaughter-house of malice, a brothel-house of uncleanness, a raging Sea of sin, Isa. 57.20. a little hell of black and blasphemous imaginations. The natural man lies rotting in the grave of corruption, wrapt up in the winding-sheet of hardness of heart, and blindness of mind; and (as a carcase crawleth with worms) swarming with those noisome lusts, that were able to poison up an honest heart.

As in that Chaos. Gen. 1. were the seeds of all creatures; so in the heart, of all sins.

Verse 19. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts] These are the first and immediate issue of the sinfull soul: words and deeds, Borborology and enormity follow in their order. And I dare be bold to say (saith a reverend Divine) that though the act contract the guilt, because the lust is then grown up to an height, so that it is come to an absolute will in execution, yet the act of adultery and murther is not so abominable in Gods eyes, as the filthiness of the spirit: for it is the spirit that he mainly looks to, &c. Think not then that thought is free, for as inward bleeding will kill, so will concupiscence, whatever the Papists say in favour of it, as a condition of nature: and hence flow most of their most dangerous opinions, as justification by works, state of perfection, merit, supererogation, &c.

D. Preston of Gods Attributes.

Verse 20. These are the things which defile a man] Make him a loathsome leper in Gods sight, his heart being a filthy dunghill of all abominable vices, his life a long chain of sinfull actions, a very continued web of wickedness. And whereas Repentance is the souls vomit, and Confession the spunge that wipes out all the blots and blurts of our lives, that cunning manslayer holds the lips close that the heart may not disburden it self by so wholesome evacuation, and doth what he can to hinder the birth of Repentance, that fair and happy daughter of an uggly and odious mother, sin.

Verse 21. Into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon] That royal exchange of the world, as one calleth it. Hither retired our Saviour, as tired out with the Jews perverseness. And here its like he did much good, according to that was Propheſied, Isa. 23.18. Sure it is, that whereas here he would have hid himself, he could not, for the woman of Canaan came and fell at his feet as a suppliant for her daughter.

Verse 22. And cryed unto him] One coppy hath it, And cryed behind him: which implies either that Christ had turned his back upon her, seeing her now coming towards him; or else that she was abashed to come into his presence, as being of an accursed kindred, devoted to destruction.

backs, as David did, and be humbled, labouring to mend by education, what we have marred by propagation.

Thou son of David] Thou that wast thy self born of a woman, pity a woman: thou that hast the bowels of a man in thee, hide not thine eyes from thine own flesh.

My daughter is grievously vexed with a devil] The Devil doth his worst to her, therefore help. Misery makes men eloquent, beyond truth many times: But surely this womans case was very dolefull. It was her daughter, dear to her as her own soul. Filia quasi φιλή. The Greeks call children φίλτατα, the Latines Cara. And those at Rome, that prayed and sacrificed whole days that their children might be superstites, long-lived, these were first called superstitious persons. Quod nomen patuit postea latiùs, saith Cicero. The word afterwards came to be of larger signification. This (perhaps only) daughter, was vexed and grievously vexed, and that of a devil: who ever busie enough to do mischief, yet then chiefly bestirred him to set up his Kingdom, when Christ came to pull it down, and as he once strove with Michael about a dead mans body, but it was that he might thereby set up himself in living mens souls: So he still seeks to possess himself of our bodies, that thereby he may the better winde and work himself into our hearts.

Verse 23. But he answered her not] Tacet ore, sed loquitur ei Spiritu, ut fortiùs clamet, saith an interpreter. Christ answereth her not with his mouth, but speaketh unto her by that sweet and secret voice of his spirit, to cry louder. No man prays heartily but he hath so much comfort at least, that he will come again to God, who secretly supports his suppliants, and by that peace unconceivable guards their hearts and minds that they pray and faint not.

ἐρεύγεται. Philip. 4. 7.

Send her away, for she cries] Men may be tired out with uncessant suits, as the unjust Judge was, and as these Disciples were weary to hear the poor womans outcries, repeating the same request over and over: Give her therefore, say they, either an almes or an answer; that she may be silenced, and we eased. But it is otherwise with God, the oftner we come to him the better welcome: the louder we cry, the sooner we are heard: and the often repetition of the self-same Petition, till we put the Lord out of countenance, put him (as you would say) to the blush, and even leave a blot in his face; as the Greek word signifies, Luke 18. 5. this is the best melody we can make him. He looks out of the casements of heaven on purpose to hear it.

Verse 24. But unto the lost sheep, &c.] He was properly the Apostle of the Circumcision, Rom. 15. 8. Heb. 3. 1. till the wall of partition was broken down by his resurrection. Then the Vail rent, and it was open-tide. Then he became light to lighten the Gentiles, as well as he was the glory of his people Israel.

Verse 25. Then came she and worshipped him] She will not be said nay, or set down, either with silence or sad answers; but, like another Gorgonia, she threatens heaven, and is (as her brother speaks of her) modestly impudent and invincible. She will believe, as a man may say with reverence, whether Christ will or no. And to bring her to this it was, that he so long held her off, for, Desideria dilata crescunt: at citò data, vilescunt. Mannah, that light meat, was but lightly set by, because lightly come by. But they that earn it before they eat it, and that know how they come by that they have, will set an high price upon it, and know how and why they part with it.

Lord, help me] Few words, but very forcible. When thou comest before God, let thy words be few, saith Solomon. This St. Peter calls to be sober in prayer, 1 Pet. 4 7. without trifling, or vain babling, which the wise man calls the sacrifice of fools. The Baalites prayer was not more tedious, then Eliah's short, and yet more pithy then short: charging God with the care of his Covenant, Truth, Glory, &c. It was Eliah that praid loud and long, though in few words, yet very effectual. Fratres Egyptiaci brevissimis & raptim jaculatis orationibus uti volucrunt (saith Augustine) ne per moras evanesceret & hebetaretur intentio. Those ancient Christians of Egypt were very brief in their prayers.

Credere invisibilia, sperare dilata, & amare Deum se ostendentem contrarium. Luth. Isa. 30. 18.

that well resolved Christian, whose part Luther saith it is to believe things invisible, to hope for things deferred, and to love God when he shews himself most angry with him, and most opposite to him. Our Saviour was no sooner gone from this Canaanites, but he heals the deaf and dumb man (though far weaker in faith then her) at first word, Mark 7. 33. and ver. 30. of this chapter the Galileans no sooner laid their sick and lame friends at his feet, but he cured them without any more ado. He is a God of judgement, and knows how and when to deal forth his favours. He lays heaviest burdens on the strongest backs, and proportions our afflictions to our abilities, holding us off for deliverance, till he finds us fit for it: and giving us hearts to wait, and want it till his time is come.

Verse 27. Truth Lord] Ναὶ Κύριε. This is particula assentientis & obsecrantis. How strangely doth God enable and enlarge his weak people many times in prayer? they are carried beyond themselves in a wonderful manner, and though otherwise rude in speech, and unlettered, yet then they have words at will, far above natural apprehension, and such as they are not able to repeat again: being for the time, lost in the endless maze of spiritual ravishments, and ascending, with the Church, in those pillars of incense, out of this wilderness of the world.

Yet, the dogs eat of the crumbs] Lo she locks her self within Christs denial, and picks an argument of speeding out of a repulse; she gathereth one contrary out of another by the force of her faith. See the like, Deut. 32. 36. 2 King. 14. 26. Going into Captivity was a sign of the Israelites returning out of Captivity. Be it that I am a dog saith this brave woman yet some crumbs of comfort, Lord. Dogs, though they may not eat the childrens meat (if they offer to do it, they are shut out of doors) yet if children full-fed crumble their meat, and make waste of it, as they will, and as the Jews now do, may not the Gentile-dogs lick up those leavings? Thus she reasons it, and thus she makes use of any thing she can lay hold of, whereby she may hope the better to prevail. Those that are hunger-starved are glad to feed upon hedge-fruit, and will make hard shift rather then perish. So, faithfull hearers are not delicate, but can suffer an exhortation, bear a reproof, yea suck hony, with the bee, out of bitter thime.

Heb. 13.

Verse 28. O woman, great is thy faith] Our Saviour had both reproached and repulsed her. Now he both graceth and gratifieth her; grants her request and more, together with an high commendation of her heroical faith, which is here found aforehand to praise and honor and glory, 1 Pet. 1. 7.

Verse 29. And came nigh to the Sea of Galilee] Where though he had lately been tired out, yet he'l try again. Ministers must have patience with a perverse people, not resolving, as Jeremy once in a pelt, to speak no more to them in the name of the Lord, but proving if at any time God will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, &c. 2 Tim. 2. 25. I beseech you (said Mr. Bradford to one with whom he had taken great pains, but to no great purpose) I pray you, I desire you, I crave at your hands with all my very heart; I ask of you with hand, pen, tongue, and mind, in Christ, for Christ, through Christ, for his name, blood, mercy, power and truths sake, my most entirely beloved, that you admit no doubting of Gods final mercies toward you, howsoever you feel your self, &c. Of this good Martyr it is said, that in travelling with his own heart he would never give over till he had made somewhat of it, as in confession, till his heart melted, in seeking pardon till quieted, in begging grace, till warmed and quickned: so in dealing with others he practised that which St. Austin perswadeth every preacher to do, so long to beat upon and repeat the same point, till by the countenance, but especially by the conversation of his hearers, he perceive that they resent and relish it. Knowing the terror of the Lord, saith Paul, we perswade men; we give them not over till we have prevailed with them and subdued them, though never so knotty and knorly.

All corruptions, temptations, afflictions, which stand, some above us, some about us (as the insulting Philistims about blind Sampson) shall end with the same blow, fall with the same clap with our selves. At Stratford bow were two Martyrs burned at one stake (in the days of Queen Mary) Hugh Laverock an old lame man, and John A Price a blind man. Act. and Mon. fol. 1733.

Verse 31. They glorified the God of Israel] They saw God in those miraculous cures, and gave him his due praise. He is content that we should have the comfort of his benefits, so he may have the glory of them; that's all the rent and return he looks for. All the fee Christ required for his cures was, Go and tell what God hath done for thee, Go shew thy self to the Priest, and offer, &c. But we, instead of being temples of Gods praise, become many times graves of his benefits. This made good David so oft to put the thorn to his breast, Psal. 103.1,2,3. and King Alphonsus not so much to wonder at his Courtiers ingratitude to him, as at his own to God.

Verse 32. I have compassion on the multitude] My bowels yearn towards them. Neither is he less loving now that he is in heaven, towards his poor penniless necessitous people on earth; but when they are hardest put to't, and haply have not a cross to bless themselves with, as the proverb is, he so graciously provides, that though the young lions (or the strong ones, as the Septuagint have it) do lack and suffer hunger, yet they that seek the Lord want nothing thats good for them. Aaron though he might not bewail the death of his two sons, Lev. 10. because he was High-priest, yet his bowels of fatherly affection towards them could not be restrained. And so he doth still, recount how many years, days, hours we have spent with him: what straits, losses, heats, colds, dangers, difficulties we have encountred with and passed thorow; all is exactly registred in his book of remembrance: I know thy work, and thy labour, saith he, Rev. 2. Men take much pains many times, and none regard it, reward it. But Christ takes notice, not of his peoples works only, but of their labour in doing them, that he may fully recompence their labour of love, their loss of goods, &c. the godly shall know in themselves, not only in others, in books, &c. that they have a better, and an enduring substance, Heb. 10.34.

Verse 33. Whence should we have, &c.] See their stupidity and diffidence, yet still budging and breaking out, upon all occasions. What a life hath Christ with the best of us, ere he can bring us to any thing? Corruption will have some flurts, some out-bursts. Nothing cleaves to us more pertinaciously then this evil heart of unbelief, like a fretting leprosie in our cottages of clay, though the walls be well scraped, yet it will never utterly out, till the house be demolished.

Verse 34. Seven, and a few little fishes] Before, he had fed five thousand with fewer loaves. As if he break the staffe of bread, that is, his own blessing, which is the staffe whereon bread (that staffe of life) leaneth, it can neither feed nor fill, make men neither fuller, nor fatter.

CAme forth, ſaith St. Mark, to wit out of the coaſts of Magdala, ſo ſoon as ever our Saviour arrived there, to quarrel him, and keep him from doing good. So active are the Devils inſtruments to hinder the Kingdom of God, and the good of ſouls. Truth never wants an adverſary; ſhe goes ſeldom without a ſcratcht face, as the Proverb is. The Phariſees and Sadducees, though at deadly difference betwixt themſelves, yet can eaſily combine againſt Chriſt. So at this day, the Prieſts diſparage the Jeſuits, the Jeſuits the Prieſts, the Prieſts again the Monks, the Monks the Friers, but they can all conſpire againſt Proteſtants, whom they joyntly perſecute. Dogs, though they fight never ſo fierce, and mutually entertear one another, yet, if a Hare run by, they give over, and run after her. Martial makes mention of a Hare on the Sicilian ſhore, that having hardly eſcaped the hounds that hunted her, was devoured by a Sea dog; whereupon he brings her in thus complaining;

The ancient Antitrinitarians ſet forth a baſe book of their Doctrines under Cyprians name, and ſold it dog-cheap, that men might the ſooner buy it, and be led by it, as Ruffinus complains. Take heed and beware of ſuch: ye are not ignorant of their wiles.

Of the Pharisees, and of the Sadduces.] Κακοὶ μὲν θείτης, κακὸι δὲ ἰχθύες. Never a barrel better herring. Howbeit the Sadduces affected, by their very name, to be held the only just men, haply because they held, that all the reward that righteous men are to look for, is here in this world. The occasion of this heresie is said to be this. When Antigonus taught, that we must not serve God for wages, his scholars understood him, as if he had utterly denied all future rewards or recompence attending a godly life: and thence framed their heresie, denying the Resurrection, world to come, Angels, Devils, and lived as Epicures and Libertines.

Verse 7. It is because we have taken no bread] Oh the dulness that is in the best to receive or retain heavenly mysteries! Surely, as Owls see best by night, and are blind by day: so in deeds of darkness we are sharp-sighted, wise to do evil; but in spirituals, we are blinder then beetles, our wits serve us not, we are singularly stupid and stubborn.

Verse 8. O ye little of faith!] Fides famem non formidat. It was want of faith that made them fear they should perish in the wilderness for lack of bread: God was better to them then their fears. He makes the best living of it, that lives by faith: Feed on faith; So Tremellius reads that, Psal. 37. 3.

Why reason ye amongst your selves?] They likely laid the fault of forgetfulness one upon another: but none found fault with himself for his unbelief, and carnal reasoning.

Verse 9. Neither remember] Tantum didicimus, quantum meminimus. So much we learn as we remember. Our memories are naturally like hour-glasses, no sooner filled with good instructions and experiments, then running out again. It must be our prayer to God, that he would put his finger upon the hole, and so make our memories like the pot of Mannah, preserving holy truths in the Ark of the soul.

Verse 10. Neither the seven loaves.] Learn to lay up experiences. If we were well read in the story of our own lives (saith a Reverend man) we might have a Divinity of our own. The Philosopher saith, that experience is multiplex memoria, because, of the memory of the same thing often done, ariseth experience, which should be the nurse of confidence.

Verse 11. How is it that ye understand not?] Ignorance under means is a blushfull sin. The Scripture calls such, Horses, Asses, Mules, and sends them to school to unreasonable creatures.

Verse 12. Then understood they how, &c.] This chiding then was well bestowed. So was that, Luke 24. 29. upon the two Disciples going to Emaus, and that upon the Virgin Mary, Joh. 2. 5. she laid her hand upon her mouth and replied not. And that upon the Corinthians for conniving at the incestuous person, and that upon the Laodiceans, Rev. 3. 14. for Eusebius telleth us, that in his time it continued to be a flourishing Church. It is said of Gerson, that he took not content in any thing so much, as in a plain and faithful reproof from his friend. It is a commendation to suffer the words of exhortation, Heb. 13.

In vita Gerson.

Verse 13. Whom do men say that I, &c.] This Question Christ asked, not as tickled with ambition to hear his own commendation (which yet is held and said to be the only sweet hearing) but as taking occasion to make way for their Christian confession, and likewise for their further information.

ἥδιον ἄκουσμα ἑαυτοῦ. Xenophon.

The son of man am?] So he was called. 1. Because a true man. 2. Because he passed for no more then an ordinary man. How can this man give us his flesh to eat? Joh. 6. 3. Because as man born of a woman, he was of few days and full of trouble: yea, he was the man that had seen affliction by the rod of Gods wrath.

Verse 14. Some say that thou art John, &c.] His body they saw was not John's, but they held then (and the Jews at this day hold) the Pythagorean transanimation, or passing of souls out of one body into another. So, because they received not the love of the truth, God gave them up to the efficacy of error, even the better sort of them: for there were that held Christ neither the Baptist, nor Elias, but a drunkard, a demoniack, &c. Who now can think to escape variety of censures? And why should any stumble at the diversity of opinions touching Christ and his Kingdom?

2 Thes 2. 11.

Verse 15. But whom say ye that I am?] q. d. It behoveth you to say something, that is, better to the purpose, then the vulgar saith and censureth God will take that of some that he will not of others. Christ would not have his to stand doubtful, and to adhere to nothing certainly: to be in Religion as idle beggars are in their way, ready to to go which way ſoever the ſtaff falleth; but to ſtrive to a plerophory, a full aſſurance of knowledge, a certainty, as Luke hath it, Chap. 1.4. and to be fully perſwaded, verſe 1. A conjectural confidence, a general faith, the Colliers faith, as they call it, ſufficeth not, To believe as the Church believes, &c. And yet Thomas Aquinas, that great Schoolman had no better a faith to ſupport him at the laſt hour of his life: nor could he have any reſt within, till he had taken up the Bible, and clipping it in his arms, ſaid, Lord, I believe all that is written in this holy book.

Verſe 16. Simon Peter anſwered, &c.] As the mouth of the company, and one that being, haply, elder, and ſurely bolder then the reſt, ſpake thus for them. But what a foul mouth of blaſphemy opened thoſe two Popes (Peters pretended ſucceſſors) Leo the firſt, and Nicolas the third, that boaſted, that Peter was taken into fellowſhip of the individual Trinity? Neither can that be excuſed that Hierom commenteth on the former verſes (Whom do men ſay that I am? But whom ſay ye that I am?) that our Saviour there purpoſely oppoſeth his Diſciples to men, to intimate that they were ſomething more then men. This is ſomething like that Note of a Latin Poſtiller upon Exod. 30.31. where, becauſe it is ſaid, Verſe 32. Upon mans fleſh the holy oyntment ſhall not be poured, Thou ſhalt anoint Aaron and his ſons therewith, thence infers, that Prieſts are Angels, and have not humane fleſh. Theſe were humane gloſſes, and ſavoured as little of Gods meaning, as that unſavory ſpeech of Peter, verſe 22. of this Chapter, for the which he heareth, Get thee behind me, Satan; thou ſavoureſt not, &c.

Thou art Chriſt the Son of the living God] A ſhort confeſſion, but ſuch as in few, containeth whatſoever we believe concerning the perſon and office of Chriſt, Brevis & longa planeq; aurea eſt hæc confeſſio. Well may we ſay of it, as S. Bartholomew (quoted by Dionyſius) did of the Doctrine of Divinity, that it is, Καὶ πολλὰ ἁ ὀλίγα, Little and yet large.

ὀλίγα τὰ ὅ τε τὰ πολλά. Singulæ dictiones ſuos habent articulos ἐμφατικὰς adjectos. Aret.

Verſe 17. Bleſſed art thou, Simon] Theſe, and the following words of our Saviour to Peter, were meant to all the Apoſtles alſo, John 20.22,23. Chriſt took his beginning of one, to teach unity in his Church, in the confeſſion of faith. Note this againſt the Papiſts, who miſerably wreſt, and deprave this text, to the proying of the Papal Monarchy. Gregory the great, though he ſtiled himſelf a ſervant of Gods ſervants, and deteſted the Pope of Conſtantinople for arrogating the title of Univerſal Biſhop, during the raign of Mauritius; yet when he was ſlain, and ſucceeded by the Traytor Phocas, he ceaſed not to flatter the ſame Phocas, to commend unto him the care of the Church of Rome, and to exhort him to remember this ſaying of our Saviour, Thou art Peter, &c. and for no other end; then that he might extend his power by the favour of the parricide.

Iac. Revius, hiſt. Pontif.

Verſe 18. Thou art Peter] i.e. Thou art a living ſtone in the ſpiritual Temple, like as Peter ſaith all other Chriſtians are, 1 Pet. 2.5. And here Chriſt tells Peter why at firſt he gave him that name.

Upon this Rock] That is, upon this thy rocky, thy ſolid and ſubſtantial confeſſion of me. Auſtin ſaith, the Rock is Chriſt, not Peter. But this, ſaith Stapleton, is humanus lapſus in Auguſtino. So the Schoolmen ſay, that S. Auſtin ſtood ſo much for grace, that he yielded too little to free-will. But it was a true ſaying of learned D. Whitakers in his anſwer to Campian, Patres in maximis ſunt noſtri, in multis varii, in minimis veſtri. Not Peter, but Phocas is the right craggy rock upon which the Popiſh Supremacy is founded.

De verb. Dom. Serm. 13. Principiorum l. 6.c.3.

I will build my Church] Chriſt calls not the Church βουλὴν, or σύγκλητον, which is properly a convention of Lords and Stateſmen, but ἐκκλησίαν, which is an Aſſembly of the common people, even thoſe of the lower rank and condition; according to that 1 Cor. 1. 26. and Luke 1.48. he hath regarded the low eſtate of his hand-maiden.

ἐκκλησιάζειν, eſt concionari, cum populo agere. Cameron.

And the gates of hell, &c.] That is, all the power and policy of hell combined. The Devil lendeth his inſtruments, the Churches enemies, his ſeven heads to plot, and his ten horns to puſh. Craft and cruelty go together in them, as the Aſp never wanders alone; and as the Scripture ſpeaks of thoſe birds of prey, Iſa. 34. 16 None of them wants his mate. But yet all this ſhall not prevail: The Devil may ſhake his chain at the Saints, not ſet his fangs in them. For why? they ſtand upon a rock that is higher then they, ſo that the floods of temptations and oppoſitions cannot come ſo much as at their feet; or if they reach to the heel, yet they come not at the head; or if they ſhould daſh higher upon them, yet they break themſelves.

Shall not prevail against it] No, though the Devil should discharge at the Church his greatest Ordnance; say they were as big as those two cast by Alphonsus Duke of Ferrara, the one whereof he called the Earthquake, and the other Grandiabolo, or the great Devil.

Quest. Whether may the Catholick Church erre in fundamentals?

Answ. It is answered, that though the universal Church of Christ, taken for his mystical body upon earth, and complete number of his Elect, cannot erre in matters fundamental, yet the external visible part of the Church may erre, because the truth of God may be locked up within the hearts of such a company, as in competition of suffrages, cannot make a greater part in a general Council; so that the sentence decreed therein, may be a fundamental errour.

Verse 19. And I will give unto thee the keys,] i.e. I will make thee and all my Ministers stewards in my house, 1 *Cor.*4.1. such as Obadiah was in Ahabs house, as Eliakim in Hezekiahs, upon whose shoulder God laid the key of the house of David, so that he opened and none shut, and shut and none opened, Isa. 22. 22. Now let a man so think of us Ministers, how mean soever, and we shall not want for respect.

Verse 20. That they should tell no man] viz. Till the due time. Every thing is beautiful in its season, saith Solomon. Taciturnity in some cases is a vertue, as here. The Disciples might preach that Christ the Son of David was come to save the world; though they might not particularly point him out, as the Son of the living God: which when Pilate himself heard, he was afraid, saith the text, and sought to deliver him.

Eccles. 3.

Verse 21. How that he must go to Jerusalem] He must, necessitate non simplici, sed ex supposito. It being supposed that God had decreed this way (and no other) to glorifie himself in mans salvation by the death of his dear Son (wherein the naked bowels of his love were laid open to us, as in an anatomy) it was necessary that Christ should be killed and raised again at the third day, Voluntas Dei, necessitas rei.

And be killed and raised again] That we might live and raign with him for ever, who else had been killed with death, as the phrase is, *Rev.*2.23. that is, had come under the power of the second death. David wished he might have dyed for Absolom, such was his love to him. Arsinoe interposed her self between the murtherers weapons, sent by Ptolomy her brother, to kill her children. The Pellican not only feeds her young with her own blood, but with invincible constancy abides the flames of fire for their preservation. Christ is that good Shepherd, who gave his life for his sheep: He is that true Pellican, who saw the wrath of God burning about his young ones, and cast himself into the midst thereof, that he might quench it. He was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification, which began in his death, but was perfected by his resurrection.

Verse 22. Then Peter took him] Took him by the hand, and led him apart, as we do those we are most intimate with, in great courtesie and secresie, to impart to them things of greatest importance. Peter was strongly possest with a fond conceit of an earthly Kingdom; and as Joseph dreamt of his preferment, but not at all of his imprisonment; so neither could Peter think or hear of Christs being killed, whom he had even now confessed to be the Christ, the Son of the living God. See here how easily we slide, by the deceitfulness of our hearts, from the mean to the extream. Peter having made a notable profession of his faith, and being therefore much commended by Christ, presently takes occasion to fall from the true holiness of faith, to the sawciness of presumption, in advising his Master to decline the cross.

And began to rebuke him, saying,] No, he did not rebuke him, saith Maldonat the Jesuit, but friendly counselled him only, as if ἐπιτιμᾶν were not to chide and charge, as masters do their servants, even with threatnings and menaces. But these Patrons of Peter (as they pretend) will not abide that he should be blamed for any thing. Baronius blusheth not to say (and so to put the lye upon the Holy Ghost himself) that Paul was out in reproving Peter, Gal.2.14. and that it had been better manners for him to have held his tongue. Others of them have blasphemously censured S. Paul in their Sermons, as a hot-headed person, of whose assertions go great reckoning was to be made by the sober-minded; and that he was not secure of his preaching, but by conference with S. Peter, neither durst he publish his Epistles, till S. Peter had allowed them.

Verſe 23. Get thee behind me, Satan] Come behind as a Diſciple, go not before me as a Teacher: underſtand thy diſtance, and hold thee to thy duty, by moving in thine own ſphere; that thou be not thus odiouſly eccentrick, another Satan, who ſets thee a work thus to tempt me, as he once did Eve to ſeduce Adam; Here Maldonat is hard put to it, to ſave Peter blameleſs, and ſaith, that, Get thee behind me is an Hebrew phraſe, and imports no more then Follow me. But when he comes to conſider that Chriſt calls him Satan, and that it would not be ſeemly that Chriſt ſhould bid Satan follow him, he is forced to confeſs that it is the ſpeech of one that bids another be packing out of his preſence with indignation, like that of Chriſt to the tempter, Mat. 4. Get thee hence, Satan. Profit tibi ſtercutatio tua, Maldonate. When the Executioner wiſhed Polycarp to be merciful to himſelf, he bad him hold his peace; he was his tormentor, not his Counſellor.

Thou art an offence unto me] Thou doeſt thy good will to hinder me in the courſe of my calling, as Mediator, wherein, ſay ſome, he ſinned more grievouſly then afterwards he did in denying his Maſter, and was therefore ſo ſharply rebuked. So when Socrates was ſollicited by Criton to break priſon, and ſave his life by flight. Friend Criton, ſaid he, thine earneſtneſs herein were much worth, if it were conſiſtent with uprightneſs; but being not ſo, the greater it is, the more troubleſom. I know not (ſaid that Scotch Martyr) by what reaſon they ſo called them my friends, which ſo greatly laboured to convert (pervert) me. Neither will I more eſteem them then the Midianites, which in times paſt called the children of Iſrael to do ſacrifice to their Idols.

But the things that be of men] Erewhile it was of Satan, now of men. How eaſie is it to deſcry a Devil in our beſt friends ſometimes, as Rebezies the French Martyr did in his parents? Satan ſuborns ſuch as may do much with us, and works in them effectually for our hurt, as a Smith doth in his forge, Epheſ. 2.2. They were tempted, and thereby tormented, ſaith the Apoſtle of thoſe Worthies, Heb. 11.37. Satan ſpeaks to us ſometimes by our friends, as thorow trunks and canes.

Verſe 24. If any man will come after me] Not ſtep before me, preſcribe to me, as Peter attempted to do, whoſe fault herein is purpoſely recorded, that he might not be (as by the Papiſts, for politick reſpects, he is) over-much magnified, nay deified, as is above obſerved, and made collateral, a very copeſmate to Chriſt himſelf.

Let him deny himſelf] Abdicet ſeipſum, Let him abrenounce himſelf flatly, peremptorily, again and again (as the word importeth) with a ſtout and ſtiff denial to ſo unreaſonable a requeſt, as ſelf will be ſure to make to a man his whole life throughout. Every one hath many a ſelf within himſelf to ſay nay to, though never ſo dear to him. Levy ſaid unto his father and to his mother, I have not ſeen him, neither did he acknowledge his brethren, nor knew his own children, that he might obſerve Gods Word, and keep his Covenant, Deut. 33.9. This was much: But he that will be Chriſts Diſciple, muſt do more then this: He muſt deny himſelf, his own reaſon, will, affections, appetite, aims, ends, acts, righteouſneſs, &c. he muſt utterly renounce himſelf, as much as if he had nothing at all to do with himſelf. Yea, he muſt condemn and caſt away himſelf, as God doth thoſe reprobates, whom he denieth, diſowneth and diſavoweth for ever. Horreo quicquid de meo eſt ut ſim meus, ſaith Bernard. Ita cave tibi ut caveas teipſum, ſaith another. So take heed to your ſelf, that you take heed of your ſelf. Oh miſery! ſaith a third; we could not ſuffer a Lord, and yet we ſuſtain to ſerve our fellow-ſervant, ſelf. Valentinian the Emperour dying, affirmed, that he was proud of one of his victories only, viz. That he had overcome his own fleſh, that worſt of enemies. Of all ſlaveries, none ſo grievous to a good heart, as to be ſlave to himſelf. And this yoke of ſlavery, it is an eaſie matter to ſhake off, ſaith Seneca, but he is foully deceived; for a man will ſooner ſay nay to all the world, then to himſelf. This made Robert Smith the Martyr write thus to his wife, Be always an enemy to the devil and the world, but ſpecially to your own fleſh. There are ſome diſeaſes that will not be cured, till we be let blood ad deliquium animæ, till the patient ſwoon: and ſuch is ſin; it is corruptio totius ſubſtantiæ, the ſinner muſt be unmade, taken all aſunder, ere the new creature can be made up in him; he muſt be ſtark dead to ſin, ere he can live to righteouſneſs, as S. Peter hath it; and the word he uſeth there, implyeth, that the old frame muſt be utterly diſſolved, and the whole man done to death, and offered for a whole burnt-offering offering. In stead of a Ram, saith Origen, we must kill our ireful passions; in stead of Goat, our unclean affections; in stead of flying fowls, our idle thoughts and evil imaginations. Lo this is that Evangelical Sacrifice, that rational service so much commended and called for, Rom. 12. 1. Do this, and thou shalt live; leave it undone, and thou art undone for ever. Pray therefore with him, Domine, libera me à malo homine, meipso, Lord, free me from an ill man, my self.

And take up his cross] Where self is renounced, the cross is easily born. It is self (saith one) makes the cross pinch. Things puft up with wind, break when they come to the fire: so those that are puffed up, and filled with self, will suffer nothing. Privation is one of the principles of natural generation, so is self-denial of holy conversation. Fain would this flesh make strange of that which the Spirit doth embrace (said M. Saunders, Martyr, in a letter written to his wife out of the prison.) O Lord how loth is this loitering sluggard to pass forth in Gods path! It fancieth forsooth much fear of fray-bugs, &c. Take up the cross and follow me thorow thick and thin, thorow fire and water; Oh this is an hard saying, saith another Martyr. But if there be any way on horse-back to heaven, surely this is the way. Only we must take up our Cross, be active in it, and not stay till it be laid upon us, whether we will or no. And then bear it patiently, not grin under the burthen of it, as antick pictures seem to do under the weight of the house side whereunto they are fastened. Drink off Gods cup willingly, and at the first (saith M. Bradford) and when it is full; lest peradventure if we linger, we drink at length of the dregs with the wicked, if at the beginning we drink not with his children. We must take up our crosses (saith another) and when God bids us yoke, he is the wisest man that yields his neck most willingly.

Verse 25. For whosoever will save his life] That is parsimonious of it, when Christ calls him to be prodigal of it. Man is naturally a life-loving creature. What man is he that desireth life? I do, and I, and I, as Augustine brings men in, making ready answer. Life is sweet, we say, and every creature makes much of it, from the highest Angel to the lowest worm, as that Father observeth. But life in Gods displeasure is worse then death, as death in his true favour is true life, said Bradford to Gardiner; for such a death lays hold upon eternal life, as S. Paul hath it, 1 Tim. 6. 19. or (as other Copies read it) upon life indeed. For, eterna vita vera vita, saith Augustine. None to that, as David said of Goliahs sword. None but Christ, none but Christ, as that Martyr cryed in the flames. This love of Christ made them sacrifice their deerest lives to his name, yea profess, as John Ardely did to Bonner, That if every hair of his head were a man, he would suffer death in them all for his sweet Christs sake. Irreparable. If therefore to loſe the life for money be a madneſs, what then the ſoul? What wiſe man would fetch gold out of a fiery crucible? hazard himſelf to endleſs woes, for a few wateriſh pleaſures? give his ſoul to the Devil, as ſome Popes did for the ſhort enjoyment of the Papal dignity? What was this but to win Venice, and then to be hanged at the gates thereof, as the Proverb is. In great fires men look firſt to their jewels, then to their lumber: So ſhould theſe ſee firſt to their ſouls, to ſecure them, and then take care of the outward man. The ſouldier cares not how his buckler ſpeeds, ſo his body be kept thereby from deadly thruſts. The Pope perſwading Maximilian (King of Bohemia, afterwards Emperor) to be a good Catholick, with many promiſes of profits and preferments, was anſwered by the King that he thanked his Holineſs; but that his ſouls health was more dear to him then all the things in the world. Which anſwer they ſaid in Rome was a Lutheran form of ſpeech, and ſignified an alienation from the obedience of that Sea; and they began to diſcourſe what would happen after the old Emperors death.

This glory, howſoever it is here called, The glory of the Father, becauſe he is the fountain, as of the Deity, ſo of the Divine glory wherewith Chriſt is crowned, Phil. 2.9. 1 Tim. 3. 16. yet is it his own glory (as he is one with the Father and the holy Ghoſt) and ſo it is called, Mat. 25.31. John 17. 5. Now if Iſrael ſo ſhouted for joy of Solomons coronation, and in the day of his Eſpouſals, that the earth rang again. If the Grecians ſo cryed out Soter, Soter, to Flaminius the Roman General, when he had ſet them at liberty, that the very birds, aſtonied at the noiſe, fell down to the earth: Oh how great ſhall be the Saints joy to ſee Chriſt the King in his beauty and bravery at the laſt judgement?

Verſe 28. Which ſhall not taſte of death] The Saints do but taſte of death only, they do no more but ſip of that bitter cup, which for taſting of that forbidden fruit in the Garden, they ſhould have been ſwilling and ſwallowing down for ever.

Till they ſee the Son of man, &c.] This verſe is to be referred to the transfiguration recorded in the next Chapter, where ſome of them had the happineſs to ſee Chriſt in his Kingdom; that is, in his heavenly glory, whereof they had a glimpſ.

Chap. XVII.

Verse 1. And after six days]

Luke 9. 28. Luke saith, about eight days after. It comes all to one. For Matthew puts exclusively those days only that went between, and were finished; but Luke puts the two utmost days also into the reckoning.

Jesus taketh Peter, James and John] So Matth. 9. when he raised the Damosel, he took with him these three only; haply as best beloved, because bold: Boanergesses, more zealous then the rest, or the better to fit them for further tryal; great feelings oft precede great afflictions. Howsoever, it is no small favour of God to make us witnesses of his great works, and so let us take it. As all Israel might see Moses go toward the Rock of Rephidim, none but the Elders might see him strike it. That God Crucifies his Son before us, that he fetcheth the true water of life out of the Rock in our sight, is an high prerogative. And no less surely, that we are eftsoons transported in prayer, carried out of the body in divine meditation, and lost in the endless maze of spiritual raviſhments; that we return from the publike Ordinances, as Moses did from the Mount, with our faces shining; that we are transfigured and transformed into the same image from glory to glory, and that the Angel of the Covenant doth wondrously, during the time of the sacrifice, whiles Manoah and his wife look on, &c. These are special priviledges communicated to none but the communion of Saints.

And bringeth them up into an high mountain] The name of this mountain no Evangelist expresseth; but by common consent it was mount Tabor (which Josephus calleth Itabirion) whereof Hierom wrieth copiously and elegantly in his Commentary upon the fifth of Hosea. Our Saviour, when he had some special work to do, went usually up into a mountain; to teach us to soar aloft in great performances especially, and to be heavenly-minded, taking a turn or two ever and anon, with Christ in Mount Tabor, treading upon the Moon, with the Church, Rev. 12. 1. having our feet at least where other mens heads are, on things on earth (Prov. 15. 24. The way of life is above to the wise) delighting our selves in high flying, as Eagles, never merry till gotten into the ayr or on the top of trees, with the lesser birds. Zacheus could not see Christ till he had climbed the Fig-tree. Nor can we see the Consolation of Israel till elevated in divine contemplation, till gotten up into Gods holy hill. The people tasted not Mannah, till they had left the leaven of Egypt.

ἔντευξις interpellatio ἐπερώτημα.

And was transfigured before them] This was whiles he was praying, as S. Luke noteth. Prayer rightly performed, is a parling with God, 1 Tim. 2. 1. a standing upon Intergatories with him, 1 Pet. 3. 21. a pouring out of the heart unto him, Psalm 62. 8. a familiar conference with him; wherein the soul is so carried beyond it self otherwhiles, ut caro est penè nescia carnis, as S. Hierom speaks of certain holy women in his time, that they seemed in place only remote, but in affection to joyn with that holy company of heaven. So Dr. Preston on his death-bed said, he should change his place, but not his company. Peter praying fell into a trance. Cornelius praying saw heavenly visions. Mr. Bradford, a little before he went out of the Counter, prayed with such plenty of tears and abundant spirit of prayer, that it raviſhed the minds of the hearers. Also when he shifted himself in a clean shirt made for his burning, he made such a prayer of the Wedding garment, that the eyes of those present were as truly occupied in looking on him, as their ears gave place to hear his prayer. Giles of Brussels, Martyr, was so ardent in his prayers, kneeling by himself in some secret place of the prison, that he seemed to forget himself. Being called many times to meet, he neither heard nor saw them that stood by him, till he was lift up by the arms: and then gently he would speak unto them, as one awaked out of a deep sleep. Amor Dei est ecstaticus —— sui nec se finit esse juris. ——

Ibid. fol. 811.

Verse 3. Moses and Elias appeared] Those immortalitatis Candidati, as the Ancients called them. God had buried Moses, but brought him forth afterwards glorious; the same body which was hid in the valley of Moab, appeareth here in the hill of Tabor.

Christ

Christ by rotting, refines our bodies also; and we know that when he, Who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory, Col. 3. 4. As in the mean space, be not we conformed to this world, but rather transformed by the renewing of our minds; and in whatsoever transfiguration or ravishment we cannot find Moses and Elias, and Christ to meet (as here they did in this sacred Synod) that is, if what we find in us be not agreeable to the Scriptures, we may well suspect it as an illusion. Rom. 12. 2.

Verse 4. Lord, it is good for us to be here] Hic plura absurdè quàm verba. But he knew not what he should say, he was so amused, or rather amazed at that blissful-sight. So Paul, whether in the body, or out of the body, when rapt into the third heaven, he cannot tell, God knoweth; and again, he cannot tell, God knoweth, 2 Cor. 12. 2, 3. Only this he can tell, that he heard ἄῤῥητα ῥήματα, wordless words, such things as words are too weak to utter, and at the thought whereof, Claudicat ingenium, delirat linguaque, mensque.

It is as impossible to comprehend heaven joys, as to compass the heaven with a span, or contain the Ocean in a nutshel. No wonder then though Peter cry out, It is good being here: Or, it is better being here then at Jerusalem (so S. Chrysostome senseth it) whither our Saviour had said he must go, and suffer many things of the Elders, and be killed, &c. That S. Peter liked not; but would build here rather. All men would have heaven, but not the rough way that leads to it; they would enter into Paradise, but not through that narrow portal of afflictions; they would sit in the seat of honor with Zebedees children, but not drink of Christs cup, much less be baptized with his baptism; that is, be dowzed over head and ears in the waters of miseries. They would feed on manchet, tread on roses, and come to heaven, as passengers at sea do many times to the haven, whiles they are sleeping, or before they are aware. But this is no less a folly then a delicacy, thus to think to divide between Christ and his cross, to pull a rose without pricks, to have heaven without hardship.

One for thee, one for Moses, one for Elias] He never thought of one for himself, he was so transported; but he had provided ill for himself and us, if Christ had taken his counsel; for so he should have declined death, whereby life and immortality was brought to light to the Saints. And this unadvised advice was so much the worse in Peter, because but six days before he had been sharply shent by our Saviour, and called Satan for such carnal counsel; and besides that, even then he heard Moses and Elias conferring with Christ about his departure, confirming him against it. It's hard to say how oft we shall fall into the same fault (though foul) if left to our selves. 2 Tim. 1. 12. Luke 9. 31.

Verse 5. Whiles he yet spake] But had no answer (because he deserved it not) to so fooliſh a proposition. Only the Father answereth for the Son, by the Oracle out of the cloud, according to that, I bear not witness to my self, but the Father that sent me, he it is that beareth witness of me. John 8.

A bright cloud overshadowed them] As a curtain drawn betwixt them and the heavenly glory; to the contemplation whereof they were not yet sufficient. Hereby also their senses were drawn off from beholding Christs glory, to hear the voyce from heaven, which by the cloud, as by a chariot, was carried into their ears with greater sound and solemnity. Non loquendum de Deo sine lumine, was a saying of Pythagoras: God may not be mentioned without a light.

This is my beloved Son, in whom] Here God maketh use of three diverse passages and places of his own book, Psa. 2. 7. Isa. 42. 1. Deut. 18. 18. to teach us when we speak, to speak as the Oracles of God, inure our selves to Scripture-language. The voyce also which Christ heard from heaven at his baptism, in his first inauguration is here repeated totidem verbis in his transfiguration, which was no small confirmation to him doubtless; as it was also to Peter and the rest, that this voyce was the same in effect with his and their confession of Christ in the former Chapter, verse 16. Thou art Christ the Son of the Living God. 1 Pet. 4. 11.

In whom I am well pleased] In whom I do acquiesse, and have perfect and full complacency, singular contentment. And as in him, so in us thorow him, Zeph. 3. 17. he rests in his love to his, he will seek no further; effecit nos sibi dilectos in illo Dilecto, he hath made us accepted in that beloved one. Here we have Gods acquittance for our better security. ἐν ᾧ εὐδόκησα.

Hear ye him] As the Arch-prophet of the Church, Deut. 18. 15. that Palmoni-hammedabber, as Daniel calleth him, that excellent Speaker, that Master of Speech that came out of the bosom of his father, and hath his whole mind at his fingers ends, as we say, Hear ye him, Hear none but him, and such as come in his name and word. Hæc vox [hunc audite] summam authoritatem arrogat Christo (saith Erasmus) At nunc videmus passim dormitari ad Christi doctrinam seu crassam ac rudem, & concionis auribus inculcari quid dixerit Scotus, quid Thomas, quid Durandus, &c. But what said S. Augustine? when Manichæus, contesting with him for audience, said, Hear me, Hear me: Nay, said that Father, Nec ego tu, nec tu me, sed ambo audiamus Apostolum, &c. Neither hear thou me, nor I thee, but let us both hear Christ. Cyril saith, that in a Synod at Ephesus, upon an high throne in the Temple, there lay sanctum Evangelium, to shew that Christ was both present and President there. He is Rabbenu Doctor irrefragabilis Padre Cerephino, &c. And if Popish Votaries so observe their Governors, that if they command them a voyage to China or Peru, they presently set forward, to argue or debate upon their Superiors Mandates they hold presumption, to disobey them, sacriledge: How much more should we give this honor, audience and obedience to Christ the wisdom and word of God?

Dan. 8. 13.

Verse 6. They fell on their faces] As amazed and amated with that stupendious voyce that came from the excellent glory, as S. Peter phraseth it, 2 Pet. 1. 17. So Moses and Elias, hid their faces when God spake unto them, as not able to bear his brightness; rottenness entred into their bones. The very Angels cover their faces before him with two of their wings, as with a double scarf, or as one claps his hands upon his face when it lightneth, and flasheth suddenly upon him. What a mercy is it then to us, that we are taught by men like our selves: that we have this treasure in earthen vessels, this pearl of price in a leathern purse? Here lay the three Disciples; and, had not Christ mercifully touched them, and raised them, there they had lain for dead.

Verse 7. Jesus came and touched them] Christ therefore kills his, that he may quicken them; casts them down, that he may revive and raise them in the opportunity of time, Hosea 6. 1, 2. 1 Pet. 5. 6. not so the Devil, that Destroyer, that hath not his names for nought, Apollyon & Abaddon.

Verse 8. Save Jesus alone] To teach them, that Moses and Elias, the Law and Prophets, vail bonnet to Christ; that there is but one Mediator, even the Man Christ Jesus; that there is sufficient in him to satisfie the soul, to comfort the conscience.

Verse 9. Tell the vision to no man] Tacitus, we say, is a good Historian. Taciturnity, we are sure, is in some cases a great vertue, an high commendation. Consus the God of Counsel, had his Temple in Rome, under coverture, saith Servius, ut ostenderet consilium debere esse tectum. There is a time to be silent, saith Solomon. Q. Elizabeths Motto was, Video, Taceo, I see and say nothing. A fit Motto for a Maid, In earth the first, in Heaven the second Maid, as one Poet calleth her. Ministers should know, when and to whom, and in what order to set forth Gods truths; to time a word with a learned tongue, as Isaiah hath it, to set a word upon its wheels, as Solomon, to circumstantiate it so as the people can hear, can bear, as our Saviour did. This is surely an high point of heavenly husbandry. As it is also in all sorts of Christians to be sober in prayer, 1 Pet. 4. 7. that is, as one saith, to keep Gods counsel, not to be proud, or boast of success, or speak of the secret sweetness of Gods love without calling; it is to conceal the familiarity of God in secret.

Bisfield on 1 Pet. 1. page 167.

Verse 10. Why then say the Scribes, &c.] Christ had answered them this question once afore; but they were unsatisfied by any thing he could say, because strongly possest with the conceit of an earthly Kingdom. But the occasion of the question might be this. Our Saviour had forbidden them to tell any man the vision: hence they might thus debate it. Forasmuch as Elias must first come (so the Scribes teach, and they have a text for it, Mal 4. 5.) and now he is come, as we have seen in the Mount, why shouldest thou Lord, forbid us to tell it abroad, sith this might be an effectual argument with the Jews, to move them to acknowledge thee for the true Messias? To this our Saviour answereth.

Verse 11. And restore all things] viz. In Malachies sense, i. e. not simply, absolutely, perfectly; for the royalty of restoring all things so, was reserved for Christ alone, Act. 3. 21. but comparatively to the state of the old Church. So those renowned Reformers, formers, Luther, Farellus, &c. abroad, Cranmer, Cromwell, &c. here at home, freed the Churches from many burdens and bondages, did (for their time) worthily in Ephrata, and are therefore famous in Bethlehem. But as ejusdem non est invenire & perficere (it is a praise proper to Christ only, to be Alpha and Omega, Author and Finisher of that he sets about) those brave men left many abuses and disorders in the Church unrectified, unreformed, which either they did not see, or could not help. But now as more light is diffused, so great thoughts of heart, ye and great hopes are conceived, that God will finish the work; and cut is short in righteousness; that he will cut off the names of the Idols out of the land, and they shall be no more remembred; yea that he will cause the false Prophets, and with them the unclean spirit, to pass out of the land. We shall read Neh. 8. 17, 18. of a feast of Tabernacles so well kept by the Jews newly come out of captivity, with dwelling in booths, and reading every day out of the Law, &c. as had not been done in many hundred years before, no not in the raign of David and Solomon.

Verse 12. But I say unto you that Elias is come] All that is likely to come, however the Papist (as it were to thwart Christ) by depraving that Prophesie in the Revelation touching the two witnesses, which they say are Henoch and Elias, will needs perswade themselves and others, that Elias the Thisbite must come ere Antichrist be revealed. Their arguments I recite not; their Author is Papias, who first devised and divulged this fable. Now Papias that ancient Millenary, scholar to St. John, was a man much respected for opinion of his holiness and learning, but yet homo ingenii pertenuis, saith Eusebius, not much oppress with wit. But had he been never so absolute otherwise, he was surely out in this. And herein we may truly say of him as the Papists fasly said of another, Berengarius cum esset multùm peritus, multùm erravit. But if Papias or any other Ancient or modern Writer should have said so much against the Popish dotages, as this man hath done for them, Bellarmine, likely, would have answered, as in like case he did, to Irenæus, Tertullian, Eusebius and Luther, I answer, They are all arrant hereticks.

And they knew him not] As neither did they the Lord of glory, because God had hid him under the carpenters son. Christians are all glorious within, like the Tabernacle, which was gold within, and goats-hair without: like Brutus his staffe, which as Plutarch reporteth, was gold within, horn without. They are Princes in all lands, but as Princes in forrain land, they are unkent and therefore unkist, as the Northern proverb hath it. But as, had they known, they would never have crucified the Lord of glory: so, did the world know the worth of a Saint, of such a one as was the Baptist especially, they would have given him but too much honor, as Cornelius did Peter, as Chrysostom did Babylas, and as Tertullian did some other Martyrs, to whom writing he says, Nan tantus sum ut vos alloquar, I am not worthy once to speak unto you.

Verse 13. Then the Disciples understood] Different measures of light and grace are given at several times, as God pleaseth to dispense, Job. 12. 16. Joh. 2. 22. Joh. 10. 41, 42. Joseph understood not his own dreams, nor the Eunuch what he read, till afterwards. Wait at Wisdoms gates, wear out her threshold: then shall we know if we follow on to know the Lord, Hos. 6. 3. Beg, and dig for understanding, and thou shalt be sure of it. Prov. 2. 3, 4, 5.

Verse 14. And when they were come to the multitude] That was, the next day after the transfiguration, Luke 9. and in that nick of time, when the Disciples could neither cure the lunatick, nor answer their adversaries, who had now sport enough to see them brought into the briers, and therefore jeered them before the people to some purpose. Most opportunely therefore if ever, comes Christ to their succor, as it were out of an engine, and both cures the child, and confounds the Pharisees. His late honor hindred him not from doing his office: his incomparable felicity made him not forget poor Josephs misery. He knew he was much wished and waited for, and therefore makes haste from the mount to the multitude.

ſhew. A common diſeaſe, but (beſides that) the Devil was in it. The old manſlayer makes advantage of our natural humors (which are therefore the bath of the Devil, and the bed of diſeaſes) to exerciſe his cruelty upon the poor creature by Divine permiſſion; ſeeking by the infirmities of the body to bring ſin upon the ſoul.

Lunaticus ſpectatum miſeriæ humanæ, & malitiæ Satanæ. Pæreus.

For oft times he falls into the fire, &c.] The Devil puſhing him in, as it were, to deſtroy him, but could not. He is limited, and cannot do as he would, elſe he would ſoon end us. If God chaſtiſe us with his own bare hand, or by men like our ſelves, whip us as it were privately and at home, lets thank him, and think our ſelves far better dealt with, then if he ſhould deliver us up to the publike officer, to this tormentor to be ſcourged with ſcorpions at his pleaſure. The wicked he oft caſts into the fire of luſt, and water of drunkenneſs, and they complain not: like a ſleepy man (fire burning in his bedſtraw) he cries not out, when others haply lament his caſe that ſee afar off, but cannot help him. It hath ſet him on fire round about, yet he knew it not: and it burned him, yet he layed it not to heart, Iſa. 42. 25. See Prov. 23. 34, 35.

And oft into the water] Urbanus Regius in a Sermon of his at Wittenberg, made mention of a certain maid poſſeſſed by the Devil: And when ſhe ſhould have been prayed for in the Congregation, the Devil made as if he had been departed out of her. But before the next publike meeting, Satan returned, and drove the maid into a deep water, where ſhe preſently periſhed.

Verſe 16. And they could not cure him] The Prayer of faith would have healed the ſick, Iam. 5. 15. as Luthers prayer recovered a Godly Divine (that was far gone in a conſumption, and given up for a dead man by the Phyſitians) beyond all expectation. Iſte vir potuit quod voluit, ſaith one of him. That man by the force of his faith, could do whatſoever he would with God. Fiat mea voluntas, Let my will be done, ſaid one in his prayer: and then ſweetly fals off, My will Lord, becauſe thy will, and he had his requeſt. But let not the unbeliever think that he ſhall receive any thing of the Lord, Jam. 1. 7. ſith he ſhuts heaven gates againſt his own prayers; and by the evil operation of a miſgiving heart, denies them before he preſents them.

Διαστροφὴν. Verſe 17. O faithleſs and perverſe generation] He reproves the nine Diſciples, but rejects them not. Chriſt in the very dunghil of unbelief and ſinfulneſs, can find out his own part of faith and holineſs, as we ſee in Sarah, Gen. 18. 12. That whole ſpeech of hers was vile and profane (beſides that for want of faith ſhe laughed at the unlikelihood, and was therefore checked by the Angel.) One thing only was praiſeworthy in that ſinful ſentence, that ſhe called her husband Lord: This God hath taken notice of, and recorded to her eternal commendation, and others imitation, 1 Pet. 3. 6.

And perverſe generation] Depraved, diſtorted, diſlocated. Homo eſt inverſus decalogui. Man now ſtands acroſs to all goodneſs, is born with his back towards heaven, a perverſe and crooked creature, Deut. 32. 5. having his upper-lip ſtanding where his nether-lip ſhould, Prov. 19. 1. and all parts elſe out of frame and joynt, Rom. 3.

Ut qui volentes onus ſubeunt, & ſub eo perdurant. Beza. ἐγκαρτέρησιν.

How long ſhall I ſuffer you?] As they do, that willingly bear a burden, and are content to continue under it. Chriſt bears with our evil manners, Act. 13. 18. as a loving husband bears with a froward wife: but yet he is ſufficiently ſenſible, and therefore complains of the preſſure, Amos 2. 13. and once cried out under the importable weight of it, My God, my God, Why haſt thou forſaken me? The earth could not bear Korah and his company, but clave under and ſwallowed them up: as it ſoon after ſpued out the Canaanites, who had filled it with filthineſs from corner to corner, Ezra. 9. 11. Conſider, how oft thou haſt ſtragled over the mouth of the bottomleſs pit, and art not yet fallen into the boyling caldron, that fiery furnace. Oh ſtand and wonder at Gods patience, and be abrupt in thy Repentance, leſt abuſed mercy turn into fury.

Verſe 18. And he departed out of him] Though with a very ill will, for he tore the child, and well-nigh killed him. So when we do, by the prayer of faith, conjure and charm the Devil out of our hearts (prayer is called a charm, Iſa. 26. 16.) he will make all the hurly-burly he can, but out he muſt, though never ſo ill-willing.

And the child was cured] By his Fathers faith. What wonder then, that the parents faith be beneficial to the baptized Infant?

Verſe 19. Why could not we caſt him out?] They had heard why before, but either heeded it not, or were not willing to hear on that ear. Loth they were to yield that it was any fault of theirs, that the cure was not effected by them, but by ſome other occaſion (the fathers fathers faithlesnes, the peoples perversnes, &c.) which what it was, here they make enquiry. How unwilling are we that our penny should be held other then good silver? How ready to shift off him that speaks from heaven, and to mistake our selves in the causes of our miscarriages? παρεξιτιάσθε. Heb. 12. 25.

Verse 20. Because of your unbelief] q.d. Thats the naked truth of it, never deceive your selves: ther's no shuffling will serve turn: be content (hard though it be) to hear your own. Veritas aspera est, verùm amaritudo ejus utilior, & integris sensibus gratior, quàm meretricantis linguæ distillans favus. A smart truth takes better with an honest heart, then a smooth supparasitation. Ioh. S. de nugis Curialium. l. 3. cap. 6.

If ye have faith as a grain of, &c.] The Disciples might object, If no faith, but that which is entire and perfect can do such cures as this, then we may despair of ever doing any. Our Saviour answers, that the least measure of true faith (fitly compared to mustard-seed, for its acrimony and vivacity) if exerted and exercised, will work wonders. Neither is justifying faith beneath miraculous in the sphear of its own activity, and where it hath warrant of Gods Word, to remove mountains of guilt and grief. A weak faith is a joynt possessor, though no faith can be a joynt purchaser of sins remission: And a man may have faith enough to bring him to heaven, though he want this or that faith, as to rely upon God without failing, Luke 18. 1, 8. without feeling, Psal. 22. 1, &c. as resolved, that God nevertheless will hear him, in that very thing he prays for.

Verse 21. This kind goeth not out] Some Devils then are not so potent, politick, vile, villanous, as others: so neither are wicked men all alike wicked; Some stigmatical Belialists face the heavens, burden the earth, please not God, and are contrary to all men. 1 Thes. 2. 15. Others are more tame and tractable, as the young man on whom Christ looked and loved him. Yet, as when one commended the Popes Legate at the Council of Basil, Sigismund the Emperor answered, Tamen Romanus est: So though the Devil or his slaves seem never so fair conditioned, they are neither to be liked nor trusted: he is a Devil still, and will do his kind: they are wicked still, and wickedness proceedeth from the wicked, as saith the Proverb of the Ancients. 1 Sam 24. 13. I have read of one that would haunt the Taverns, Theatres and Whore-houses in London all day, but he durst not go forth without private prayer in the morning, and then would say at his departure, Now Devil do thy worst: and so used his prayers as charms and spels against the weak, cowardly devil. This was not that prayer and fasting our Saviour here speaks of; men must not go forth to this spiritual fight, ἀριστοποιήτους, with their break-fast, as the Grecians in Homer, but praying and fasting from sin especially: for otherwise they do but light a candle afore the devil, as the Proverb hath it. M. Shepherds Sincere convert. p. 232.

Verse 22. The Son of man shall be betrayed] This our Saviour often inculcates, to drive them out of their golden dream of an earthly Kingdom: which pleased them so well, that they could hardly forego it. It is no easie matter to be disabused, undeceived: error once admitted is not expelled without much ado. It sticks to our fingers like pitch; take heed how we meddle.

Verse 23. And they were exceeding sorry] Out of love to their Lord, saith Hieron, out of ignorance and stupidity, saith Saint Mark and Saint Luke: so they grieve where no cause was, as we do oft upon like grounds and causes. How well might our Saviour have said to them, as afterwards he did to the women, Grieve not for me, but grieve for your selves. They knew well that if Christ suffered, they should not scape scot-free, Hinc illæ lachrymæ. We shrink in the shoulder when called to carry the cross, and pretend this and that for excuse, as Moses did the conscience of his own insufficiency, Exod. 4. 10. when the very truth was, he feared Pharaoh, lest he would have revenged the Egyptians quarrel against him, whom he had slain, and hid in the sand: And as Peter pretended his dear love to his Master, Mat. 16. 22. when it appears, ver. 26. he aimed indeed at the safeguard of his own life, more then his Masters safety. Let care be taken, that (what ever we make believe) we be not self-lovers (which begins that black-bedroll, 2 Timothy 3. 2.) and lovers of pleasures, profits, preferments, more then lovers of God (which ends it.) Mark 9. 32. Luke 9 45.

Verse 24. They that received tribute money] This didrachmum or half-shekel, was formerly paid by the Israelites every year, after they were twenty year old, toward the Temple, Exod. 30. 13. Cæsar, by taking it from the Temple, and turning it to a tribute, did indeed take away from God that which was Gods. This very tribute was paid afterwards by the Jews toward the Roman Capitoll, by vertue of a decree made Godw. Antiq. Heb. ex Ioseph. de bel. l. 7. c. 27.

Doth not your maſter pay tribute?] Is he either born or bought free? See Act. 22.28. But if neither, they might (had they had any goodneſs in them) have ſpared him, ſo publike, ſo profitable a perſon, that had ſo well deſerved of the whole Nation, ſo well merited an immunity, an indemnity. But all is loſt that is laid out upon ungratefull perſons, or people. Covetouſneſs hath no reſpect to any thing, but to its own profit, and knows no other language then the horſe-leeches, Give, Give, Rem, Rem, quocunq; modo rem, without any reſpect of perſons, how well deſerving ſoever.

Verſe 25. He ſaith, Yes] Chriſt ſubmitted himſelf to every ordinance of man for the Lords ſake: and hath bidden us, Give unto Caeſar thoſe things that are Caeſars, tribute to whom tribute is due, cuſtom to whom cuſtom, &c. ſo doth not that great Heteroclite of Rome: he not only detains, but demands Peter-pence, and other undue paiments from Kings and States. One Pope ſaid, that he he could never want money ſo long as he could hold a pen in his hand. This Kingdom was of old called the Popes Aſs, for bearing his burdens and exactions. Innocent the fourth ſaid, that England was the Popes Paradiſe, and a pit that could never be drawn dry. What vaſt ſumms drained they hence in King Johns days? Otto (one of the Popes Muſcipulatores, Mice-catchers, as the Story calleth them) ſent hither by Gregory 9. after three years raking together of money, left not ſo much in the whole Kingdom, as he either carried with him, or ſent to Rome before him. But I hope ere long the Kings of the earth, awakened by their groſs abuſes put upon them, will fleece that withered whore, and burn her fleſh with fire, a puniſhment fore-prophecied, and well befitting ſo foul an harlot.

Verſe 26. Then are the children free] q. d. And much more I (who am the natural, the only begotten ſon of that King everlaſting, the heir of all) am priviledged from paiments. Yet becauſe few knew what Peter did, that he was the Chriſt the ſon of the living God, the ſon alſo of David, according to the fleſh, leſt by his example he ſhould occaſion and encourage either the Jews to deny paiment, or the Romans to defie the Goſpel as contrary to Monarchy, he would not make uſe of his immunity, but ſent to Sea for money to make paiment.

Verſe 27. Leſt we ſhould offend them] Better it is that a man part with his right, then give juſt offence to any. This was St. Pauls great care, 1 Cor. 9. and his conſtant counſel to others, Rom. 14. 13, 14, 15. Let no man put a ſtumbling block, much leſs a ſcandal in his bothers way, that is, neither a lighter, nor greater offence, but rather abridge himſelf of his lawfull liberty. This is to expreſs Chriſt to the world, to be made like unto him.

Go thou to the Sea] Here Hierom cries out, Quid primum miror in hoc loco neſcio, I know not what chiefly here to wonder at, whether Chriſts preſcience or greatneſs. His preſcience, that he knew that the fiſh had money in his mouth, and that that fiſh ſhould come firſt to hand. His greatneſs and power, that could create ſuch a piece of money by his bare word, and cauſe it ſo to be, by commanding it ſo to be. Who would not fear this Lord of hoſts? Who would not truſt him for neceſſaries, who can and will cauſe all creatures to cater for his? But what a wonderfull work of God was it, and a fair warning to us before theſe doleful days of war, had we been ſo wiſe as to have made good uſe of it, that God ſhould ſend John Friths Preparation to the Croſs, in the fiſh-belly, to the Univerſity of Cambridge, a little before the Commencement, ſome few years ſince. That ſuch a book (ſaith the reverend man that relateth it) ſhould be brought in ſuch a manner, and to ſuch a place, and at ſuch a time, when by reaſon of peoples confluence out of all parts, notice might be given to all places of the Land; in my apprehenſion it can be conſtrued for no leſs then a Divine warning, and to have this voice with it, England prepare for the Croſs.

Take up the fiſh] Earthly men (ſaith one wittily) are like the fiſh here mentioned: either dumb, or nothing but gold in their mouths.

Give it unto them for me and thee] Upon this place, Papiſts would fooliſhly found their Popes primacy and Clergies priviledge of immunity from paiments to civil Princes and Magiſtrates: becauſe Chriſt and Peter are ſet together. from the servitude of Satan that rigid tax-master. Peter paid, because he had here an house and family, Chap. 8. 5. and further to let his successors know, that they paid tribute in Peter, and should learn, in all due humility, to submit to Magistracy: and not to with-draw from publike Impositions and Taxations, further then of favour they shall be exempted and priviledged.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verse 1. At the same time.]

WHen he by paying Tribute, had been teaching them humility and modesty, they most unseasonably discover their folly and ambition: so another time, after he had been washing their feet, and giving them the Sacrament, Luk. 22. See in them the pravity, the canker of our natures, and what cause God had to complain, Hos. 7. 1. When I would have healed Israel, then the iniquity of Ephraim was discovered, as if it had been on purpose to spite me, and spet venom in my face.

Came the Disciples,] Peter also with the rest, vers. 21. though Bellarmine will needs have it otherwise (as if he were now at Sea) because he shall bear no part of the blame: take heed of that, that were sin, Hos. 12. 8.

Who is the greatest] Quærunt non quærenda, saith Aretius: they should rather have enquired how to get into Heaven, then who should be highest in Heaven. Ridiculum illud est, initia ignorare, & ultima rimari. But they dreamt of a distribution of honours and offices (as once in the days of David and Solomon) a worldly Monarchy, like the Kingdoms of the earth; as afterwrds the Church was, and still is transformed by Antichrist into the image of the beast, that is, of the Roman Empire: yet they call it the Kingdom of Heaven, because they had heard Christ many times call it so.

In the Kingdom of Heaven] i. e. In the state and condition of the Church Christian. So to this day among the Jews the Kingdom of the Messiah is called Malcuth hashamajim, the Kingdom of Heaven: and rightly so: for, 1. The King is heavenly. 2. He hath Heaven for his Throne, whence he puts forth his power. 3. His Subjects are heavenly minded, and trade for heavenly commodities. 4. Their countrey is Heaven, though their commoration be awhile upon Earth, where they are pilgrims and strangers. 5. The government of this Kingdom is wholly heavenly and spiritual. Cameron.

Verse 2. And Jesus called a little child] Nicephorus saith this was Ignatius, who was afterwards Bishop of Antioch; but I am not bound to believe him. It is well known that he is full of fictions. Christ calling for a little child, who neither thinks great things of himself, nor seeks great things for himself, rightly and really confutes their prepostrous ambition and affectation of primacy, and gives them such a dumb answer as Tarquin did his son, when walking in the garden he struck off the heads of the Poppies in the sight of the Messenger: and as Periander the Corinthian did Thrasybulus the Tyrant of Athens, when pulling of the upper ears, he made all the standing Corn equal, intimating thereby what a Tyrant must do, that would live safe and quiet. Livius. Arist Polit. l. 3 c. 9.

Verse 3. Except ye be converted] i. e. Except ye turn over a new leaf, and cast away these fond conceits and crotchets, these golden dreams of an earthly Kingdom, and your high perferments therein, which like bullets of lead fastened to the eye-lids of your minds, make you that you cannot look upwards.

And become as little children] In simplicity, humility, innocency, ignoscency, &c. not in childishness, peevishness, pragmaticalness, talkativeness, open heartedness, &c. How absurd was that Anabaptist Aurifaber, who understanding this Text Nicodemically, as one saith, stirred up people where ever he came to carry themselves childishly, if ever they would have Heaven. Upon whose perswasion you might have seen ridiculous imitations of boyes and girls; women especially, skipping up and down, clapping their hands together, sitting naked on the ground, tickling, toying, apishly imitating one while Christ, another while Antichrist, &c. pretending this Text for their authority. *Non p Apostlo... beant ætatem parvulorum, sed ut innocentiam, &c. authority. So did Massæus the Franciscan, who is famous amongst his fellow-Friars,
S. dul Lib 3. c. 1. for that, at the command of his Superiour S. Francis, he wallowed on the ground, as a little one, and shew'd all, in obedience to this Text, as Sedulius testifieth. Ridiculum caput! Many such like examples may be met with in the Legends of the Fathers, of Colos. 2. 18. θελοθρησκεία καὶ ταπεινοφροσύνη. such as were voluntaries in humility (as the Apostle stiles them) or rather in hypocrisie. For, hujus virtutis postea homines Christiani adeò studiosi & æmuli fuere, ut tota in hypocrisin verè abierit, saith Aretius, here. Humility in many of the Ancients degenerated into hypocrisie.

Ye shall not enter into the kingdom of Heaven] One sin allowed excludes out of the Kingdom, be it but ambition, or some such inward evil, such as the world takes no notice of, makes no matter of. Inward bleeding killeth many times, and God by killing
Rev. 2. 23. Jezabels children with death (i. throwing them to Hell) will make all the Churches know that he searcheth the inwards.

Verse 4. Whosoever therefore shall humble, &c.] Children are not lifted up with pride, for the great things they are born to, neither minde they high places: but the childe of a Prince will play with the poorest, and make him his mate. Christians should συναπαγόμενοι. not minde high things, but condescend to the meanest, and be carried by them, as the
Rom. 12. 16. word signifieth: especially since we are all born again by the same seed, there is no difference at all in our birth or Inheritance. Why then look we so big one upon another? Why do we slight or brow-beat any? Have we not all one father?

The same is greatest in the Kingdom] He that can most vilifie and nullifie himself, shall be highest in Heaven. When had David the Kingdom given him in possession, but when he was as a weaned childe? When was Mephibosheth advanced to Davids Table, but when he made himself a dog, and therefore fit onely to lie under the Table, yea a dead dog, and therefore fit onely for the ditch? He that is in the low Pits and Caves of the Earth, sees the Stars in the Firmament; when they who are on the tops of the Mountains discern them not. He that is most humble seeth most of Heaven, and shall have most of it: for the lower the Ebb, the higher the Tyde, and the lower the foundation of vertue is laid, the higher shall the roof of glory be over-laid.

Luk 9. 48. Verse 5. And whoso shall receive one such, &c.] S. Luke hath it, Whosoever shall receive this child in my Name. Meaneth our Saviour the childe, or those that were humble as that childe? Both surely. See here how highly Christ regards and rewards humility, even the picture of it in little ones. Now if the shadow of this grace have such a healing vertue, what then hath the body? If the leaves be so soveraign, what then the fruit?

Verse 6. But whoso shall offend, &c.] By false doctrine, or loose life, or making a prey of their simplicity and humility, which many times draws on injury. A Crow will stand upon a sheeps back, pulling off wooll from her side. She durst not do so to a Wolf or a Mastiff.

ὄνος μυλικός. That a milstone were hanged, &c.] The nether-milstone, called in Greek the Ass, either because it is the bigger and thicker of the two; or because the milstone was drawn about by the help of the Ass. This kinde of punishment the greatest malefactors among the Jews were in those days put to, as saith S. Hierom. And hereby is set forth the heaviest of Hell-torments. Thus the Beast of Rome (that grand offendor of Christs little ones, whom he worrieth and maketh havock of) is threatned (by a like kinde of punishment) to be cast alive into the burning Lake, Revel. 19. 20. And for his City Babylon, a mighty Angel is seen to take up a stone like a great milstone, and cast it into the Sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great City Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all. This, by an elegant and emphatical gradation, notably sets forth
M. Leigh of the prom. the remedilesse ruin of Rome; In that an Angel, a strong Angel taketh a stone, and a great stone, even a milstone, which he letteth not barely fall, but casteth, and with impetuous force thrusteth into the bottom of the Sea, whence nothing ordinarily is recovered, much less a milstone, thrust from such an hand with such a force, &c.

πέλαγος quasi πόλαγος τῆλε τ γῆς procul à terra. Casaub. Not. Drowned in the depth of the Sea] In that part of the Sea that is fartheſt off from the shore, q. d. he is a brat of fathomless perdition, he shall be desperately drowned in destruction, ita ut in aquæ summitate rursus non ebulliat. So the Romans served their parricides, and the Grecians other grievous malefactors: they wrapt them up in lead, and cast them into the deep.

Verse 7. Wo to the world, because of offences] Σκάνδαλον, propriè tendicula, hoc est, lignum illud curvum, quo moto decipula clauditur. The world, besides the offences they give to the Saints, they give and take much hurt one from another, and so heap up wrath; whiles, besides their own, they bring upon themselves their other mens sins to answer for. I have read of a woman, who living in professed doubt of the God-head, after better illumination and repentance, did often protest that the vitious life of a great Scholar in that Town did conjure up those damnable doubts in her soul. When therefore corruption boyls, and thou art ready to run into some reproachful evill, think the name of Christ, and thy poor brothers soul lies prostrate before thee. And wilt thou trample upon that, and thrattle this? Scultet. Annot. M. Wards happiness of paradise.

It must needs be that offences come] By Gods permission, Satans malice, and mans wickedness: Venenum aliquandò pro remedio fuit. God oft draws good out of evil, as wine draws a nourishing vertue from the flesh of Serpents: as the skilful Apothecary, of the poysonful Viper, maketh an wholesome triacle, 1 Cor. 11. 19. Senec. de benif. lib. 2. cap. 18.

Verse 8. If thy hand or foot offend thee, &c.] Chap. 5. 29, 30. Our Saviour forbids all his to defile themselves with the filth of sin, here to offend others thereby. See the Notes there.

Verse 9. Pluck it out] This is the circumcision of the heart, the mortification of earthly members, which is no less hard to be done, then for a man with one hand to cut off the other: or to pull out his own eyes, and then rake in the holes where they grew. And yet, hard or not hard, it must be done: for otherwise we are utterly undone for ever. Hypocrites, as artificial jugglers, seem to wound themselves, but do not: as Stage-Players, they seem to thrust themselves through their bodies, whereas the sword passeth onely through their clothes. But the truly religious lets out the life-blood of his beloved lusts, layes them all dead at his feet, and burns their bones to lime, as the King of Moab did the King of Edom, Amos 2. 1. As Joshuah put down all the Canaanites, so doth grace all corruptions. As Asa deposed his own Mother, so doth this, the mother sin. It destroys them not by halves, as Saul, but hews them in pieces before the Lord, as Samuel.

Verse 10. Take heed that ye despise not, &c.] Gr. Look to it if you do, a foul mischief is towards you. Look to it as you tender your own safety here, or salvation hereafter. Cast not the least contempt upon Christs little ones. As little as they are, they have a great Champion, Isa. 37. 22, 23. and so many Angels to right them and fight for them, that a man had better anger all the witches in the world, then one of these little ones. I tell you, some great ones have been fain to humble themselves, and to lick the very dust of their feet sometimes, that they might be reconciled to them, Isa. 60. 14. If Cain do but lowre upon Abel, God will arraign him for it. Why is thy countenance cast down, &c? Why dost look so doggedly? If Miriam do but mutter against Moses, God will spet in her face: And if Aaron had not made the more hast to make his peace by repentance, he also had tasted of the same sawce. ὁρᾶτε. Difficilè præcipientis verbum. Gen. 4. Numb. 12. 14.

Their Angels do always behold the face] Angels in the Syriack are named אפני of the face, because it is their Office and honour to look always on Gods face. They are sent about Gods messages to this earth, yet are never out of their Heaven, never out of the vision of their maker. No more are godly men, when busied in their callings. And howsoever slighted in the world, yet Angels are sent forth for their safeguard and service, Heb. 1. 14. yea for the accomplishment of all designs for the Saints good, they stand alway looking God full in the face, to receive commandments.

Verse 11. For the Son of man came, &c.] Therefore Angels are so active and officious about them. This the reprobate Angels could not bring their hearts to yield to, and therefore fell through envie, from their first estate: and whereas the society of Angels was much maimed by their fall, their room say some, is supplied by the Saints, whom therefore they take such care of, and content in.

Verse 12. Doth he not leave the ninety and nine] I am not saith a Divine, of their fond opinion, that think the Angels are here meant by the ninety nine sheep, as if they were so infinite in number beyond the number of mankinde: yet without question, they are exceeding many, and that number cannot be known of us in this world, Dan. 7. 10. Psal. 68. 17. The Chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of Angels: the Lord is among them as in Sinai, &c. that is, those myriads of Angels *Theoph. make Sion as dreadful to all her enemies, as those Angels made Sinai at the delivery of the Law. But the application of this parable makes it plain, that the hundred sheep are Gods elect little ones; all which are set safe by Christ upon the everlasting mountains, and not one of them lost, *Joh.*10. *Matth.*24.

Verse 13. And if so be that he finde it] As he will most surely, for none can take them out of his hands: nor can he discharge his trust, should he suffer any one of them to wander and perish, as they will do undoubtedly, if left to themselves, such is their sheepish simplicity, *Isa.*53.6. God hath charged Christ to see to the safe-keeping of every true sheep, *Joh.*6.39,40. and he performed it to the full, *Joh.*17.12. As for that son of perdition there excepted, he was never of Christs body; yet is excepted, because he seemed to be, by reason of his office.

For present they have strength in themselves: for future, God will so stablish them with his grace, that they shall never wholly depart from him. As for Reprobates God saith of them, That that will die, let it die; they shall die in their sins, as the Lord threatneth the Jews; which is a thousand times worse then to die in a ditch or in a dungeon.

Verse 15. If thy brother shall trespass] As trespass he will, for it must needs be that offences come, vers. 7. such is humane frailty. Two flints may assoon smite together, and not fire come out, as two or more men converse together, and not trespasses in one kinde or other fall out. A Heathen could say, Non amo quenquam nisi offendam: for so, I shall know whether he love me or no, by his forbearing of me. And Augustine saith, Qui desinit sustinere, desinit amare. He that ceaseth to bear with me, ceaseth to love me. Here therefore our Saviour, after he had deterred his from doing wrong, instructeth them how to suffer wrong. If it be not considerable, it must be dissembled. Thoſe in the Revelation whoſe prayers went up as a Pillar of Incenſe, and came before the Lord as the ſound of many waters: the thundring legion, the Chriſtians in Tertullians time, that came, an Army of them, not more to beſeech then to beſiege God by their prayers. This made Henry the third, King of France, forbid the Proteſtant-houſhoulders in his dominions to pray with their families: And a great Queen ſaid, that ſhe feared more the prayers of John Knox and his Complices, then an Army of thirty thouſand men, Act. 4. the houſe ſhook where the Diſciples were praying. The Devil was forced to throw in the obligation to Luther and ſome others that were praying for a young man, that had yielded himſelf body and ſoul to the Devil for money, and had written the bond with his own blood. The Popiſh ſouldiers that went againſt the Angrognians in France, ſaid that the Miniſters of that Town with their prayers conjured and bewitched them, that they could not fight. Whiles Moſes, Aaron, and Hur, lift up their hands and minds together in the Mount, Joſhuah beats Amalec in the Valley. The prevailed precando, more then he did praliando. Now for the fruit of prayer, ſaid thoſe brave ſpirits at Edge-hill-battel, where there was never leſs ſeen of man and more of God, as the Noble General thankfully acknowledged. Polan. in Daniel. Spec. belli ſacri. Act. and Mon. fol. 788. Ibid. 883.

Domine. And hence that request of St. Bernard to a certain friend of his to whom he had given divers directions for strictness and purity, Et cum talis fueris, saith he, memento mei: when thou art become such a one, think on me in thy prayers.

Verse 21. And I forgive him? till seven times?] How many good people even at this day think if they forgive an offending brother some few times, that they have supererogated, and deserved to be Chronicled, yea canonized? It was a fault in Peter to presume to prescribe to Christ, how oft he should enjoyn him to forgive. Peter is still the same; ever too forwardly and forth-putting.

Verse 22. Until seventy times seven] i.e. Infinities, toties quoties. God multiplieth pardons, Isa. 55.7. so should we. Love covereth all sins, Prov. 10.12. so large is the skirt of loves mantle. Betwixt God and us the distance is infinite, and if it were possible, our love to him, and to our friends in him, our foes for him, should fill up that distance, and extend it self to infiniteness. We may without sin be sensible of injuries (a sheep is as sensible of a bite, as a swine) but it must be with the silence of a sheep, or at utmost the mourning of a Dove, not the roaring of a Bear, or bellowing of a Bull, when baited. All desire of revenge must be carefully cast out: and if the wrong-doer say, I repent, you must say, I remit, and that from the heart: being herein like that King of England, of whom it is said that he never forgat any thing but injuries. Every Christian should keep a continual Jubilee, nexus solvendo, & noxas remittendo, by loosing bonds, and remitting wrongs.

ἑορτὴν ζωμεν. 1 Cor. 5.8.

Verse 23. Which would take account of his servants] This God doth daily. 1. In the preaching of the Law with it's direction or correction, which he that trembleth not in hearing, said that Martyr, shall be crusht to pieces in feeling. 2. In trouble of conscience, which when open, tells us all we have done, and writes bitter things against us, though they be legible onely (as things written with the juyce of limmons) when held to the light fire of Gods fierce wrath. 3. In the hour of death: for every mans deaths-day is his particular doomes-day. 4. At the day of judgement, when we shall appear to give an account, 2 Cor. 5.10. Good therefore is the counsel of that Heathen. Let us so live, as that we forget not our last reckoning. Rationem cum domino crebrò putet Villicus, Let the Seward oft reckon with his Master, saith another.

Ita vivamus ut rationem nobis reddendam arbitremur. Cic. 4. in Verr. Cato de re rustica, cap. 5.

Verse 24. Which ought him ten thousand talents] A talent is said to be 600 crowns; ten thousand talents are well nigh twelve tuns of Gold. As oft therefore as thy brother offends thee, think with thy self what a price is put into thy hands, what an opportunity is offered thee of gaining so great a prize, of gathering in so rich an harvest.

Verse 25. His Lord commanded him to be sold] Those that sell themselves to do wickedly with Ahab, will sure repent them sore of their bargain, when God shall sell them off to the Devil: who when he hath well fed them (as they do their slaves in some Countries for like purpose) will broach them, and eat them, saith Mr. Bradford, chaw them, and champ them world without end in eternal wo and misery. One reason why the wicked are eternally tormented, is, because being worthless, they cannot satisfie Gods justice in any time; and he will be no looser by them.

Bradf. Serm. of Repent. p 70.

Verse 26. The servant therefore fell down] This was the ready way to disarm his Masters indignation, and procure his own peace, viz. to submit to justice, and implore mercy. Thus Abagail pacified David; the Prodigal, his father; nay Benhadad, Ahab, that non-such, as the Scripture describes him. The very Turks at this day, though remorseless to those that bear up, yet receive humiliation with much sweetness. Humble your selves under Gods great hand, saith S. James, and he will lift you up. The Lion of Judah rents not the prostrate prey.

Blounts Voyage, pag 97. Jam. 4. 10.

Verse 27. Loosed him and forgave him the debt] Every sin is a debt: and the breach of the ten Commandments set us in debt to God ten thousand talents. He requires no more but to acknowledge the debt, and to come before him with a Non sum solvendo, tendering him his Son our all-sufficient Surety, and he will presently cancel the hand-writing that was against us: he will cross the black lines of our sins with the red lines of Christs blood, and we shall be acquitted for ever.

Verse 28. And he laid hands on him, and took him, &c.] Had he truly apprehended the pardon of his own sins, he would not have been so cruel to others. Had he throughly dyed his thoughts in the rich mercies of God, he would have shewed more mercy to men.

men. Therefore the Apoſtles (when our Saviour had bidden them forgive, though it were oft in the ſame day) ſaid unto the Lord, Increaſe our faith. As who ſhould ſay, The more we can believe thy love and mercy to us, the readier ſhall we be to do all good offices to men. But how rigid and cruel was David to the Ammonites, while he lay in his ſin, and before he had renewed his Faith, 2 Sam. 12. 30, 31.

Verſe 29. And his fellow ſervant fell down] This had been ſufficient to have broken the heart of a better man then he was any; The more manly and valiant any are, the more gentle and milde to the ſubmiſſive, as was Alexander, and Julius Cæſar: and on the contrary the more baſe and cowardly, the more hard-hearted and bloody: as Minerius the Popes Champion, who at the deſtruction of Mernidol in France, being intreated for a few poor ſouls that had eſcaped his al-devouring ſword, although they had no more but their ſhirts to cover their nakedneſs, he ſternly anſwered, I know what I have to do; not one of them ſhall eſcape my hands, I will ſend them to dwell in Hell among the Devils. But what came of it? his raging fury ceaſed not to proceed, till the Lord ſhortly after brought him, by an horrible diſeaſe (his guts by little and little rotting within him) to the torments of death, and terrors of Hell. Act. and Mon. fol. 869.

Verſe 31. So when his fellow-ſervants] The Angels, ſay ſome, who when they ſee us backward to buſineſs of this nature, are ſorry, and ſay our errand to their and our common Lord. Or the Saints on earth groan out their diſcontents, againſt the unmerciful, to God, who ſoon hears them, for he is gracious, Exod. 22. 27. yea, the cryes of the poor oppreſſed, do even enter into the ears of the Lord of Sabbath, Jam. 5 3. Angeli vident, dolent, & Dominum omnia referunt. Aret.

Verſe 32. O thou wicked ſervant] Wicked with a witneſs, as that wicked Haman, ſo Eſther, called him (Eſt. 7. 6.) who never till then had heard his true title. God will have a time to tell every man his own: and for thoſe that are now ſo haughty and paſſionate, that none dare declare their way to their face, God will lay them low enough in the ſlimy valley, where are many already like them, and more ſhall come after them, Job 21. 31, 32.

Verſe 33. Shouldſt not thou alſo, &c.] Which becauſe he did not, his patent was called in again into the Pardon-office, and he deſervedly turned over to the tormentor. God will ſet off his own and all hearts elſe, from a mercileſs man, from a griping oppreſſor, as he did from Haman: not a man opened his mouth to intercede for him, when he fell before that Jeweſs, the Queen. For he ſhall have judgement without mercy, ſaith S. James, that hath ſhewed no mercy: when as mercy rejoyceth againſt judgement, as a man doth againſt his adverſary, whom he hath ſubdued. Jam. 2. 13.

Verſe 34. And his Lord was wroth] So God is ſaid to be, when he chides and ſmites for ſin, as men uſe to do in their anger: but ſomewhat worſe then they, for his anger burneth to the loweſt Hell, Deut. 32. 22. Siquis eſt qui neminem in gratiam putat redire poſſe, non noſtram is perfidiam arguit, ſed indicat ſuam. Cicer. Ep. 37. lib. 3.

Verſe 35. If ye from your hearts forgive not] Forget as well as forgive: which ſome proteſt they will never do, neither think they that any do. But what ſaith the Heathen Orator to this unchriſtan cenſure? If any think that we, that have been once out, can never heartily forgive, and love one another again, he proveth not our falſe-heartedneſs, but ſheweth his own.

τοῖς Θεοῖς ἕπε. Sen. ep. 107.

Verse 2. And great multitudes followed him] Though he were then to die. For all that follows from this 19. to Chap. 26. seems to be a relation of the Acts of the last three months of his life. Follow God, was a morral precept of the Heathen Sages; who therein placed the safety and happiness of a man, Magnus est animus qui se Deo tradidit, saith Seneca. He is a brave man that follows God thorow thick and thin, thorow whatsoever hardship.

Verse 3. Is it lawful for a man, &c.] A captious question, purposely to put him to shame or peril afore the people. For if he liked divorce, the better sort would be offended and displeased: if he disliked it, the common sort (those that followed him,) for denying them that liberty that Moses had allowed them. One thing that created Jeremy so much trouble among the people of his time, was, that he perswaded them to the yielding up of the City to the Caldeans, which Isaiah had so earnestly disswaded them, not long before in the days of King Hezekiah.

Luk. 12. 13. Verse 4. And he answered and said unto them] Our Saviour would not divide the inheritance, when required to it; but he would decide controversies touching divorces: for in marriage-matters many cases of conscience fall out fit to be determined by the Minister, whose lips should both preserve and present knowledge to the people, whose house for this cause should be always open, as the Ediles house in Rome was to all comers.

Verse 5. And said, For this cause, &c.] Dixit, duxit, benedixit, these three things are said by Moses to have been done by God in the institution, and for the honour of marriage: to the which still (saith a Divine,) God beareth so great respect, as that he is pleased to bear with, cover, and not impute the many frailties, follies, vanities, weaknesses, and wickednesses that are found betwixt man and wife.

Bisield on 1 Pet. 3. 2. pag. 44.

For this cause shall a man leave Father] viz. In regard of cohabitation, not of sustentation: Relinquet cubile patris & matris, as the Chaldee rightly interprets it, Gen. 2. 24. And this was the first Prophecy that was ever uttered in the world (saith Tertullian and Beda,) venerable therefore for its antiquity: like as is also that first Hexameter, made by Phemonoe, in the year of the world, 2580.

Alsted Chron. pag. 468.

Συμφέρεται πέφαται δ' οἰωνὸς κρὸν τε μέλισσαι.

κολληθήσεται. And shall cleave to his wife] Gr. Be glued to her. A Table will often cleave in the whole wood, before it will part asunder, where it is glued. A husband ought to be as firm to his wife as to himself. See my Notes on Gen. 2. 24.

And they twain shall be one flesh] This is point-blank against polygamy, which yet Anabaptists would bring in again, and Turks allow of. They learned it of Lamech, qui primus unam costam in duas divisit, saith Hierom, but had soon enough of it. So had Jacob, Elkanah, and other holy men of old, who lived and dyed in this sin of polygamy, and meerly through mistake, as it is thought, of that Text, Lev. 18. 16. Thou shalt not take a wife to her sister, to vex her: i.e. Thou shalt not superinduce one wife to another. Now the Fathers took the word (sister) for one so by blood, which was spoken of a sister by Nation, as those clauses (to vex her) and (during her life) do evince.

ἑαυτον. Verse 6. They are no more twain] A mans wife is himself, Eph. 5. 28. (as is likewise a mans Country, Luk. 4. 23. to cure his Countrey is to cure himself) and they twain, saith our Saviour in the former verse, shall be εἰς σάρκα μίαν, into one flesh. The man misseth his rib, and the woman would be in her old place again, under the mans arm or wing: Hence no rest, till they be re-united and concorporated, Ruth. 3. 1. My daughter, said Naomi to Ruth, should I not seek rest for thee, that it may be well with thee? Why then should there be divorces for light matters? why should there be beating of wives, and laying upon them (as some) with their unmanly fists? Did ever any man hate his own flesh, Ephes. 5. 29. or but hide his eyes from it, Isa. 58. 7? how much less tear it with his teeth, and pull it away piece-meal, unless it were mad demoniacks and rash divorcers? Christ, the best husband, hates putting away, Mal. 2. 16. yea though never so much provoked to it (Jerem. 3. 1. Joh. 13. 1.) he will not do it.

Verse 7. Why did Moses then command, &c.] Sophister-like they oppose Moses to God. Scripture to Scripture, as if God were against himself. This is still the guise of graceless hereticks; hereticks; as also to mingle and jumble together truths with falshoods, that falshoods may pass the more currant. See it in these Pharisees. It was true that Moses commanded (for the honor of the woman, and disgrace of the man,) that he should give her an Abcessionale, a bill of divorcement. But it was not true that Moses commanded to put her away. He permitted such a thing indeed as a civil Magistrate by Divine dispensation (better an inconvenience then a mischief) but that makes little for its lawfulness.

Verse 8. Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts] Ob duricordiam vestram, saith Tertullian. For the relief of the wife, questionless was this permitted by Moses, not as a Prophet, but as a Law-giver; so he suffered them to exercise usury upon strangers. And, at this day, they are by the States where they live, permitted to strain up their usury to 18. in the hundred upon the Christians: And so they are used, as the Friers, to suck from the meanest, and to be sucked by the greatest. But what saith our Statute? Forasmuch as all usury, being forbidden by the Law of God, is a sin and detestable, &c And what saith our Homily-book? Verily so many as increase themselves by usury--they have their goods of the Devils gift, &c. And what saith blind Nature? Aristotle in one page condemneth both τοκιστὴν and κυβευτὴν, the Usurer and the Dicer. And Agis the Athenian General, set fire upon all the usurers books and bonds in the market-place: then which fire Agesilaus was wont to say, he never saw a fairer. But to return to the text: Moses noteth the hatred of a mans wife to be the cause of much mischief, Deut. 22. 13, 14. Hence a divorce was suffered in that case, Chap. 24. 3. lest the husbands hatred should work the wives ruth or ruine, in case he should be compelled to keep her. He might put her away therefore, but not without a double blur to himself. 1. By his writing of divorce, he should give testimony to her honesty, and that she was put away meerly for his hard-heartedness toward her. 2. If she were again put away by a second husband, the first might not take her to wife again, as having once for ever judg'd himself unworthy of her further fellowship. Husbands should be gentle to their wives, because of their weakness: glasses are not hardly handled; a small knock soon breaks them. But there are a number of Nabals, a brood of Caldeans, a bitter and furious nation, that have little growing in their furrows but wormwood; they have a true gall of bitterness in them, Col. 3. 20. whereas the very heathens at their weddings, pulled the gall out of all their good chear, and cast it away; teaching thereby the married couples what to do. And God Almighty professeth that he hates putting away: threatning also to cut off such unkind husbands, as by their harshness caused their wives when they should have been chearfull in Gods services, to cover the Altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping, and with crying out, so that he regarded not the offering any more. Picus est imago ingrati mariti, saith, Melancthon. The Pyanit is an embleme of an unkind husband: for in autumn he casts off his mate, lest he should be forced to keep her in winter: afterwards, in the spring, he allures her to him again, and makes much of her. The Athenians were wont to put away their wives upon discontent, or hope of greater portions. Solon their Law-giver (who permitted it) being asked whether he had given the best Laws to the Athenians? answered, The best that they could suffer.

The Apostle adds the case of willfull desertion, 1 Cor. 7. 15. The civil Laws of the Empire permitted divorce for divers other causes. In Turkie the woman may sue a divorce only then, when her husband would abuse her against nature, which she doth, by taking off her shooe before the Judges, and holding it the sole upward, but speaking nothing for the foulness of the fact.

Save they to whom it is given] Maldonat the Jesuite saith, it is given to any one that is but willing to have it, and asketh it of God: and that, because Marriage is given to all that are willing to it. But this is 1. False, for our Saviour excepts Eunuchs. 2. Inconsequent, because the gift of Marriage proceeds from a Principle of nature, but 1 Cor. 7. continency from a special indulgence: which they that have not, are required to marry for a remedy. And yet Papists most injuriously forbid some to marry at any time, as their Clergy, all at some times: and that, not as a Precept of conveniency, but necessity and holiness.

Verse 12. Which were so born] Of a frigid constitution of body, and unapt for generation. This is not continency, but impotency, effeminacy, a defect in nature.

Which were made Eunuchs of men] Evirati, bereft of manhood, as in the Court of Persia of old, and of Turkie at this day; where Christians children are not gelded only, but deprived of all their genitals, supplying the uses of nature with a silver quil: which inhumane custom was brought in among them by Selymus the second, out of jealousie lest his Eunuchs were not so chaste as they should have been, in keeping their Ladies beds. For, though made Eunuchs by men, yet are they not without their fleshly concupiscences, yea they are magni amatores mulierum, as she in Terence saith.

Which have made themselves Eunuchs] Not gelded themselves, as Origen and some others in the Primitive times, by mistake of this text. (So Tertullian tells of Democritus, of their greateſt good. We muſt alſo preſent ours, as we can, to Chriſt. And 1. By Praying for them before, at, and after their birth. 2. By timely bringing them to the Ordinance of Baptiſm with faith, and much joy in ſuch a priviledge. 3. By training them up in Gods holy fear; beſeeching God to perſwade their hearts, as Noah did for his ſon Iapheth. We may ſpeak perſwaſively, but God only perſwades: as Rebekah might cook the veniſon, but it was Iſaac only, that gave the bleſſing.

And the Diſciples rebuked them] They held it a buſineſs below their Lord to look upon little ones. But it is not with our God, as with their Idol that had no leiſure to attend ſmaller matters. Chriſtian Children are the Churches nurſery: the Devil ſeeks to deſtroy them, as he did the babes of Bethlehem: but Chriſt hath a gracious reſpect unto them, and ſets them on a rock that is higher then they. Non vacat exiguis rebus adeſſe Jovi.

Whenſoever a ſinner repents and believes on the promiſes, Baptiſm (the ſeal thereof) is as powerfull and effectual, as if it were then preſently adminiſtred. The Decrees, and book of ſentences ſay, that Confirmation is of more value then Baptiſm, and gives the holy Ghoſt more plentifully and effectually. Verſe 16. And behold one came] One of good rank, a Ruler, Luke 18. 18. of good eſtate, for he was rich, and had great revenue (χρήματα, ſaith Luke, κτήματα, ſaith Matthew, he had a good title to that he had, and he lived not beſide it.) He was alſo a young man, in the prime and pride of his age, and had been well bred; both for point of civility, he came congeeing to our Saviour, Mar. 10. 17. And for matter of piety, he was no Sadduce, for he enquires after eternal life, which they denyed. And although but young, he hearkens after heaven: and though he were rich, he comes running to Chriſt, thorow deſire of information: whereas great men uſe not to run, but to walk leiſurely, ſo to maintain their authority. Laſtly, he knew much of gods Law, and had done much: ſo that he ſeemed to himſelf to want work, to be aforehand with God. Chriſt alſo looked upon him and loved him, as he was a tame creature, a moral man, and fit to live in a common-wealth. Mat. 19. 22. γονυπετήσας, genibus reverenter inflexis ſalutavit.

What good thing ſhall I do?] A moſt needfull and difficult queſtion, rarely moved, by rich men eſpecially, whoſe hearts are uſually upon their half-peny. as they ſay, whoſe mouths utter no other language but the horſe leeches, Give, give. Who will ſhew us any good, &c? a good purchaſe, a good penny-worth, &c? Howbeit by the manner of his expreſſing himſelf, this Gallant ſeems to have been a Phariſee, and of that ſort of Phariſees (for there were ſeven ſorts of them, ſaith the Talmud,) which was named, Quid debeo facere, & ſociam illud: Tell me what I ſhould do, and I will do it. They that know not Chriſt, would go to heaven by their good meanings and good doings: this is a piece of natural Popery, that muſt be utterly abandoned, ere eternal life can be obtained. Talm. tract. Suta. cap. 3.

That I may have eternal life] He had a good mind to heaven, and cheapens it, but was not willing to go to the price of it, that thorow-ſale of all: Good deſires may be found in Hell-mouth, as in Balaam, ſome ſhort-winded wiſhes at leaſt. The Spies praiſed the land as pleaſant and plenteous, but they held the conqueſt impoſſible, and thereby diſcouraged the people. Many like well of Abrahams boſom but not ſo well of Dives his door. They ſeek to Chriſt, but when he ſaith, Take up the Croſs and follow me: they ſtumble at the Croſs and fall backward. and sluggish, like the door that turns upon the hinges, but yet hangs still on them: so these Wishers, and Woulders, for all their faint and weak desires after heaven, still hang fast on the hinges of their sins: they will not be wrought off from the things of this world, they will not part with their fatness and sweetness, though it be to raign for ever. Judg. 9. 11. Theotimus in St. Ambrose would rather lose his sight then his sin of intemperance: so many, their souls.

There is none good but one, that is God] He both is good Original, (others are good by participation only) and doth good abundantly, freely, constantly, for thou Lord art good, and ready to forgive, saith David, Psal. 86. 5. And let the power of my Lord be great, saith Moses, in pardoning this rebellious people. In the Original there is a letter greater then ordinary in the word jigdal (be great) to shew, say the Hebrew Doctors, that though the people should have tempted God, or murmured against him ten times more then they did, yet their perverseness should not interrupt the course of his ever-flowing, overflowing goodness.

If thou wilt enter into life, keep the Commandments] That is (saith Luther) Morere, die out of hand: for there is no man lives that sins not. It is storied of Charls the fourth, King of France, that being one time affected with the sense of his many and great sins, he fetcht a deep sigh, and said to his wife, now, by the help of God, I will so carry my self all my life long, that I will never offend him more: which word he had no sooner uttered, but he presently fell down and died. It is not our Saviours intent here to teach, that heaven may be had or earned by keeping the Law: for Adam in his innocency, if he had so continued, could not have merited heaven, neither do the Angels, nor could Christ himself, had he been no more then a man. None but a proud Luciferian would have said, as Vega the Popish Perfectionary did, Cœlum gratis non accipiam, I will not go to heaven for nought, or on free-cost. But our Saviour here shapes this young Pharisee an answer, according to his question. He would needs be saved by doing, Christ sets him that to do, which no man living can do, and so shews him his error. He sets him to school to the Law, that hard school-master, that sets us such lessons as we are never able to learn, (unless Christ our elder-brother teach us, and do our exercise for us) yea brings us forth to God as that school-master in Livy did all his scholars (the flower of the Romane Nobility) to Hannibal: who if he had not been more merciful then otherwise they had all perished.

Verse 18. Thou shalt do no murther] Our Saviour instanceth the Commandments of the second table only; as presupposing those of the first: for the second table must be kept in the first: and the whole Law, say the Schools, is but one copulative. The two tables of the Law (saith a Reverend Divine) are, in their object answerable to the two natures of Christ: For God is the object of one, man of the other. And as they meet together in the person of Christ, so must they be united in the affections and endeavours of a Christian.

Verse 19. Thou shalt love thy neighbour, &c.] Which because thou doest not (as appears, because thou wilt not part with thy possessions to relieve the poor) therefore much less doest thou love God, and therefore art not the man thou takest thy self for. Civil men overween themselves, and boast of their moral righteousness: yet make no conscience of the lesser breaches of the second table, nor yet of contemplative wickedness, which yet angreth God, Gen. 6. 6. and lets in the Devil, 2 Cor. 10. And these are the worlds very honest men, for lack of better: as a cab of doves-dung was dear meat in the famine of Samaria, where better could not be come by.

somewhat aforehand, and that God, belike, was in his debt. Truly many now-adays grow crooked and aged with over-good opinions of themselves, and can hardly ever be set right again. They stand upon their comparisons, I am as good as thou; nay, upon their disparisons, I am not as this Publican. No, for thou art worse; yea, for this, because thou thinkest thy self better. This arrogant youth makes good that of Aristotle, who, differencing between age and youth, makes it a property of young men, to think they know all things, and to affirm lustily their own placits. He secretly insults over our Saviour as a trivial Teacher, and calls for a lecture beyond the Law, worthy therefore to have been sent to Anticyra; surely, as when Drusius in his defence against a nimble Jesuit, that called him Heretick, alledged that heresie must be in fundamentis fidei, the Jesuit replyed, that even that assertion was heresie: So when this young man affirmed that he had ever kept the Commandments, and asked, What lack I yet? Christ might well have said, Thou art therefore guilty of the breach of all the Commandments, because thou takest thy self to be keeper of all; and thou therefore lackest every thing, because thou thinkest thou lackest nothing.

Verse 21. If thou wilt be perfect] As thou boastest and aimest, and which never yet any man was, nor can be here. The misunderstanding of this Text, made some of the Ancients count and call it consilium perfectionis, a counsel of perfection; such as whosoever did observe, should do something more then the Law required, and so merit for themselves an higher degree of glory in heaven then others had. Hence Bernard writeth, that this sentence of our Saviour filled the Monasteries with Monks, and the desarts with Anchorites.

Go sell all, &c.] A personal command (for tryal and discovery) as was that of God to Abraham, Go kill thy Son Isaac. Christians may possess; but yet as if they possessed not; they must hang loose to all outward things, and be ready to forgo them, when called to lose them for Christ.

And give to the poor] So shalt thou clear thy self from all suspition of covetousnes, which properly consists in pinching and saving; and so is distinguished by the Apostle from extortion, which stands in immoderate getting, 1 Cor. 6. 10. 1 Tim. 3. 3.

In the year of grace 759. certain Persian Magicians fell into that madnes, that they perswaded themselves and sundry others, that if they sold all they had, and gave it to the poor, and then afterwards threw themselves naked from off the walls into the river, they should presently be admitted into heaven. Perierunt hac insaniâ permulti, saith mine Author, Many were cast away by this mad enterprize. How much better (if without superstition and opinion of merit, Amadeus Duke of Savoy) who being asked by certain Ambassadors that came to his Court, what Hounds he had, for they desired to see them? shewed them the next day a pack of poor people feeding at his table; and said, these are the Hounds wherewith I hunt after heaven.

Verse 22. He went away sorrowful] That Christ should require that which he was not willing to perform. If heaven be to be had upon no other terms, Christ may keep his heaven to himself; hee'l have none. How many have we now adays, that must be gainers by their Religion, which must be another Diana to the Craftsmasters. They are resolved howsoever to lose nothing, suffer nothing, but rather kick up all: Jeroboams gravior jactura regionis quam religionis. The King of Navarr told Beza, that in the cause of Religion he would launch no further into the sea, then he might be sure to return safe to the haven. A number of such politick Professors we have, that come to Christ (as this young man did) hastily, but depart heavily, when once it comes to a whole-sale of all for Christ, which yet is the first Lesson, the removens prohibens.

Verse 23. A rich man shall hardly enter] With that burthen of thick clay, that Camels-bunch on his back: Heaven is a stately Pallace, with a narrow portal; there must be both stripping and straining, ere one can get through this strait gate. The greatest wealth is ordinarily tumoured up with the greatest swelth of rebellion against God. Vermis divitiarum est superbia, saith Augustine. When I first entered into orders, saith another Pope, I had some good hopes of my salvation; when I became a Cardinal, I doubted of it; but since I came to be Pope, I do even almost despair: And well he might, as long as he sate in that chair of pestilence, being that man of sin, that son of perdition, 2 Thes. 2. 3. Ad hunc statum venit Romana Ecclesia, said Petrus Aliacus long since, ut non esset digna regi nisi per reprobos. The Popes, like the Devils, are then thought to do well, when they cease to do hurt, saith Johan. Sarisburiensis. They have had so much grace left we see (some of them howsoever) as to acknowledge, that their good and their blood rose together, that honors changed their manners, and that they were the worse men for their great wealth; and that as Shimei seeking his servants lost himself; so they, by reaching after riches and honors, lost their souls. Let rich men often ruminate this terrible text, and take heed. Let them untwist their cables, that is, their heart by humiliation, James 5. 1. and 1. 10. till it be made like small threads, as it must be, before they can enter into the eye of a needle, that is, eternal life.

Verse 25. They were exceedingly amazed] Because they knew that all men either are or would be rich; and that of rich men, scarce any but trusted in their riches. Therefore, though our Saviour told them, (Mark 10. 24 that he meant it of those only that relyed upon their riches, yet they remained as much unsatisfied as before, and held it an hard case that so many should miss of heaven. We have much ado to make men believe that the way is half so hard as Ministers make it.

Verse 26. With men this is impossible] Because rich mens hearts are ordinarily so wedded and wedged to the world, that they will not be loosned, but by a powerful touch from the hand of Heaven. Think not therefore, as many do, that there is no other Hell but poverty, no better Heaven then abundance: Of rich men they say, What should such a man ail? The Irish ask, What they mean to dy, &c. The gold ring and gay clothing carried it in S. James his time. But he utterly disliked such partiality; and tells us, that God hath chosen the poor in this world, rich in faith, to be heirs of his Kingdom: In which respect he bids the brother of low degree, rejoyce in that he is exalted in Christ.

But with God all things are possible] He can quickly root out confidence in the creature, and rivet rich men to himself. He can do more then he will; but whatsoever he willeth, that he doth, without stop or hinderance. Men may want of their will for want of power. Nature may be interrupted in her course, as it was when the fire burnt not the three Worthies, the water drowned not Peter walking upon it, &c. Satan may be crossed and chained up: But who hath resisted the Almighty? who ever waxed fierce against God and prospered? Nature could say, All things are easie to God, and nothing impossible; Howbeit for a finite creature to believe the infinite Attributes of God, he is not able to do it thorowly, without supernatural grace.

Neither is it without an emphasis, that they begin with a Behold. Behold we have forsaken all, as if Christ were therefore greatly beholden to them, and if the young man were promised treasure in heaven, doing so, and so, then they might challenge it; they might say with the Prodigal, Give me the portion that pertains unto me.

Verse 28. Ye which have followed me in the Regeneration] As if our Saviour should have said, to forsake all is not enough, unless ye be regenerate; so some sense it. Others by Regeneration understand the estate of the Gospel, called elsewhere a new heaven, and a new earth, 2 Pet. 3. 13. the world to come, Heb. 2. 5. for God plants the heavens, and lays the foundation of the earth, that he may say to Zion, thou art my people. There are that understand by Regeneration, the general Resurrection (of which also some think Plato had heard, and therefore held, that in the Revolution of so many years men should be just in the same estate wherein they were before.) These that follow this latter sense, read the text thus, by an alteration of points, Ye which have followed me, shall, in the Regeneration (when the Son of man shall sit in his glory) sit upon twelve thrones, &c.

Ye shall also sit upon twelve thrones] As so many Kings. Kings they are here, but somewhat obscure ones, as Melchisedech was; but shall then appear with Christ in glory, far outshining the Sun in his strength, higher then all the Kings of the earth. When Daniel had described the greatness and glory of all the four Monarchies of the world, at last he comes to speak of a Kingdom, which is the greatest and mightiest under the whole heaven, and that is the Kingdom of the Saints of the most high. So glorious is their estate even here; what shall it be then at that great day? And if the Saints (every of them) shall judge the Angels; what shall the Apostles do? surely as they absolved or condemned men in this world, so shall it fare with them at the general Judgement.

Verse 29 Shall receive an hundred fold] In reference to Isaac's hundred-fold increase of his seed, Gen. 26. 12. or that best of grounds, Mat. 13. Those that do pillage us, they do but husband us; sow for us, when they make long furrows on our backs, Psal. 126. and ride over our heads, Psal. 66. 12. Gordius the Martyr said, It is to my loss, if you bate me any thing in my sufferings. Crudelitas vestra nostra gloria, said they in Tertullian, your cruelty is our glory; and the harder we are put to it, the greater shall be our reward in heaven. Nay on earth too; the Saints shall have their losses for Christ recompenced, either in money or moneys-worth, either in the same, or a better thing. Job had all doubled to him; Valentinian, for his Tribune-ship, the Empire cast upon him, after Julian the Apostate, who had put him out of office for his Religion. Q. Elizabeth (whose life for a long while had been like a ship in the midst of an Irish sea) after long restraint was exalted from misery to Majesty, from a prisoner to a Princess. Optanda nimirum est jactura quæ lucro majore pensatur, saith Agricola. It is doubtless a lovely loss, that is made up with so great gain. Had Q. Elizabeth foreknown, whiles she was in prison, what a glorious Raign she should have had for 44 years, she would never have wished her self a Milk-Maid. So, did but the Saints understand what great things abide them both here and hereafter, they would bear any thing chearfully. An hundred fold here, and eternal life hereafter: Oh, who would not then turn spiritual purchaser? Well might S. Paul say, godliness is profitable to all things. Well might the Psalmist say, In doing (in suffering) thy Will, there is great reward. Not for doing it only, but in doing it; for righteousness is its own reward. S. Mark hath it thus, He that leaveth house, brethren, sisters, father, &c. shall receive the same in kind, house, brethren, sisters, father, &c. That is, 1. He shall have communion with God and his consolations, which are better then them all; as Galeacius that Italian Marques that left all for Christ, avowed them; and as Paulinus Nolanus, when his City was taken by the Barbarians, prayed thus to God, Lord, let me not be troubled at the loss of my gold and silver, for thou art all in all unto me. Communion with Jesus Christ is præmium ante præmium, heaven afore-hand, the anticipation of glory. 2. He many times gives his suffering servants here such supplies of their outward losses, in raising them up other friends and means, as do abundantly countervail what they have parted with. Thus, though David was driven from his wife, and she was given to another, God gave him a friend Jonathan, whose love was beyond the love of women. So though Naomi lost her husband and children, Boaz, Ruth, and Obed became to her instead of all. The Apostles left their houses and household-stuff, to follow Christ; but then they had the houses of all godly people open to them, and free for them, and happy was that Lydia that could entertain them; so that having nothing, they yet possessed all things. They left a few friends, but they found far more where ever they came. Wherefore it was a senseless senseless sarcasm of Julian the Apostate, when reading this text, he jearingly demanded, whether they should have an hundred wives also, for that one they had parted with? 3. God commonly exalts his people to the contrary good to that evil they suffer for him; as Joseph of a slave, became a Ruler; as Christ that was judged by men, is Judge of all men. The first thing that Caius did, after he came to the Empire, was to prefer Agryppa, who had been imprisoned for wishing him Emperor. Constantine embraced Paphnutius, and kissed his lost eye. The King of Poland sent Zelislaus his General, who had lost his hand in his wars, a golden hand instead thereof. God is far more liberal to those that serve him, suffer for him. Can any son of Jesse do for us as he can?

Verse 30. But many that are first, &c.] Because Peter and the rest had called for their pay (almost afore they had been at any pains for Christ) he therefore quickeneth them in these words; bidding them bestir themselves better, lest others, that are now hindermost, should get beyond them, and carry the crown. Lay hold on eternal life, saith Paul; intimating that it is hanged on high, as a garland, so that we must reach after it, strain to it. So run that ye may obtain; look you to your work, God will take care of your wages; you need never trouble your selves about that matter.

Chap. XX.

Verse 1. For the Kingdom of heaven, &c.]

That last sentence Christ further illustrateth and enforceth by this following parable. Peter and the rest were in danger to be puffed up with the pre-conceit of their abundant reward promised, Chap. 19.28,29. This to prevent, and that they might not stand upon their terms and tip-toes, they are again and again given to know, that many that are first shall be last, and last first.

Which went out early in the morning] God is found of them that seek him not, Isa. 65.1. Yea, the Father seeketh such to worship him, John 4.23. he solliciteth suitours and servants. A wonderful condescension it is, that he looketh out of himself upon the Saints and Angels in heaven, Psalm 113.6. How much more upon us poor earth-worms?

Labourers into his vineyard] Not loiterers. Jacob saw the Angels, some ascending, others descending, none standing still. God hath made Behemoth to play in the waters, not so men; they must be doing, that will keep in with God.

Verse 2. For a penny a day.] Not for eternal life (for this those murmuring merit-mongers never had, who yet had their penny) but something (whatever it were) that gave the labourers good content; that it was for which each of them followed Christ, whether for meat perishing, or enduring.

John 6. 27.

Verse 3. Others standing idle] For any good they did, or could do, till sent into the vineyard, and set a work by God. Till then we are mear excrements of humane society. Nos numerus sumus, &c.

Verse 4. Go ye also into the vineyard.] God hath his times to call men in; only let them stand in Gods way, wait at the posts of wisdoms gates, at the pool of Bethesda, &c. Gratuita & inopinata est ad gratiam vocatio, Ephes. 1.11. The separation of the Saints is wonderful, Exod. 33.16.

Verse 5. About the sixth and ninth hour.] God hath his servants of all sexes and sizes, calling when and whom he pleaseth. And they have the comfort and credit of it that are first called, so they walk worthy of their time, and that vocation wherewith they are called, Ephes. 3.1. therefore ye will enquire, enquire, return, come, Isa. 21. 12. They that say, men may repent hereafter, say truly, but not safely. They that alledge these here that came in at the eleventh hour, must consider that these were never called till then. But now God calleth, yea commandeth all men every where to repent, Acts 17. 30. And now he is more peremptory, sure, then ever heretofore. See Heb. 2. 3. how many are daily taken away in their offers and essays, before they have prepared their hearts to cleave to God?

Verse 7. Go ye also into the vineyard.] At this hour the penitent Thief was sent in, and he bestirred him; for he justifies Christ, condemns himself, chides his fellow for railing, prays for a part in Paradise, &c. he lived much in a little time. Howbeit, this is a singular example, one of the miracles wherewith Christ would honor the ignominy of his Cross. Neither is it often seen or read of, that old men are converted. They are usually so set in sin, that they are hardly removed; such an hoof they have over their hearts, that scarce any thing will affect them. Abraham in the old Testament, and Nicodemus in the New, were called in their old age. Name a third he that can. Conversion (as Divines observe) usually falls out between eighteen years of age, and twenty eight, when men have less of the world, which afterward steals away affection, &c.

Verse 8. Saith unto his steward.] That is, to his Son Christ whom he hath made Judge of all, to give unto every man according to his works. This he will do with demonstration of his singular both justice (so that none shall receive less then was promised him) and mercy (so that all shall receive more then they deserved.) For although their penny be here called their hire, and elsewhere their reward, yea their wages, yet all is of grace.

Verse 9. And when they came.] These last labourers were first paid, because they trusted not to the worth of their own works, but to Gods free grace and goodness; when the other are turned off in displeasure, with Tolle quod tuum est, & vade: Take thy penny, and be packing.

Verse 10. They supposed that they, &c.] Good works are mercatura Regni cœlestis, saith Bellarmine. But God is no such Merchant. Cœlum gratis non accipiam, I will not have heaven for nothing, saith Vega. Thou shalt never have it therefore; Ile give thee that gift.

Verse 11. They murmured, &c.] They had that they agreed for, some temporal blessings, which is all that carnal men commonly care for. Or if any seek after spiritual things, it is not for any beauty he seeth, or taste he findeth in them, but only as a bridge to bring them to heaven; as Spira confessed of himself. It is not good therefore to indent and bargain with God how much he shall give us, either of temporals or spirituals; for so you may have your penny, and yet be discontented, that it is but a penny and no more. Profits, pleasures, honors, appear to be but empty things, when men are to go into another world.

Verse 12. Thou hast made them equal.] Lo this is the guise of graceless hypocrites, to be quarrelling, and contending with God and man, as unworthily dealt withal. Thus those Jewish Justitiaries, Isa. 58. 3. hit God in the teeth with their good services, and small thanks. So the proud Pharisee sets forth, not his wants, but his worth. Contrariwise, Jacob cryes out in a low language, Domine non sum dignus, Gen. 30. 10. So doth Paul, 1. Cor. 15. 9. the Centurion, Matth. 8. 6. the Baptist, Mat. 3. 11. S. Augustine, Non sum dignus, quem tu diligas, Domine, Lord, I am not worthy of thy love.

Verse 13. Friend, I do thee no wrong.] Friend he is called, not Reprobate, though he were a murmurer, a merit-monger. In arguing the case with others, use hard arguments, but in a soft language. This will soonest work; for man is a cross crabbed creature, and if roughly dealt with, will sooner slight you for your passion, then regard your reason, though never so convincing, because not well managed. There are a generation whose words are swords, whose tongues are rapiers to run men thorow with, upon every small occasion, and their throats as a gaping grave to bury them in. Rom 3. 13. 10.

Verse 14. Take that thine is, and go.] A fearful sentence. David blesseth himself from those men of Gods hand; which have their portion here, and that's all they are to look for. Valdò protestatus sum, said Luther, when great gifts were offered him, Psal. 17. Psal. 17. 14.

me nolle sic à Deo satiari. A gracious spirit cannot rest satisfied with low things. The Turkish Empire, as big as it is, saith the same Luther, is nothing else but a crust of bread, which the good man of the house casteth to his dogs.

Verse 15. Is it not lawful for me, &c.] This is Gods speech (who is the great Propietary of all) it may not be ours, who have nothing of our own, but all in trust: So that when we present any thing to God, we must say as David did, 1 Chron. 29.14. and afterwards Justinian the Emperor, τὰ σὰ ἐκ τῶν σῶν σοὶ προσφέρομεν. Of thine own we give thee: for all that is in the heaven and the earth is thine. S. Bernard reports of Pope Eugenius, that meeting with a poor, but honest Bishop, he secretly gave him certain jewels wherewith he might present him. If God did not first furnish us, we should have nothing wherewith to honor him, or do good to others.

Is thine eye evil, because I am good?] Its commonly observed, that Witches, and those that are in league with the Devil to do mischief, are never given over so to do, till they come to have an evil eye. Hence that, nescio quis teneros, &c. and those that are bewitched, are said to be overseen, that is to be looked upon with an envious eye. Envy is a quick-sighted and sharp-fanged malignity, Prov. 27.4. and doth, de alienâ mente tam prompte quam prave conjicere, as one saith, nimbly and naughtily guess at another mans meaning Verse 16. So the last shall be first, &c.] This is the purport of the preceding parable. Application is the life of preaching.

Few are chosen] Its a strange speech of Chrysostome, in his fourth sermon to the people of Antioch, where he was much beloved, and did much good. How many, think you, shall be saved in this City? It will be an hard speech to you, but I will speak it: Though there be so many thousands of you, yet there cannot be found an hundred that shall be saved, and I doubt of them too: For what villany is there in youth? what sloth in old men? and so he goes on. See the notes on Mat. 7.14.

Verse 17. Took the twelve Disciples] To rouse them and raise them out of their carnal fears and dejections. Jerusalem was the Saints slaughter house, Luke 13.33. (as Rome is now, which therefore is spiritually called Jerusalem, Egypt, Sodom, &c.) Hither our Saviour bent his course: hereupon they were amazed and afraid, (Mark 10.32. and gave him counsel to go back rather into Galilee for his own and their safety, John 11.8. He takes them therefore apart, and tells them as followeth, what they must trust to; and that though he be brought to the dust of death, he will rise again gloriously, to their great comfort.

Revel. 11.8.

Verse 18. Behold we go up to Jerusalem] Behold, as it requires attention (and this was no more then need; for Saint Luke tells us that they understood none of these things, &c.) so it sets forth our Saviours forwardness, to go this dangerous voyage.

Luke 18.34.

Verse 19. To mock, and to scourge, and to crucifie him.] What are all our sufferings to his? and yet we think our selves undone, if but toucht; and in setting forth our calamities, we adde, we multiply, we rise in our discourse, like him in the Poet. I am thrice miserable, nay ten, twenty, an hundred, a thousand times unhappy. And yet all our sufferings are but as the shivers and chips of that Cross, upon which Christ, nay many Christians have suffered. In the time of Adrian the Emperor, ten thousand Martyrs are said to have been crucified in the Mount of Ararath, crowned with thorns, and thrust into the sides with sharp darts, after the example of the Lords passion. The chief of whom were Achmicus, Heliades, Theodorus, Carcerius, &c.

Verse 20. Then came to him, &c.] Then, most unseasonably, when Christ had by the parable been teaching them humility, and now was discoursing of his death and passion, then came these sons of Zebedee to beg a principality in Christs imaginary earthly Monarchy. And this is not the first time of their so foul mistake, so unseasonable a suit to him, or strife among themselves. The leprosie was cured at once in Naaman; so is not corruption in the Saints, but by degrees, and at times.

The mother of Zebedees children.] Set on by her two Sons, who were ashamed to make the motion themselves (but as good they might, for Christ knew all, and therefore directs his answer to them, Mark 10.35.) and she also was not well assured of the fitness of her request, and therefore came courtesying and craving a certain thing; not telling telling him what at first, as going somewhat against her conscience. And surely her request had been impudent, but that she presumed upon her near allyance to Christ: For she is thought to have been sister to Joseph, who was Pater Christi politicus; and thence her boldness, by reason of her right of kindred by the Fathers side. And this is some kind of carnal excuse; yet not for her and her sons folly and vanity, in dreaming of an earthly Kingdom, and therein a distribution of honors and offices, as in David and Solomons days.

Verse 21. What wilt thou?] We may not over-hastily ingage our selves by promise of this or that to our best friends, but hold off and deliberate. Alioqui saliens antequam videat, casurus est antequam debeat. Bern.

The one on thy right hand] Quid voveat dulci nutricula majus alumno? Our Saviour had promised in the former Chapter that the twelve should sit upon twelve thrones, &c. These mens suit was for the first and second seat. Self-love makes men ambitious, and teacheth them to turn the glass, to see themselves bigger, others lesser then they are; Paul on the contrary, was least of Saints, last of Apostles. Horat.

Verse 22. Ye know not what ye ask] Ye ask and miss, because ye ask amiss. A prayer for things not lawful, begs nothing but a denial, as Moses did, in praying to enter into the Land, Deut. 3. 25. as Job did in that peevish request of his, that God would let loose his hand and cut him off; as the Disciples did in that over-curious enquiry, Lord, Wilt thou at this time restore the Kingdom to Israel? Our Saviour answers, that that's not fit for them to know. But a better thing he could tell them, that they should shortly after be cloathed with the Holy Ghost. God sometimes in much mercy crosseth the prayers of his people, as he did Davids for the childs life, who if he had lived, would have been but a standing monument of Davids shame. Was it not better for him to have a Solomon? The Saints have their prayers out, either in money or moneys-worth, provided they bring lawful petitions, and honest hearts. James 4. 1. Iob 6.8,9. Act. 1.6,7,8.

Are ye able to drink of the cup, &c.] Afflictions are frequently set forth by this metaphor of a Cup; taken, say some, from an ancient custom that the father of the family should give to each under his charge a cup fit for his use, according to his bigness; or, as others think, from the manner of feasts, whereat the symposiarch, or Ruler of the feast, as he is called, John 2. prescribed what and how much every man should drink.

And to be baptized with the baptism] Or plunged over head and ears in the deep waters of affliction. Of these we may say as one doth of the Spa waters, that they are more wholsom then pleasant. Ever since Christ cast his cross into them, as Moses did that tree, Exod. 15. 25. the property of them is altered, the waters healed.

They say unto him, We are able] In your own conceit at least, not else. For these two Disciples, as they knew not what they asked, so they knew not what they answered. And yet Maldonat hath the face to defend them in it, as if they here testified their alacrity, rather then betrayed their precipitancy: Sed exitus acta probavit; they shewed their valour at Christs apprehension.

Verse 23. Ye shall drink indeed of my cup] Illud solum quod suavius est, & limpidius. The Saints sip of the top of God cups; as for the dregs, the wicked shall wring them out. and drink them up.

And be baptized, &c.] Or ducked, washed (not drowned) as S. Paul was in the shipwrack; or as the baptized child, which shakes off the water, or is dryed after baptism. Afflictions, saith one, are called Baptism, because they set Gods mark upon us (as baptism doth) that we belong to God; this for outward afflictions. And for desertion, it is called Christs cup, because we are sure to pledge him in that too, and be comformed unto him, as was Job, David, Heman, Psal. 88, &c. Grace is no target against affliction; but the best shall have terrours within, and troubles without, as sure as the coat is on their back, or the heart in their belly.

Is not mine to give] i.e. It is no part of my present office; or, I have no such commission from my Father to give precedencies to all that affect them. Christ hereby seeks to raise up the low groveling spirits of his Apostles to things supernatural, supernal.

Verse 24. They were moved] They were angry at that ambition in their fellows, that themselves were deeply guilty of. So Diogenes trampled Plato's pride, but with greater pride. So Crassus earnestly inveighed against covetousness in others, when there was not a more covetous caitiff then he upon the earth. So Gregory the great stomaked the title of universal Bishop to the Patriarch of Constantinople, which yet himself affected, and his successor Boniface arrogated and usurped.

Infelicium Ecclesiæ concertationem causam dixit Ecclesiasticorum φιλαρχίαν. In vita Pareï.

Verse 25. Jesus called them to him and said] We must (by Christs example) advance, cherish concord all we can, amongst Ministers especially, by casting out those make bates, emulation and ambition. Pareus was wont to say, that the only cause of all Church-dissensions was, Ministers reaching after rule and preheminence, as did Diotrephes. And that if this evil humor could possibly be purged out, there would be a sweet symmetry, an happy harmony of all hearts.

And they that are great] The Grandees of the earth. There is, saith one, a greatness Bellwine and Genuine. In that, a beast may, and doth exceed us: In this we exceed our selves and others. Great men are not always wise, saith Elihu, Job 32.9. And Nemo me major nisi qui justior, said Agesilaus, when the King of Persia stiled himself the great King. Calamitas nostra Magnus est, said Mimus concerning Pompey, the people applauding so handsom a solœcism. Privilegium unius conceditur in beneficium alterius, saith a learned Doctor; & si vis esse verè magnus, ne sis instar utris folle tumidi, sed instar uteri prole gravidi; nec attollas inane supercilium, sed exhibeas utile ministerium. Goodness is the only greatness.

Verse 26. But it shall not be so amongst you] How express is that against Papal Primacy and Lordly Prelacy? When the Duke shall be damned, what will become of the Bishop, said the Clown to the Bishop of Cullen? Mr. Whitehead refused a Bishoprick, because he liked not to be Lorded. And Mr. Coverdale being deprived of his Bishoprick in Q. Maries days, would not (for the same cause) be re-invested in Q. Elizabeths, but taught a school. M. Knox would not have a Bishoprick, because it had aliquid commune cum Antichristo.

Verse 27. Let him be your servant] This is the ready way to rise. Neither may any think himself too good to serve the Saints, to wash their feet, to minister to their necessities. Christ came out of the bosom of his Father to fetch them to heaven. The Holy Ghost disdains not to dwell in their hearts. Angels are desirous to do them any good office. Prophets think not much to minister to them, 1 *Pet.*1.12. Paul, and Apollo, and Cephas are theirs, publike servants to the Church; accounting it a far greater matter prodesse quàm praesse, to seek mens salvation, then to exercise dominion.

Verse 28. And to give his life a ransom] A redemptory, a valuable rate, for it was the blood of God wherewith the Church was purchased, Acts 20.28. silver and gold could not do it, 1 *Pet.*1.18,19. nor any thing else but that Counter-price given by Christ, 1 *Tim.*2.6.

Tres in his locis ita curatos esse crediderim. Aretius.

Verse 29. And as they departed from Jericho] Christ cured one blind man as he went into Jericho, Luke 18. and two as he went out; for all the haste he had to go to Jerusalem. Hence such multitudes followed him, to make up his ensuing triumph.

Mark 9. 25. Psal.58.4.

Verse 30. When they heard that Jesus passed by] Happy it was for them that, though blind, yet they were not deaf. For as death came in by the ear, so doth life. Hear and your souls shall live, Isa.55.3. a heavy ear is a singular judgement, Isa.6.10. a hearing ear a special favour, Prov.20.12. when God stroke Zachary, Luke 1. he made him dumb, but not deaf. When God stroke Saul, he made him blind, but not deaf. When God stroke Mephibosheth he made lame, but not deaf. There is a deaf Devil, and a deaf Adder, and deaf man, that yet want for no ears, Isa. 43. 8. But he that heareth instruction is in the way of life, saith Solomon. These two blind beggars had heard of Christ by the hearing of the ear, but that satisfied them not, unless their eyes also might see him, Job 42. 5. They way-lay therefore the Lord of light, who gives them upon their suit, both sight and light, irradiates both organ and object, cures them of their both outward and inward opthalmies at once.

Thou son of David] They knew and acknowledged Christ to be the true Messias. Few such knowing blind beggars now adays. They are commonly more blind in mind then body, loose and lawless vagrants: such as are neither of any Church, nor Common-wealth; but as the baser sort of people in Swethland, who do always break the Sabbath, saying, that 'tis only for Gentlemen to sanctifie it; or rather as the poor Brasilians, who are said to be sine rege, lege, fide, without any Government, Law, or Religion.

Verſe 31. And the multitude rebuked them] In prayer, we muſt look to meet with many rubs and diſcouragements; but Gods ſpirit is heroick, and gets over them all. The Devil will interrupt us, as the Pythoniſs did Paul, Acts 16.16. as the birds did Abraham, Gen. 15.11. as thoſe Samaritans did the Jews in building the Temple, Neh. 6. Hence we are bid Strive in prayer, Coloſ. 4.2. and watch in prayer; for Satan will be at our right hand, as at Jehoſhuahs, Zach. 3.1. watching his time to caſt in, if not a prophane, yet an impertinent thought, thereby to bereave us of the benefit of our prayers; beſides our own natural in-devotion through hardneſs of heart, heavineſs of body, multiplicity of worldly diſtractions and diſturbancies. All which we muſt break through, and cry the more earneſtly, as Bartimeus here did, though checkt by the multitude. Have mercy on us, O Lord, &c. Daniel would not be kept from his God for any danger of death, Dan. 6. nor the French Proteſtants reſtrain prayer, though King Henry 3. made a Law to forbid them to pray with their families. The Sun ſhall ſooner ſtand ſtill, then the trade of godlineſs, and that continual intercourſe that is betwixt God and the Chriſtian ſoul. Polan. in Daniel.

Verſe 32. And Jeſus ſtood ſtill] See the admirable power of fervent prayer. Chriſt ſtands and ſtays (for all the haſte of his journey to Jeruſalem, which till he had finiſhed, Oh how was he ſtraitned? Luke 12.50.) to hear the blind beggars Petition. So the Sun once ſtood ſtill in Gibeon, and the Moon in the valley of Ajalon, upon the prayer of worthy Joſhua, who ſet the Trophies of his victory in the very orbs of heaven. Preces Chriſti licet feſtinantem remorantur.

Verſe 33. Lord, that our eyes might be opened] Truly the light is ſweet, and a pleaſant thing it is for the eyes to behold the Sun, Eccleſ. 11. 7. and yet how little is this mercy prized, becauſe common. Our corrupt natures heed nothing that we enjoy, as the eye ſeeth nothing that lies on it, but things at a diſtance it diſcerns clearly. Bona à tergo formoſiſſima. Copy of good things breeds ſatiety, and makes them no dainties, till God for our folly many times makes us ſee the worth of them by the want of them, and ſo commends and indears his favours to us. But what a blindneſs is this, worſe then that of Bartimeus, never to ſee the face, but the back only of benefits.

Verſe 34. And Jeſus had compaſſion on them] He made their caſe his own. Miſericordia ſounds as much as miſery laid to heart. Chriſts bowels ſounded upon the ſight and ſuit of theſe blind beggars; and this was beyond all alms, ſhould he have done no more for them. For when one gives an alms, he gives ſomewhat without himſelf, but by compaſſion we relieve another by ſomewhat within and from our ſelves, whiles we draw out our ſoul (not our ſheaf only) to the hungry, Iſa. 58.10. Iſa. 63.15.

And immediately their eyes received ſight] This is not every blind mans happineſs, that yet prays for ſight. But there is a better eye-ſight then that of the body, which if God vouchſafe to any in bodily blindneſs (as he did to that blind Boy of Gloceſter that had ſuffered impriſonment there for confeſſing the truth) it may be ſaid to ſuch ſurely, as Biſhop Hooper the Martyr did to him: Ah poor Boy, God hath taken from thee thy outward ſight, but hath given thee another much more precious, &c. The like favour God ſhewed to Didymus Alexandrinus, who though blind from his childhood, yet was not only an excellent Artiſt, but an able Divine; and wrote certain Commentaries on the Pſalms, and likewiſe on the Goſpels; being now (ſaith Jerome, who relates it) above 83 years of age. Trithemius and Bozius report the like things, concerning one Nicaſius de Voarda a Dutch-man, who being ſtruck blind at three years old, became nevertheleſs an excellent ſcholar, and skilful in the Laws, which he publikely profeſſed at Collen. Afterwards he proceeded Maſter of Arts at Lovain, Licentiate in Divinity at the ſame Univerſity, and laſtly Doctor of the Laws at Cullen; where, after he had printed his publike Lectures, he dyed, and was buried in the Cathedral-Church, Anno Dom. 1491. 17. *Calend. CHAP. XXI.

Verse 1. And when they drew nigh to Jerusalem]

IN this one verse, our Evangelist closely comprizeth all that S. John sets down of our Saviours oracles and miracles from his seventh Chapter to Chap. 12.12. viz. the history of five moneths and ten days; for Christ rode not into the City till the fifth day before his last Passoever, John 12.12. having the day before been anointed by Mary at Bethany, John 12.1. called here Bethpage, or the Conduit-house.

Bethpage à בת & פגי.

Verse 2. An Ass tyed, and a colt with her] There are that by the Ass understand the Jews laden with the Law; and by her foal, the Gentiles that wandred whither they would. That Canonist made the most of it, that said that Children are therefore to be baptized, because the Apostles brought to Christ not only the Ass, but the Colt too.

Oneramus asinum & non curat quia asinus est. Bern. Sphinx Philos. page 229.

Verse 3. The Lord hath need of them] The Lord of all, both beasts and hearts; for else how could he so soon have obtained the Ass of her master? Some read the Text thus. The Lord hath need of them, and will presently send them back again: to teach us to be no further burdensom or beholden to others, then needs must.

Verse 4. All this was done that, &c.] Here is the mysterie of the history; which would otherwise seem to some ridiculous and to little purpose. He hereby declared himself that King of his Church fore-promised by the Prophets, how poor and despicable soever, as the world accounts it.

Verse 5. Tell ye the daughter of Sion] Here was that also of the Psalmist fulfilled, God is my King of old, working salvation in the midst of the earth, Psal.74.12. For Jerusalem is by the Fathers observed to stand in the very center and navel of the habitable earth, as if it were fatally founded to be the City of the great King.

Thy King cometh unto thee] All in Christ is for our behoof and benefit, 1 *Cor.*1.30. and Micah 4.8,9. Unto thee shall it come, O daughter of Zion, even the first dominion; the Kingdom shall come to thee daughter of Jerusalem. Why then dost thou cry out aloud? Is there no King in thee? Is thy Counsellor perished? A Mandamus from this King will do it at any time, *Psal.*44.4.

Meek, and sitting upon an Ass] Not upon a stately Palfrey, as Alexander, Julius Cæsar, &c. no such state here. Christs Kingdom was of another world: He came riding meek; and his word (the Law of his Kingdom) is both to be taught and received with meekness, 2 Tim.2.25. James 1.21. At Genua in Italy they shew the tail of the Ass our Saviour rod on for an holy relique; and bow before it with great devotion. On Palm-Sunday, their Priests bring forth an Ass in state, and bow before him, and worship him, as if Christ himself were there present: which when the Turkish Ambassadors once beheld at Craconia in Poland, they blessed themselves, and cryed out, O tetram impietatem! Siccine asinum brutam bestiam adorari? O detestible impiety! should an Ass be so adored? Neither will these dull dizards be reclaimed from such fond-fopperies; being herein like those Italian Asses, which feeding upon the weed Hen-bane, are so stupified, that they lie for dead, neither can they be wakned till half-hilded.

Verse 6. And the Disciples went] With a certain blind obedience they went on Christs errand, though not very likely to speed. Their Masters sole Authority carried them on against all difficulties and absurdities. When God commands us any thing, we may not dispute, but dispatch; argue, but agree to it, captivate our Reason, exalt our faith.

Verse 7. And put on them their cloathes] Teaching us to honour God with the best of our substance, and to dedicate our selves wholly to the Lord our God. Jonathan stripped himself, for his friend David, of the robe that was upon him and his garments, even to his sword and his girdle. Christ suspended his glory for a season, laid aside his rich and royal robes, borrowed a cast-suit of us, that he might cloath us with his righteousness: And shall we think much to cloath him in his naked members? &c. to part with any thing for his sake and service?

(saith one) these set the Ass upon Christ, not Christ upon the Ass. Thus did Jehu, and before him Jeroboam, cui gravior jactura regionis quam religionis. Thus do all our Machiavellians and the worlds wisards, whose rule is, Philosophandum sed paucis: Religiosum oportet esse, sed non religentem, &c. But what saith a father? Deum siquis parum metuit, valde contemnit. And one thing, said Luther, that will be the ruine of Religion is worldly policy, that would have all well however, and seeks to procure the publike peace, by impious and unlawfull counsels and courses. Spec. bel. sac. Fulgent. Quæ vult omnia redigere in ordinem, & publicæ tranquillitati impiis consiliis mederi. Luth

Verse 8. And a very great multitude] Bondinus saith, he was met at this time by three-hundred-thousand Jews, some whereof went afore Christ, some followed after, according to the solemn rites and reverence used to be given to earthly Kings, in their most pompous triumphs. This was the Lords own work.

Verse 9. Hosanna to the Son of David] So they acknowledge Christ to be the true Messiah, and congratulate him his Kingdom over the Church; and yet a few-days after, these same, at the instigation of the Priests and Pharisees, cry Crucifie: dealing by Christ as Xerxes did by his steersman, whom he crowned in the morning, and then took off his head in the afternoon of the same day: or as the fickle Israelites dealt by David, 2 Sam. 20. where we shall find the same hands that erewhile fought for David to be all theirs, do now fight against him under the son of Bichri, to be none of theirs.

Verse 10. Who is this?] Why? could not they tell after so many miracles done among them? Were they such strangers at Jerusalem? Many live and dye very sots, even in those places where they have had line upon line, precept upon precept, &c. and yet they are no wiser then the child new weaned from the breast, Isa. 28. 8. their wits serve them not in spirituals, though otherwise shrewd enough.

Verse 11. The Prophet of Nazareth, &c.] The Archprophet they acknowledge him; but of Nazareth, of Galilee. They had not profited so much, or made so far progress in the mysterie of Christ, as to know him to have been born a Bethlehemite. And to nourish this error in the people it was, that the Devil, that old Impostor, Mark 1. 24. though he confessed Christ to be the Holy one of God, yet he calleth him Jesus of Nazareth. Satan etsi semel videatur verax, millies est mendax & semper fallax. Satan never speaks truth, but with a mind to deceive.

Verse 12. And cast out all them that sold] The Zeal of Gods house did ever eat him up. And (as revenge follows zeal 2 Cor. 7. 11.) he mars their markets, and drives them out of the Temple with Procul! procul este profani. And this deed of our Saviours was altogether Divine; whiles, as another Sampson, he lays heaps upon heaps (yet without bloodshed) with the jaw-bone of an Ass. St. Hierom extolleth this miracle above the raising of Lazarus, restoring the blind to their sight, the lame to their limbs, &c. and adds this mystical sense of the text. Quotidie Jesus ingreditur Templum Patris, & ejicit omnes tam Episcopos & Presbyteros, quam laicos & universum turbam de Ecclesia sua, & unius criminis habet, vendentes pariter & ementes. Christ is every day casting out of his Church all these mony-merchants, these sacrilegious simonists, both Ministers and others, that make sale of holy things, which the very Heathens abhorred; and others long since complained, that Benefices were bestowed non ubi optimè, sed ubi quæstuosissime, as if a man should bestow so much bread on his Ass, because he is to ride on him. In Græcorum sacris sacerdos exclamabat τίς τῶν δε quis hic? Respondebant qui adeunt, πολλοὶ τ' ἀγαθοὶ τε πάρεισι. The tables of the mony changers] This he did also at his first entrance into the Ministry, Joh. 2. 14, 15. See my notes on that text. The Reformation of Religion was Christs chief care, and so it should be ours: And although little was done by his first attempt Joh. 2. yet he tries again, so should we; contributing what we can to the work continually, by our prayers and utmost indeavours: wishing at least, as Ferus did, that we had some Moses to take away the evils in Church and state. Non enim unum tantum vitium, sed multos habemus, saith he, for we abound with idols, and evils. Exod. 32. 20.

Verse 13. Shall be called the house of prayer] A principal piece of Gods publike worship, and here put for the whole. Christ himself never came into this house, but he preached as well as prayed. In the Sanctuary was the incense-Altar in the middle, a type of prayer; the table of shew-bread, on the one side, betokening the twelve Tribes; and the Candlestick, a Type of the word, on the other: To teach us that there is a necessity of both Ordinances to all Gods people.

But ye have made it a den of theeves] So Christ calleth not the mony-merchants only, but the Priests also that set them a work. And whereas they cryed, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, (for to those was this speech first addressed, *Jer.*7.11.) as if they could not do amiss, because they served in the Temple, the Prophet tells them there, and our Saviour these here, that its so much the worse. What should an Angel of darkness do in heaven? Who required these things at your hands, to tread the courts of my Temple? This is the gate of the Lord, into which the righteous only should enter. The Papists in like sort cry out at this day, Ecclesia, Ecclesia, Nos sumus Ecclesia: and herewith think to shrowd their base huckstering of holy things. For omnia Romæ venalia, all things are saleable and soluble at Rome. But this covering is too short, and their gross theeveries are now made apparent to all the world, as their rood of grace, and the blood of Hales were at Pauls cross by that Noble Cromwell; and as their cheating trade of Indulgencies and Popes-pardons was by Luther, who by dint of argument overthrew those Romish mony-changers, and drove the country of those κισδοκαπηλοι and χρισεμποροι, as Nazianzen fitly calleth them.

Act. and Mon. fol.1084.

Verse 14. Came to him in the Temple, and he healed them] So true was that testimony given of our Saviour, *Luk.*24.19. that he was a Prophet mighty in deed, as well as in word, before God and all the people. Nos non eloquimur magna, sed vivimus, said the Primitive Christians. Our lives as well as our lips should speak us right and real in Religion: As Christ here, by his cures, gave a real answer to that question, ver. 10. Who is this? Let us learn to lead convincing lives: these are the best Apologies when alls done.

Verse 15. And the children crying, &c.] To the great grief and regret of those cankerd carls the Priests and Scribes: but to the singular commendation of their parents, who had so well taught and tutored them. So the children of Merindol answered the Popish Bishop of Cavaillon with such grace and gravity as was admirable. So, when John Lawrence was burnt at Colchester, the young Children came about him, and cryed in the audience of the persecutors, Lord strengthen thy servant, and keep thy promise.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1403.

Verse 16. Thou hast perfected praise] Κατηρτισω, thou hast given it all its parts, and proportions; thou hast compleated and accomplished it. The Hebrew saith, Fundasti, thou hast founded praise, and well bottomed it. Quæ enim perfecta, sunt firmissima. Now there is no mouth so weak, into which God cannot put words of praise. And how oft doth he chuse the silly-simples of the world, to confound the wise and learned? See my notes on Psal. 8. 2. And here it is observable that our Saviour answers warily to the captious question; so as he may neither offend Cæsar, by taking upon him to be a King, nor stumble the people, who took him for no less, and he was well pleased therewith. Let our columbine simplicity be mixed with serpentine subtilty, that we run not our selves heedlesly into unnecessary dangers.

Aptum est quod constat omnibus membris.

Verse 17. And he left them] As not willing to loose his labour, to cast away his cost upon men so unthankfull, untractable.

Ludit, qui sterili semina mandat humo.

Ovid.

Went out of the City into Bethany] Haply for safety sake: undoubtedly for his delight and to refresh himself with his friend Lazarus, after his hard labour, and little success.

Verse 18. As he returned into the City] There his work lay chiefly: thither therefore he repairs betimes, and forgat, for haste, to take his breakfast, as it may seem: for ere he came to the City he was hungry, though it were but a step thither. A good mans heart is where his calling is: Such a one, when he is visiting friends, or so, is like a fish in the air: whereunto if it leap for recreation or necessity, yet it soon returns to his own element.

Verse 19. He came to it and found nothing] He thought then to have found something: there was some kind of ignorance, we see in Christ as man, but not that that was sinfull.) His soul desired the first ripe fruits; yea though they had not been ripe and ready; hard hunger would have made them sweet and savoury, as the shepherds bread and onions were to Hunniades, when he was put to flight by the Turks: So well can hunger season homely cates, saith the Historian. Or this promising figtree our Saviour might say, as Alciat of the Cytress. Turk. Hist. fol. 310.

Pulchra coma est, pulchro digestaq; ordine frondes, Sed fructus nullos haec coma pulchra gerit. Emblem.

Verse 20. They marvelled, saying, &c.] And well they might, for no conjurer, with all his skill, could have caused this figtree so suddenly to wither, with a word speaking. For the figtree is the most juiceful of any tree, and bears the brunt of winter-blasts. Yea Plutarch tells us that there issueth from the figtree such a strong and most vehement vertue, as that if a Bull be tied unto it for some while, he becomes tame and tractable, though he were never so fierce and fell before. No wonder therefore though the Disciples wondred at so sudden an alteration. Plut. Sympos. lib. 6.

Verse 21. If ye have faith and doubt not] Or dispute not the matter as probable only and somewhat uncertain, but not altogether undoubted. He that doubteth debateth it, as it were, with himself, puts the case to and fro, sometimes being of one mind, sometimes of another. Now let not such a man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord, Jam. 1. 7. If ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established. Διαχρίνεσθαι, est alternantibus sententiis secum disceptare. Budæus. Isa. 7. 9.

Verse 22. Whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing] Faith is the foundation of prayer, and prayer is the fervency of faith. Cast thy burden upon the Lord, or thy request, thy gift upon the Lord, Psal. 55. 22. that is, whatsoever thou desirest that God should give thee in prayer, cast it upon him by faith, and it shall be effected. Fidei mendica manus. Faith and Prayer are the souls two hands, whereby she begs and receives of God all good things both for this and a better life. Hence of old when the Saints prayed, they spred out the palms of their hands, as to receive a blessing from God, 1 King. 8. 22. Exod. 9. 29. Psal. 143. 6.

Verse 23. And when he was come into the Temple] Not into the Inn or Victualling-house, though he had been so hungry by the way. He forgat that; The zeal of Gods house had eaten him up: it was his meat and drink to do the will of his heavenly father: this he preferred before his necessary food. And truly a man would wonder what a deal of work he did up in these three-days-space, before his apprehension. All those Sermons and discourses set down by Matthew from this place to chap. 26. by Mark from chap. 11. to chap. 14. by Luke from chap. 20. to chap. 22. and by John, from the 12. to 18. chap. were delivered by him in these three last days of his liberty. He dispatched them with speed, as if he had been loth to have been taken with his task undone. To teach us to get up our work, and to work out our salvation: Not work at it only; Lazy spirits aspire not to immortality. The twelve tribes served God instantly day and night, and found all they could do little enough, Act. 26. 7.

Came unto him as he was teaching] Otiosum vel tacitum facilè tulissent, saith an Interpreter. If he would have been quiet or silent, they would never have questioned him. A wolf flies not upon a painted sheep; we can look upon a painted toad with delight. It is your active Christian that is most spited and persecuted. Luther was offered to be made a Cardinal, if he would be quiet. He answered, no, not if I might be Pope; And defends himself thus against those that thought him (haply) a proud fool for his refusal. Let me be counted fool or any thing, said he, so I be not found guilty of cowardly silence. The Papists, when they could not rule him, railed at him, and called him an Apostate: He confesseth the action, and saith, I am indeed an Apostate, but a blessed and holy Apostate; one that had fallen off from the Devil. They called him Devil. But what said he? Prorsus Satan est Lutherus, sed Christus vivit & regnat: Amen. Luther is a Devil: Be it so; but Christ liveth and raigneth: that's enough for Luther: So be it. Inveniar fari superbus, & modò impii & lentii non arguar. Epist. ad Staunc. Confitetur se esse Apostatam, sed beatum & sanctum, qui fidem diabolo datam non servavit. Epist. ad Spalatinum. Ventres & Culinas appeti, arcas exhauriri. Attigisse coronam Papæ, & Monachorum ventres. Sculc.

By what authority doest thou these things?] They saw that their Kingdom would down, their trade decay, if Christ should be suffered thus to teach and take upon him in the Temple as a Reformer. When Erasmus was asked by the Elector of Saxony, why the Pope and his Clergy could so little abide Luther, he answered: For two great offences, viz. he had medled with the Popes tripple crown, and with the Monks fat paunches: Hinc illæ lachrimæ. Hence all that hatred: And hence now-adays those Popish questions to the Professors of the truth. By what Authority do ye these things? where had you your calling, your ordination? Where was your Religion before Luther?

Luther? Whereunto it was well answered by one once, in the Bible, where yours never was.

Verse 24. I also will ask you one thing] Our Saviour could have answered them roundly, that what he did, he did by the will and appointment of his heavenly father. But because he had avouched that so oft, and they believed him not, therefore he took another course. We must be ready to render a reason of our faith; but then it must be when we see it will be to some good purpose; as if otherwise, forbear, or unty one knot with another, as Christ here doth.

Nodum nodo dissipat. Aret.

Verse 25. The baptism of John whence was it?] That is, the whole ministry of John. As if our Saviour should have said, know ye not by what Authority I do these things? have ye not heard Johns testimony for me? And can ye deny that he had his authority for what he spake, from God? How is it then that ye ask me any such idle question as this? do ye not go cross to your consciences herein?

Verse 26. We fear the people] Lest they should be stoned, and the people feared them, lest they should be excommunicated. Thus they were mutual executioners one to another: for all fear hath torment, 1 Joh. 4. 18.

Verse 27. We cannot tell.] Lie and all: they could tell, and would not. Their reasonings within themselves, ver. 25. testifie that they knew the truth, but would not acknowledge it; they profess their ignorance rather: And such dealing we have from many learned Papists. Thus Bellarmine affirmeth that he never read in all the Bible a promise of pardon made to those that confess their sins to Almighty God. Baronius cannot see that Peter was in fault at Antioch, but Paul a great deal more, for taking him up for halting, Gal. 2. The wit of hereticks will better serve them to devise a thousand shifts to delude the truth, then their pride will suffer them once to yield and subscribe to it.

Verse 28. But what think you?] Christ reporteth himself to their own consciences, whiles he proveth Iohn Baptists Ministry to be from heaven, by the happy success he had in converting the vilest sinners, see Ier. 23. 22. 1 Cor. 9. 2. The peoples fruitfulness is the Ministers testimonial, 2 Cor. 3. 2. If but one of a City, or two of a family be gained to God, it is a sign that the Pastors are according to Gods own heart, Ier. 3. 14, 15.

Verse 29. I will not] This is the language of most mens hearts, when prest to duty: and, as occasion serves, they discover an headstrong wilfulness in wickedness, that is uncouncellable. As Pharaoh sat not down under the miracle, but sent for Magicians: so do these, when the word comes close to their consciences, send for carnal arguments. And though the word doth eat up all they can say, as Moses rod did: yet they harden their hearts with Pharaoh, they brazen their brows with him in the text, that said I will not: Nay said the Israelites, but we will have a King. And as for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not harken unto thee, said those, Ier. 44. 16.

But afterward he repented] So do but few. Men will be as big as their words, though they die for it, lest they should be accounted inconstant. These are niggardly of their reputation, but prodigal of their souls.

Verse 30. I go Sir] I, but when Sir? Stultus semper incipit vivere. Hypocrites purpose oft, and promise fair to do better, but drive off and fail in the performance, their morning cloud is soon dispersed, their earthly dew is quickly dried up, their heartless essays come to nothing. Modò & modò non habent modum. The Philosopher liked not such as are semper victuri, always about to live better, but never begin. A Divine complains that the goodness of many is like the softness of a plumb, soon crushed: but their wickedness is like the stone in the plumb, hard and inflexible.

Verse 31. Go into the Kingdom of heaven before you] And it were an arrant shame to be left behind by such: as thats a very Jade, we say, that will not follow, though she will not lead the way. But these proud Pharisees hated to be in the same heaven with penitent Publicans. And, as Quintilian said of some in his time, that they might have proved excellent scholars, had they not been so perswaded of their own scholarship already. In like sort, these over-weeners of themselves might have had place in heaven, had they not taken up their seats in heaven afore-hand.

Videtur paronomasia hæc in proverbium abiisse. Verse 42. Did ye never read in the Scriptures?] Yes, full oft, but never applied such a place as this to themselves. A godly man reads the Scriptures as he doth the Statute-book: he holds himself concerned in all that he reads: he finds his own name written in every passage, and lays it to heart, as spoken to him. The wicked on the other side, put off all they like not, and dispose of it to others, as if themselves were none such. God forbid, said these to our Saviour, Luk. 20. 16. But he convinceth them out of their own reading, to be the men he meant. Men may make some sorry shift, and shuffle for a while from side to side, as Balaams Ass did, but there is no averting or avoiding the dint of Gods displeasure, otherwise then by falling down, as the Ass did, and afterwards her master, being rebuked for his iniquity, The dumb Ass speaking with mans voice, forbad the madness of the Prophet, 2 Pet. 2. 16.

We had better, saith one, be without meat, drink, light, air, earth, all the Elements, yea life it self, then that one sweet saying of our Saviour, Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will refresh you. The Gospel is that inheritance we received from our godly fore-fathers, the Martyrs: and it must be our care to transmit the same to our posterity, earnestly contending for the faith which was once delivered, Jude 3. once for all: for if lost, or any way corrupted, it will hardly be ever given again. Look to it therefore, unfruitfulness forfeits all; as the Merchants non-paiment of the custom forfeits all his goods. It is to be feared (saith one) lest Mr. Herbert be a true Prophet, and the Gospel be, in its solar motion, travelling for the West, for the American parts, and quitting its present place of residence, and unworthy professors and possessors: And then farewel England.

liation, purposely set apart, and solemnly kept throughout the Kingdom, for the innocent blood-shed here in those Marian days of most abhorred memory.

Verse 7. But when the King heard thereof] And Kings have long ears, this King of heaven especially, Cui etiam muta clamant cadavera —— Ut taceant homines, jumenta loquentur. In case of the abuse of Gods servants, a bird of the ayr shall carry the voyce, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter, Eccles. 10. 20. John Baptist was beheaded in the prison, as if God had known nothing of the matter, said that Martyr. But when he maketh inquisition for bloods (which he oft doth with great secrecy and severity) he remembreth such to purpose, Psal. 9. 12. as he did Herod, Maximinius, Charls the ninth of France, Felix of Wartenburg, and sundry other bloody persecutors. The King is said to hear of what was done, for blood cryeth.

Sent forth his Armies] The Roman spoilers, who were the rod in Gods hand, and revenged the quarrel of his Covenant: Howbeit they thought not so, Isa. 10. 7. As in letting blood by Leeches, the Physician seeks the health of his patient, the Leech only the filling of his gorge: So when God turns the wicked upon his people, he hath excellent ends, howbeit they think not so, but to destroy and cut off Nations not a few.

Isa. 10. 7.

Verse 8. They which were bidden were not worthy] Who were then? Such as came from the high-ways and hedges, verse 9. that is, such as sit and shew their sores to God, as the cripples and others do by the high-way-side to every passenger, to move pitty. Such sensible sinners shall walk with Christ in white, for they are worthy.

Verse 9. Go thee therefore to the high-ways] Those sinners of the Gentiles, Gal. 2. 15. who wandred in their own ways, Acts 14. 16. and were, till now, without God in the world, Ephes. 4. 18. These are those other husbandmen, to whom the housholder would let out his vineyard, Chap. 21. 41, 43. which truth to illustrate, this parable is purposely uttered, and principally, as it may seem, intended.

Verse 10. Both bad and good, &c.] Such a mixture there ever hath been, and will be here in the Church. Doeg sets his foot as far within the Sanctuary, as David. There are sacrificing Sodomites, Isa. 1. 10. sinners in Sion, Isa. 33. 14. We cannot avoid the company of those from whom we shall be sure to carry guilt or grief.

Verse 11. And when the King came in to see] He is in the Assemblies of his Saints to observe their carriage, and to admeasure unto them in blessing, as they do to him in preparation; he goes down into his garden to see whether the vine flourish, and the pomgranats bud, Cant. 6. 11. he walketh in the midst of the seven golden Candlesticks. &c. Now therefore we are all here present before God, said Cornelius, Acts 10. 33.

Which had not on a wedding garment] i.e. Christ apprehended by faith, and expressed in his vertues by holy life. Justification and sanctification are the righteousnesses of the Saints, wherewith arrayed, they are beautiful, even to admiration; as without the which, Satan stood at the right hand of Jehoshuah the high Priest, because (as some will have it) his accusation was as true as vehement, so that Satan had the upper hand of him, till such time as Christ bad, Take away the filthy garments from him; there he pardoned his sin in heaven; and unto him, he said, Behold, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with change of raiment, There he pardoned it in his own conscience also.

Not having a wedding-garment] Is it fit to come to such a feast in thy worst? in the leathern coats, in the tottered rags and menstruous clouts of wretched old Adam?

And he was speechless] He was muzzled or haltred up, that is, he held his peace, as though he had had a briddle or a halter in his mouth. This is the import of the Greek word here used. He was ἀυτοκατάκριτος, self-condemned, Tit. 3. 11. and could not ἀντιφωνεῖν, chat at God, Rom. 9. 20. as he used to do; he was gagg'd, as it were.

Verse 13. Bind him hand and foot] He that comes in to Christs table without a wedding-garment on his back, shall not go out without fetters on his feet. Neither shall it help him, that he hath eat and drunk in Christs presence; for his meat is sawced, and his drink spiced with that bitter wrath of God, Job 20 23. He shall be taken as here, here, from the table to the tormenter. Look to it therefore, and come not hand over head. The very Heathens saw, and could say, That God was not to be served slightly or slubberingly, but with all possible preparation afore hand.

Οὐκ ἐν παρέργῳ θεραπευτέον, ἀλλ' ὁλοκλήρῳ διαθέσει λατρευτέον. Plut.

Verse 14. For many are called, &c.] With an outward calling: but outward priviledges profit not, where the hidden man of the heart is not right, where the power and practice of godliness is wanting. Many a ship hath been called Safeguard, and Good-speed, which yet hath split upon the Rocks, or fallen into the hands of Pirates.

Verse 15. Then went the Pharisees] They were, as one saith, Puncti & repuncti, minimè tamen ad resipiscentiam compuncti. They were stung with the former Parables, and grew more enraged. It is a vain perswasion for any Godly man to think, by any discretion wholly to still and escape the clamours and hates of wicked persons: Christ himself could not do it.

How they might intangle him in his talk] As beasts are in the Hunters toyl, or birds in the Fowlers Net. Every man hunteth his brother with a Net, was an old complaint, Mic. 7. 2. And, They make a man an offender for a word, and lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, &c. Isa. 29. 21. Doctor Stories rule to know an heretick was, They will say, The Lord, and, We praise God, and, The living God. So, The Lord, and not to say, Our Lord, is called by Steven Gardiner, Symbolum hæreticorum, the hereticks badge. But God will take these wisards in their own craft, 1 Cor. 3. 19. he will catch them in their own cunning, he will over-shoot them in their own bow, he will take his handfull of them, so that they shall not make escape, as the word there signifies.

Verse 16. With the Herodians] i.e. Such as were of Herods Religion, as the Melchites, a kind of mongrel-Christians in the East: so called of Melech, as one would say, Of the Kings Religion, because they followed the decrees and examples of the Emperors. Some think these Herodians were the same with the Publicans, or Toll-takers (so Origen and Cyril) whom the Pharisees took with them to our Saviour, as if the one exacted tribute, the other refused to pay, and both came to our Saviour, as to an impartial Judge, to end the quarrel, and decide the controversie.

There are those that will smile in your face, and at the same time cut your throat. Squier, sent out of Spain to poyson Queen Elizabeth, anointed the pummel of the Queens saddle with poyson covertly, and as it were, doing something else, praying with a loud voice, God save the Queen, &c.

Camd. Eliz. 1598.

That thou art true, and teachest the way of God] These all are high commendations and necessary qualifications of a teacher and instructer of others. These Cony-catchers tell the truth of Christ (for he was all this that they say of him and more) and yet they tell a lye, because they thought him not so, but spoke against their consciences. They thought, belike, to have tickled and taken our Saviour with their flatteries (as every wind will blow up a bubble,) and so to have had what they would of him: But Christ was not for their turn. He was inadulabilis, unflatterable, and might better say then Politian did, Assentationculis quorundam, aut etiam obtrectationibus non magis attollor aut deprimor, quàm umbra mei corporis. I am no more lifted up, nor cast down with mens flatteries or slanders, then with the shadow of mine own body. For I think not my self either longer or shorter at morning, or at noon, because my shadow is so, &c.

To give tribute] Κῆνσον, a kind of Coyn proper to this purpose. The Jews paid then to the Romans, as now they do to the Pope, and other Princes of Italy, a yearly rent for the very heads they wear. And yet how they brave it to our Saviour, and say, Joh. 8. 33. We were never in bondage to any man. And there is not a more vain-glorious people this day under heaven, then the Jews, saith Alsted.

skin of a Nicodemus, saith one, of a Demas rather, who made fair weather for a while, but at length forsook Paul, and became an idolatrous Priest at Thessalonica, if Dorotheus may be believed. Jesus percieved these mens wickedness, and detected it. So dealt Peter by Simon Magus, whom Philip took for a very honest man, and baptized him. All will out at length; Quod sis esse velis, nihilque malis. Martial.

Verse 19. They brought unto him a peny] Monachi pecunias attingere pro piaculo ducunt. No Cappucine among the Papists may take or touch silver. This mettal is as very Anathema to these, as the wedge of Gold to Achan; at the offer whereof he starts back, as Moses from the Serpent. Yet he carries a boy with him that takes and carries it, and never complains of either mettal or measure. D. Halls epist. Ded. 1. ep. 5.

Verse 20. Whose is this image, &c.] Not that he knew not whose it was, but that he might refell them by their own answers, judge them out of their own mouth; and that the people (into whose hatred they thought by this captious question to draw him) might see that this was not more his, then the Pharisees own sentence.

They said unto him Cæsars] Julius Cæsar was the first that had his own face stampt in the Roman Coyn. Speed. Hist. fol. 25.

Verse 21. Render therefore unto Cæsar] Not Give, but Render: As who should say, Ye give him but what belongs to him; ye do him but right, ye help him but to his own, and that which he may justly require of you, In reddendo hostimentum patrocinii & defensionis, in lieu of his care toward you.

And unto God the things that are Gods.] The Greek Article is twice repeated, when he speaks of God more then when of Cæsar; to shew, saith one, that our special care should be to give God his due. For if Cæsar will take to himself Gods part, by commanding that which is sinful, to pay him such a tribute, Non est tributum Cæsari, sed servitium diaboli, saith Chrysostom, It is not a paying of tribute to Cæsar, but a doing service to the Devil. Cur non & animam nostram Dei imaginem soli Deo consignemus, saith one. Let God only have our soul, sith it bears his image. That was a witless and wicked speech of him, that said, That he had two souls in one body, the one for God, if he pleased, the other for any one else that would. But that was a gallant speech of the Prince of Condee, who being taken Prisoner by Charls the ninth of France, and put to his choice whether he would go to Mass, or be put to death, or suffer perpetual imprisonment? The former, said he, by Gods grace, I will never do. And for the two later, let the King do with me what he pleaseth. God, I hope, will turn all to the best. τὰ τοῦ θεοῦ τῷ θεῷ. *Gasp. Ens. Pandulf. Verse 22. They marvelled and left him, and went their way] With a flea in their ear, as we say. Confounded they were that they were so disappointed. Christ shaped them such an answer, as they could neither dislike nor digest. The wise mans eyes are in his head, but the fool walketh in darkness, Eccles. 2. 14. Ad pœnitentiam properat, citò qui judicat. He that precipitates a censure, shall soon see cause to repent him. How oft doth an open mouth prove a mans purgatory? We had great need therefore carry a pair of ballances betwixt our lips, lest we be entangled in our talk. Verse 23. The same day came to him the Sadduces] Vulpium capita possunt esse aversa, quorum tamen cauda in face eadem coeunt. Hereticks may differ as much from one another, as they all do from the truth. Both Pharisees and Sadduces can conspire against Christ, though they cannot consent among themselves. These Sadduces were a brutish sect and sort of Jews, that held many monstrous opinions. Some of them are set down, Act. 23. 8. Divers other more gross may be read of in Josephus, who also tells us, that they were but few of them, yet of the chief among the people. And no wonder: for even at this day Atheists and Epicures are rise; and among the great ones especially, who either think or could wish at least, there would be no resurrection, &c. Lib. 18. Antiq. cap. 2. *& de Bel. ture : Cadem Scripturarum faciunt ad materiam suam, saith Tertullian, They taw the Text, as Shoe-makers do their over-leathers, saith Polydor Virgil, that they may bring them to serve their turns : They lay the dead child of their own corrupt glosses in the bosom of holy Scripture, and then cry out, It is hers, and not theirs.

If a man die, having no children] This Law these Sadduces seem to approve, when indeed they jear it, as the mother of much monstrous confusion, if there ever be a resurrection. So deals the Devil and his Janizaries (Jesuites I should say) at this day, by both Scirptures and Fathers, whom they either elude or deride, further then they serve their turn, to confirm their falshoods. Parcus.

Raise up seed unto his brother] Our children are a principal part of our selves, even the seed; as though now there were nothing left in us, but the chaff.

Verse 25. When he had married a wife, deceased.] Thus they that will marry shall have trouble, I, and that in the flesh, wherein they haply promised themselves most comfort and contentment. How many are there that seek an happiness here : and when to enjoy it might seem an happiness indeed, they die, and then all their thoughts perish. Instances we have in Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar, Tamberlain, who making great preparation for the Conquest of the Turkish Empire, dyed of an Ague in the middest of his great hope, and greatest power. The like might be shewed of many learned men, that dyed, when they might have been most useful, as Keckerman, Perkins, Preston, Pemble, young Drusius, &c. All our learning is soon refuted with one black Theta, which understanding us not, snappeth us unrespectively without distinction, and putteth at once a period to our writing, and to our being. Turk. Hist. f. 236.

Verse 26. And the third unto the seventh] Happy it was, if seeing their brethren fall so fast, themselves were warned to number their own days, and provide for deaths coming. But this is not easily done; for we naturally dream of an immortality, Psal. 49. 11. and it is death to us to think of death, though we see so many daily die before us. It fareth with us for the most part, as with fatting Cattle. The Butcher comes to day, and fetcheth away one, to morrow and fetcheth away another, &c. The rest that are left behinde do neither miss their fellows, nor dread their own destiny. So here, this is brutish stupidity, shake it off.

Verse 27. And last of all the woman, &c.] It is scarce credible that one woman should out-live seven husbands. But grant she did, yet impartial death, that had so oft-times cut off her head, hit her heart at last. Death as an Archer aiming at us, misseth us est-soons, and hitteth haply some beyond us, some short of us, some on either hand of us; now our superiours, now our inferiours, now our equals, till at length we also are wounded; and the longer deaths hand is exercised, the more skilful it grows. Joannes de Temporibus, who is said to have lived in France above 300 years, dyed at length: So did the old, old, the very old man, Anno 1635. Alsted. chron.

Verse 29. Ye do err, not knowing] Ignorance is a breeder. All sins are seminally in ignorance. S. Paul thanks it for all his persecutions, 1 Tim. 1. 13. Aristotle makes it the mother of all the mis-rule in the world. All Heresies, saith Chemnitius are known to have proceeded, Vel ex superciliosa Samosateni fastu, vel ex Arrii dialectica, vel ex Ætii ὀλιγωρίᾳ, from pride, sophistry, or ignorance. Arist. Ethic. l. 3. Chem. loc. compar. 1. loc. 2.

Nor the power of God] Who can as easily raise the dead, as he did at first create them. This the Athenians with all their Learning, understood not : and therefore counted all that S. Paul could say to it, bibble babble, because he preached Jesus, and Anastasis, or the resurrection, which they took to be some strange goddess, Act. 17. 18, 19. They saw not how there could possibly be a regress from a privation to an habit. Neither can any of us see it, unless God by his Spirit of Revelation give us to know what is the exceeding greatness of his power, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in raising Christ, and us by him, Eph. 1. 19, 20. where it is easie to observe a sixfold gradation in the original, and all to set forth the power of God, in Christs and our resurrection. σπερμολόγος.

Verse 30. For in the resurrection they neither marry] Therefore our condition then shall be better then that of Adams in Paradise, where he had need of a meet help, Chenegda, such another as himself, a second-self. S. Luke adds the reason, why men shall not marry in the resurrection, viz. They can die no more; and therefore need not marry for propagation of their kinde, and immortalizing of their name. Mahomet, as he professed that himself had a special licence given him by God to know what women he would, and to put them away when he would: so he promised to all his Votaries and Adherents the like carnal pleasures at the resurrection. Sensualists cast God and the things of God into a dishonourable mould: they rise not above their spring.

But are as the Angels of God] Are, that is certainly shall be; yea, in their Head Christ they are so already. For God hath even here raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, Ephes. 2. 6. And at the resurrection, the just shall shine as the Sun in Heaven, nay, as the Son of God himself, with whom they shall appear in glory, as his Spouse, Uxor fulget radiis mariti, is a maxime in Law. Their vile bodies shall be conformed to his most glorious body, the standard in beauty, brightness, agility, immortality, &c. and other like unspeakable Angelical qualities and perfections. Their souls shall be freed from all evil, fraught with all fulness both of grace and of glory.

Verse 31. Have ye not read] In Moses, whose writings onely they received, rejecting the rest. And the superstitious Jews at this day are said in their Lyturgie to read two Lessons, one out of the Law, which is read by some chief person, another out of the Prophets, which is read by some boy or mean companion. For savouring somewhat of these old Sadduces, they will in no sort do honour, neither attribute they that authority to any part of the Bible that they do to their Law, which they do usually carry about their Synagogue at the end of the service in procession, with many ornaments of Crowns and Scepters; the children kissing it, as it passeth by them.

Spoken unto you by God] It is God that speaketh in the holy Scriptures: It is the express minde of God that is there set forth unto us. See my True treasure, p. 10. &c.

Verse 32. God is not the God of the dead] That is, in the Sadduces sense, utterly dead and extinct for ever, but in S. Pauls sense, Rom. 14. 9. He is the God of the dead. For the dead bodies also of the faithful, whiles they lie rotting in the Grave, and resolved into dust, are united to Christ; by means whereof a substance is preserved, sin onely is rotted with it's concomitant infirmities. But the rotting of the body is but to refine it: it is but as the rotting of corn under the Earth, 1 Cor. 15. 36. that it may arise more glorious. Once, death to the Saints is neither totall, but of the body onely; nor yet perpetual, but for a time onely. See both these together, Rom. 8. 10, 11. Further, from this verse we may learn, That there is a two-fold knowledge to be gotten from holy Scriptures. 1. Expres, I am the God of Abraham, &c. 2. By due deduction and firm inference, God is the God of the living.

Verse 33. They were astonished at his doctrine] This was well: But S. Luke adds, that which was more strange. 1. That certain of the Scribes said, Master, Thou hast well said: No Jesuite had ever so much ingenuity. 2. That the Sadduces were thenceforth silent, and said no more. Praestat herbam dare, quam turpiter pugnare. Those Romish frogs the Jesuites will never have done, though never so much set down, but be still up with their hateful Brekekekex-coax-coax.

Verse 34. But when the Pharisees] Nunquam bella bonis, nunquam certamina desunt. Truth never wants an adversary. Christ had many conflicts all his life long, but most and sharpest at last cast. At death, Satan will muster up all his forces against a Christian: that last encounter is like to be the sharpest; as Israel in the Wilderness met with much hardship, but when they entered the Land, all the Kings of Canaan combined against them.

Verse 35. Then one of them which was a Lawyer] Pareus gathereth out of Mark, Chap. 12. 28. that this Lawyer was one of them that had applauded Christ for his conquest over the Sadduces in the last conflict, Luk. 20. 39. and that, for a penance he was enjoyned by his fellow-Pharisees, to undertake this following disputation with Christ.

Ad liberandum igitur se suspicione, partes disputandi adversus eum nunc sibi imponi à collegio patitur.

These later they thought might be neglected or violated with little or no guilt. The Romish Pharisees have also their venial sins, their peccadillo's, as we know; but the Scripture makes all sin mortal and destructory. A little strange fire might seem a small matter, yet it was such a sin, as made all Israel guilty, as appears by the sacrifices offered for that sin, Levit. 16.

Verse 37. Thou shalt love the Lord] God must be loved and honoured by us, ἢ ὅλῳ ἢ μὴ ὅλως, saith one, truly, that there be no halting, and totally, that there be no halving: he will not divide with the Devil, as the Circassians are said to divide their whole life between rapine and religion. Gods service must be the totum hominis: Eccles. 12. 13. and the bonum hominis, Mic. 6. 8. We should love him infinitely: which, because we cannot, we must love him unfeignedly: but how far short we come of loving him with all our heart, soul, strength, &c. (which yet the Papists affirm feisable) appears by our lives, which, do what we can, are fuller of sins, then the Firmament is of Stars, or the Furnace of sparks. Brer. Enqu.

Verse 38. This is the first and great Commandment] In respect of order, quantity and dignity. The second Table is fulfilled in the first, and Luther is bold to say, Primo præcepto reliquorum omnium observantia præcipitur; In the first Commandment is commanded the keeping of all the rest. We rightly love our very selves no further then we love God: And for others, we are bound to love our friends in him, our foes for him.

Verse 39. And the second is like unto it] For it hath, 1. The same author, God spake all these words. 2. The same tye. 3. The same sanction and punishment of the violation. 4. It requires the same kinde of love and service: for the love of our neighbour is the service of God.

Love thy neighbour as thy self] Now, thou lovest thy self truly, really, fervently, freely, constantly, hiding thine own defects and deformities as much as may be. Thou wouldst have others rejoyce with thee and condole with thee, as occasion serves. Go thou now, and do likewise to others. Howbeit our Saviour strains us up a peg higher, Joh. 13. 34. His new commandment of the Gospel is, that we love one another, not onely as we love our selves, but as he loved us. This form hath something in it that is more expres (in which respect partly it is called a new commandment,) and for the incomparable sufficiency of the president is matchless, and more full of incitation to fire affection.

Verse 40. Hang all the Law and Prophets] Yea and the Gospel too: for love is both the complement of the Law, and the supplement of the Gospel, Rom. 13. 10. Joh. 13. 34. It is the filling up of the Law (as the word signifieth,) for that it clotheth the duties of the Law with the glory of a due manner, and seateth them upon their due subjects, with unwearied labours of constant well-doing. The Prophets also hang upon the same nail of love with the Law, so some frame the Metaphor here used: As some others rather think, that our Saviour, in this expression alludeth to the Jewish Phylacteries, Heb. Totaphoth, which were scrouls of parchment, having the Commandments written in them, which the Pharisees ware about their heads and arms, to minde them of obedience to the Law. πλήρωμα. κρέμανται.

Verse 41. While the Pharisees were gathered] i.e. Before the former meeting was dissolved. We should watch for, and catch at all opportunities of working upon the worst. Dr. Taylor preached every time he could get his people together, holy-day or else.

Verse 42. What think ye of Christ?] Christus utramq; paginam impleret. All our search should be with those wise-men, for the babe of Bethlehem, who is wrapped up, as it were, in the swathing-bands of both the Testaments.

Whose Son is he?] They were curious in Genealogies. A shame therefore it was for them, to be ignorant of Christs descent and pedigree.

They say unto him, the son of David] Herein they said well, but not all: for they conceived no otherwise of Christ, then as of a meer man. Our Saviour therefore takes a Text out of Psal. 110. and thereby convinceth them of his Divinity. We must be well versed in the mysterie of Christ, and neglect nothing needful to be known by us.

Verſe 44. The Lord ſaid unto my Lord] God the Father to God the Son, theſe two differ no otherwiſe, then that the one is the Father, and not the Son; the other is the Son, and not the Father.

Sit thou on my right hand] As my fellow and co-equal, Zach. 13. 7. Phil. 2. 6. And as Chriſt is at the right hand of his Father, ſo is the Church at the right hand of Chriſt, Pſal. 45. 9. which is a place both of greateſt dignity and ſafety.

Verſe 45. Lord, how is he his Son?] This is that great myſterie of Godlineſs, which Angels intently look into, as the Cherubims did of old into the Mercy-ſeat. That Chriſt ſhould be Davids Lord and Davids ſon, God and man in one perſon, this is that wonder of wonders: well might his name be wonderful, Iſa. 9. 6.

1 Pet. 1. 12.

Verſe 46. And no man was able to anſwer] Though they were ſubtile Sophiſters, and mighty in the Scriptures, yet they had nothing to oppoſe. Magna eſt veritas, & valebit. Great is the truth, and ſhall prevail.

Neither durſt any man, &c. How eaſily can God button up the mouths of our buſieſt Adverſaries, yea, and plead for us in their conſciences, as he did for Mr. Bradford and many more of the Martyrs, whom as they could not out-reaſon, ſo neither could they but conceive well of the Martyrs innocency, triumphing in their perſecutors conſciences.

Chap. XXIII.

Verſe 1. Then ſpake Jeſus to the multitude, &c.]

Chriſt having confuted and confounded the Scribes and Phariſees, turns him to the people and to his Diſciples: and that he might do nothing to the detriment of the truth, he here cautionateth, that they deſpiſe not the doctrine of the Phariſees, ſo far as it was ſound and ſincere without leaven; but try all things, holding faſt that which was good. Be adviſed, and remember to ſearch into the truth of what you hear, was the counſel of Epicharmus.

Νῆφε καὶ μέμνησο ἀπιστεῖν. Videas cui fidas. Deligas quem diligas.

Verſe 2. Sit in Moſes chair] i. e. Have the ordinary office of teaching the people, but quo jure, he queſtioneth not. The Prieſts and Levites ſhould have done it, but the Scribes and Phariſees had for preſent taken it upon them, ſtept into the Chair, and there ſet themſelves. Rom. 2. 20. So Hildebrand and his Succeſſors, have invaded Peters Chair, as they call the ſea of Rome, but what ſaid an Antient? Non habent Petri hæreditatem, qui Petri fidem non habent: They have no right to Peters Chair, that have not Peters faith. The Index Expurgatorius, commands. (Jubleſtâ fide,) inſtead of Fidem Petri, to print it Sedem Petri. Perfrica frontem, ſaid Calvus to Vatinius, & digniorem te dic qui Prætor fieres quàm Catonem. Put on a good face, and ſay that thou art fitter for the Office then Cato himſelf. But what a bold face had Barcæna the Jeſuite, who meeting the Devil, required his Chair of him, as one that better deſerved it? He had his deſire, I doubt not. But if Scribes and Phariſees ſat in Moſes Chair, it's no news then for bad men to ſucceed better; as Timotheus Herulus did Proterius the good Biſhop of Alexandria, and as Arminius did Junius in the Profeſſors place at Leyden.

Verſe 3. All therefore whatſoever] Not their traditions, ſuperſtitions, and corrupt gloſſes upon the Law, but whatſoever they teach that is agreeable to truth: ſo long as they ſit cloſe to Moſes Chair, and keep it warm, as it were, hearken to them. Gods good gifts are to be acknowledged and improved even in the worſt, as David made Sauls epitaph, 2 Sam. 1. though the Devil preached his funeral, 1 Sam. 28. 19.

Si paſtores benè vivunt, eorum lucrum eſt, ſi benè dicunt, tuum.

But do not ye after their works] If Miniſters do well, ſaith Chryſoſtom, it is their own gain, if they ſay well, it is thine. Take thou what thine own is, and let alone what is another mans. Sylla and King Richard the Third commanded others, under great penalties, nalties, to be vertuous and modeſt, when themſelves walked the clean contrary way. A deformed Painter may draw a goodly picture; a ſtinking breath, ſound a mighty blaſt; and he that hath but a bad voyce, ſhew cunning in deſcant. A blind man may bear a torch in a dark night, and a Harp make muſick to others, which it ſelf is not ſenſible of. Poſts ſet for direction of Paſſengers by the highway-ſide, do point out the way which themſelves go not: And ſign-poſts tell the travellor there is wholeſome diet or warm lodging within, when themſelves remain in the ſtorms without. Leud Preachers are like ſpirie-ſteeples, or high pinacles, which point up to Heaven, but preſs down to the Center.

Accipe quod tuum eſt, omitte alienum. Chryſoſt.

For they ſay, and do not] They had tongues which ſpake by the talent, but their hands ſcarce wrought by the ounce; like that ridiculous Actor at Smyrna, who pronouncing O Cælum, O Heaven, pointed with his finger toward the ground: ſo theſe Phariſees had the Heaven commonly at their tongues end, but the Earth continually at their fingers-end. In a certain battel againſt the Turks, there was a Biſhop that thus encouraged the Army. Play the men fellow-ſouldiers, to day; and I dare promiſe you, that if ye die fighting, ye ſhall ſup to night with God in Heaven. Now after the battel was begun, the Biſhop withdrew himſelf: And when ſome of the Souldiers enquired among themſelves what was become of the Biſhop; and why he would not take a ſupper with them that night in Heaven, others anſwered, Hodie ſibi jejunium indixit, ideoq; non vult nobiſcum in Cœlo cænare. This is faſting-day with him, and therefore he will eat no ſupper, no not in Heaven. Epictetus was wont to ſay, that there were many Philoſophers (we may ſay, Divines) ἄχρι τῶ φιλόσοφειν, μέχρι τῶ λέγειν, as far as a few words would go. But is Religion now become a word? goodneſs a name (as Brutus once cryed out?) Should it be ſaid of holineſs, as it was once in another place, Audivimus famam; we have heard the fame thereof with our ears, and that's all? The fooliſh Virgins were found with their ſic dicentes, but the good ſervants ſhall be found with their ſic facientes. Chriſt was full of grace, as well as truth. John Baptiſt was both a burning and ſhining light. Origens teaching and living were ſaid to be both one. That's the beſt Sermon ſurely, that's digg'd out of a mans own breſt, when he practiſeth what he preacheth, non verbis ſolum prædicans ſed exemplis, as Euſebius teſtifieth of Origen, and Mr. Gataker of Mr. Stock. As the want hereof occaſioned Campian to write Miniſtris eorum nihil vilius, their Miniſters are moſt baſe.

Verſe 4. For they binde heavie burdens, &c.] Their humane Traditions: ſo do the Popiſh Doctors (heirs herein to the Phariſees, of whom this Sermon is not more Hiſtorical, then of the other it is Prophetical,) The inferiour Clergy they make preach every day in Lent without intermiſſion, throughout all Italy in the greater Cities: ſo as ſix dayes in the week they preach on the Goſpel of the days, and on the Saturday in honour and praiſe of our Lady. Whereas the Pope and Biſhops preach not at all. So for the Laity; they muſt faſt with bread and water; when the Prieſts have their ſuckets and other ſweet meats three or four times on their mock-faſt-days. What ſhould we ſpeak of their Pilgrimages to Peru, Jeruſalem, &c. Penances, ſatisfactions, &c. And no man muſt queſtion, but obey without ſciſcitation. Walter Mapes, ſometimes Archdeacon of Oxford, relating the Popes groſs ſimony, concludes, Sit tamen Domina materq; noſtra Roma baculus in aquâ fractus, & abſit credere quæ vidimus. In things that make againſt our Lady-Mother Rome, we may not believe our own eyes.

They make broad their Phylacteries] That is, Conſervatories, ſo called. 1. Becauſe by the uſe of them, the law was kept in remembrance. 2. Becauſe the ſuperſtitious Phariſees conceited, that by the wearing of them about their necks, themſelves might be kept from danger, as by ſo many ſpels: what they were, ſee the Notes above, on Matth. 22. 40.

Enlarge the borders of their garments] God had charged the Phariſees to binde the law to their hand, and before their eyes, Deut. 6. 8. wherein (as Hierom and Theophylact well interpret it) he meant the meditation and practice of his law. arm next their heart, and another scroll to tye upon their forehead, and four corners of fringe, or (if these be denied) a red thread in their hand, thought they might say, 1 Sam. 16.13. Blessed be thou of the Lord, I have done the commandment of the Lord. What was this, but as Mr. Tindal said in another case, to think to quench their thirst by sucking the Ale-powl.

Verse 6. And love the uppermost rooms] Which is a singular vanity, and yet hath bred greatest contestation in the Church; as between the Bishops of Rome and Constantinople, the Archbishops of Canterbury and York justling in Parliament for precedency, even unto blows and bloodshed: what doleful effects followed upon the contention between the Lord Protector and his brother in King Edward the Sixths days, raised by their ambitious Wives, who could not agree about place? The Apostles rule is, in honour to prefer one another, Rom. 12.10. And true humility is like true balm, that still in water sinks to the bottome: like the violet, the sweetest but lowest of flowers, which hangs the head down-wards, and hides it self with its own leaves.

Verse 7. And to be called of men Rabbi] They were tickled with high titles, and thought it a goodly thing to be held and stiled Magnifico's, to be flie-blown with flatteries. There is not a more vain-glorious people under Heaven then the Jews. Hence that rabble of Titles amongst them in this order (brought in a little before the nativity of our Saviour) Rabbi Rabban, Rab, Rabbi, Gaon, Moreh, Morenu and Moreh tsedek. So the Friars proceed in their vain-glorious Titles, from Padre benedicto to Padre Angelo, then Archangelo, Cherubino, and lastly Cerephino, which is the top of perfection. Are not these those ὑπερογκα ματαιότητος the Apostle inveighs against, those great swelling Titles of vanity?

Verse 8. Be not ye called Rabbi] Do not ambitiously affect such a Title, as if you were the onely ones, and others not worthy to be named in the same day with you. Swelling in the body is an ill symptom, but worse in the soul.

καθηγητὴς. For one is your master] Your guide to godliness, and happiness, your Doctor and Dictator, your Oracle, your Ipse dixit, whose bare word you are to take, without further proof or pawn.

And all ye are brethren] Not as the Pope calls his Cardinals brethren, when in creating them, he useth this form, Estote fratres nostri, & Principes mundi. Odi fastum illius Ecclesiæ, saith Basil, which caused the lamentable separation of the Estern or Greek Church, from communion with the Latine, the other four Patriachs dividing themselves from the Bishop of Rome, for his encroaching upon them.

Verse 9. Call no man your father] i.e. Give no man absolute power over you; be not the servants of men, or slaves to their opinions or mandates, as Friars are to their superiours, to argue or debate on whose commands is held high presumption: to search their reasons, proud curiosity: to detract or disobey them, breach of vow equal to sacriledge.

Verse 10. One is your master] Where then are Magistri nostri Parisienses? our Doctores resolutissimi? our Masters of opinions, whose word must stand for a law, whose tenets must pass for Oracles? By the Canon-law, Omnes sanctiones Apostolicæ sedis irrefragabiliter sunt observandæ. The Pope may not be disobeyed.

Verse 11. Shall be your servant] The word signifies one that is ready prest to raise dust, to do his utmost endeavour with all possible expedition in any business that he is set about.

q d. Præsestinans, expeditus, paratus, promptus.

Verse 12. And whosoever shall exalt himself, &c.] Lo here a great Miracle, saith Augustine. God is on high, and yet the higher thou liftest up thy self, the farther thou art from him: the lower thou humblest thy self, the nearer he draweth to thee. Low things he looketh close upon, that he may raise them: proud things he knows afar off, that he may depress them. The proud Pharisee prest as near God as he could: the poor Publican, not daring to do so, stood aloof off: yet was God far from the Pharisee, near to the Publican.

Videte magnum miraculum: Altus est Deus, &c. Aug. de temp.

Verse 13. Wo unto you Scribes, &c.] By these eight dreadful woes, as by so many links of an adamantine chain, our Saviour draws these hypocrites down to Hell, their place, and there leaves them to be reserved unto judgement. S. Hierom was called Fulmen Ecclesiasticum, the Churches thunderbolt. How much more might this be attributed to Christ? How terribly doth he here thunderstrike these stupid Pharisees, though he saw well well (with Father Latimer) that whosoever will be busie with ve vobis, shall shortly after come coram nobis. Act. and Mon. fol. 1590.

Ye shut up the Kingdom of Heaven] By hiding heavenly truths, teaching damnable errors, excommunicating the well affected, or corrupting them by evil counsel and example: and all this, ἔμπροσθεν coram & in os, before men, and to their faces, making fools of them, even whiles they look on, casting a mist before their eyes, as those Egyptian Juglers did, Exod. 7. and keeping from them that collyrium, that should cure, and clear up their eye-sight, Revel. 3. 18. Thus did Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury, who bound up the word of God, that it might not be preached in his time (as the Historians words are) and was therefore (according to this wo here denounced) so smitten in his tongue, that he could neither swallow, nor speak for certain days afore he dyed. Steven Gardiner was plagued in like manner, for like reason. And generally, the Popish Clergy are vexed with that grievous and noisom sore of devilish spite against the Reformation, Revel. 16. 2. which they therefore oppose with might and main, till wrath come upon them to the utmost. And albeit many of them escape the visible vengeance of God, yet this terrible Wo, as a moath, doth secretly eat them up like a garment, and as a worm, eateth them up like wood, Isa. 51. 8. as it did these Pharisees; on whose outside nothing could be discerned, all was as before, but their souls were blasted, seared, and sealed up to destruction. He that hath drunk poyson, falls not down dead presently in the place, but he hath his death about him, as we say. Saul lived and reigned long after he was cast off by God: and the very Devils are respited in regard of their full torment, but the more is behinde. Quod verbum Dei aliqâsset, ne tempore suo prædicaretur. Tho. Gascon. in Dictionar. Theolog.

Verse 14. Ye devour widows houses] Though they pretended to be great fasters, Luk. 18. 12. yet their bellies prepared deceit, as Eliphaz hath it, Job 15. 35. and their throats (those open sepulchers) swallowed up whole houses (such was their covetousnes) and that of widows (such was their cruelty) and that under a pretence of long prayers, which was their hypocrisie: for while their lips seemed to pray, they were but chewing that morsel, that murthering morsel that made them receive the greater damnation. Multi in terris manducant, quod apud inferos digerunt, saith Augustine; Many devour that on earth, that they must digest in Hell, where the never-dying worm will feed greedily upon all such covetous caitiffs, as have the greedy worm under their tongues, and their ill-gotten goods gotten already into their bowels, as these Pharisees had: which therefore God shall fetch thence again with a vengeance. τὰ ἅρπαγα. Luk. 11. 41. Job 20. 15.

Make long prayer] God takes not mens prayers by tale, but by weight. He respecteth not the Arithmetick of our prayers, how many they are, nor the Rhetorick of our prayers, how eloquent they are, nor the Geometry of our prayers, how long they are, nor the Musick of our prayers, the sweetnes of our voyce, nor the Logick of our prayers, or the method of them, but the divinity of our prayers is that which he so much esteemeth. He looketh not for any James with horny knees through assiduity in prayer: nor for any Bartholomew with a century of prayers for the morning, and as many for the evening: but S. Paul his frequency of praying with fervency of spirit, without all tedious prolixities and vain-bablings; this is it that God maketh most account of. It is not a servants going to and fro, but the dispatch of his business that pleaseth his Master. It is not the loudnes of a Preachers voyce, but the holines of the matter, and the spirit of the Preacher, that moveth a wise and intelligent hearer. So here, not gifts, but graces in prayer move the Lord. But these long prayers of the Pharisees were so much the worse, because thereby they sought to entitle God to their sin, yea, they meerly mocked him, fleering in his face.

Verse 15. Ye compass sea and land] They walked the round, as the Devil doth, to gain Proselytes; they spared for no pains to pervert men (as now the Jesuites those Circulatores & Agyrtæ) should not we be as diligent and indefatigable to convert them to God? Shall we not be as busie in building stair-cases for Heaven, as Seducers are in digging descents to Hell? If Saul seeking Asses found a Kingdom, shall not we by seeking others finde Heaven?

Ye make him two-fold more the childe of Hell] Either because they relapse to Gentilism, as finding you so vile and vitious in your lives: Or, because ye teach them only Ceremonies and superstitions: Or, because you keep them ignorant of Christ, and plant in them an hatred of the truth, as the Jesuites do in their Proselytes. Verse 16. Ye blinde guides which say] His Watchmen are blinde, was an old complaint, Isa. 56. 10. Which that it is a foul fault, the Rabbines have there noted from one letter (in the Original) of the word rendered Watchmen, bigger then his fellows. How many are there that thrust into the Ministery, wanting both heart and art to teach the people? These lead their flocks to the Pits brink, wherein if they perish, themselves lie lowermost.

Whosoever shall swear by the gold of the Temple] So by the gift on the Altar, vers. 18. these, they taught, were tyed: the other might for a sum of money be dispensed with, that swore by the Temple, or the Altar. Not so those that swore by the gold of the Temple, that is, dedicated to the Temple, or by the gift on the Altar: for these oaths brought these blinde guides in commodity, which the swearer was forced presently to pay down. The people also were hereby made more free and forward to offer gold for the Temple, sacrifices for the Altar; because they were made believe, that those presents were more precious then either Temple or Altar. Pretty devices these were to get money; and are they not still practised by Papists? Philip Brasier was abjured in Act. and Mon. Henry the Eighths time, for saying, That when any cure is done, the Priests do noynt the Images, and make men believe the Images do sweat in labouring for them. The rood Sands his rela. of Grace, and blood of Hails is notorious. Our Lady of Loretto hath her Churches so stuffed with vowed presents and memories, that they are fain to hang their Cloysters and Church-yards with them. They teach the people, that as they may sooner go to Christ by S. Dominick then by S. Paul: so to swear by holy Relicks, and in swearing to lay hand on them, is a more binding oath, then to swear by God, laying hand on the Bible.

Verse 17. Whether is greater the gold, &c.] The cause must needs be more noble then the effect. But the dust of covetousness had put out the eyes of these buzzards, and expectorated their understandings. It is a besotting sin, and bereaves a man of right reason. Avidus à non videndo. Papists, our modern Pharisees, are most corrupt in those things, where their honour, ease, or profit is engaged. In the doctrine of the Trinity that toucheth not upon these, they are sound enough.

Or the Temple that sanctifieth the gold?] Solomons Temple was stone without, and gold within, to shew, saith one, the resplendent glory of Divine Majesty, lurking within Moses unveiled. a humane and humbled body. Quid est templi illius autrum sive aurea claritas, nisi ad dextram patris sedentis immortalitas atq; impassibilitas? saith Rupertus, What is the gold of the Temple, but the glory of Christ at Gods right hand?

ὅτι τὸ συμφέρον ἔχει τὸ εὐτελές. Verse 18. But whosoever sweareth by the gift, &c.] Ubi utilitas, ibi pietas, saith Epictetus, where there is gain, there is godliness. And, Deos quisq; sibi utiles cudit, saith another. All the worldlings plowing, sailing, building, buying, buts upon commodity, he knows no other deity. These Pharisees strove to reduce all offerings to their own purses and paunches, though they rendred men thereby not only irreligious, but unnatural, Mat. 15. 5, 6. See the Notes there.

Verse 19. Ye fools and blinde] The second time so, For behold they have rejected the word of the Lord (yea the Word, the Lord Christ) and what wisdom was in them? 1 Cor. 1. Jer. 8. 9. True it is, they were accounted the onely wise men: Where is the wise, where is the Scribe? saith S. Paul. As if wise and Scribe were terms convertible. And for the Pharisees, they did so carry away the hearts of the people, that there was no holy man that was not termed a Pharisee, as we finde in their Talmud. And after the most straitest sect of our Religion, I lived a Pharisee, saith Paul, Act. 26. 5. They were omnium districtissimi, and did utterly out-shine and obscure those other sects of Sadducees and Essenes, the later whereof are not so much as mentioned in the Gospel: And yet we see what esteem Christ had of them, and what Titles he here bestows upon them: To Teach us not to rest in mans applause, nor to think it sufficient that others think well of us. But let every man prove his own work, Galat. 6. 4. and know, that not he that commends himself, or is commended by others, is approved, but he whom the Lord commendeth, 2 Cor. 10. 18.

Verſe 20. Whoſo therefore ſhall ſwear] It was not lawful to ſwear by the altar, or by any creature whatſoever, Jer. 5.7. (much leſs by Idols, Amos 8. 14. I my ſelf, ſaith Latimer, have uſed in mine earneſt matters to ſay, Yea by S. Mary, which indeed is naught.) But though theſe oaths be formally naught, yet they are finally binding; and being broken, they are plain perjury, becauſe they are all reduced to God himſelf, no otherwiſe then if they had been taken expreſly by the name of God. Hence it is that the oaths of Papiſts, Turks, Heathens (though ſuperſtitious) are obligatory, ὅρκος, quaſi ἕρκος, An oath is an hedge, which a man may not break.

This Temple at Jeruſalem, together with that of Diana at Epheſus (which was alſo built of Cedar, in an apiſh imitation of Gods Temple, as Vitruvius and others witneſs) were deſtroy'd much about one and the ſame time: Believe me, ſaith Chriſt, the hour cometh, when ye ſhall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jeruſalem, worſhip the Father. Demoſthenes ſaith, That mans heart is Gods beſt Temple, where he dwels with delight, ſo it be beautified with modeſty, piety, juſtice, &c. And this is the end of our creation, ſaith another, that man ſhould be the Temple of God, and God the Altar of man.

Verſe 22. By the throne of God] Heaven is his throne, and earth his footſtool; yet may we not conceive that God is commenſurable by the place, as if he were partly here, and partly elſe-where; but he is every where all preſent. See more in the Notes on Mat. 5. 34.

Verſe 23. Ye pay tythe of mint] The Chaldee word for mint ſignifies alſo a book of hiſtories; becauſe in that one poor herb large ſtories of Gods wiſdom, might and love are deſcribed unto us. In tything this and other pot-herbs the Phariſees were over and above ſollicitous, and even ſuperſtitious, and all for a name. So in the year of Grace, 1435. Capiſtranus the Minorite, being ſent into Germany and other Countreys by Pope Nicolas, to preach obedience to the Sea of Rome, gat a great deal of credit and reſpect to his Doctrine by putting down dicing, carding, dancing, feaſting, masking, enterludes, &c. although he taught not one ſyllable of ſound doctrine, touching Chriſt and his merits, obedience of faith, patience of hope, &c. ver her; so the hypocrite is convinced by the very shew of godliness, under which he hoped to have lurked. God so discovers his deceitful courses, as that his wickedness is shew'd before the whole Congregation, Prov. 26.26.

Verse 26. Cleanse first that which is within] God loveth truth in the inwards, Psal. 51 6. O Jerusalem wash thy heart, Jer. 4.14. (not thy hands only, as Pilate did:) this breeds constancy and evenness in all our outward behaviours; Jam. 4.8. Grace and nature both begin at the heart, at the center, and from thence goes to the circumference. Art and hypocrisie begin with the face and outward lineaments.

Verse 27. Ye are like unto whited Sepulchres] The Jews had their vaults or caves for burial. These the wealthier sort would paint, garnish, beautifie at the mouth or entrance of them. And hereunto our Saviour alludeth, Intùs Nero, foris Cato: loquitur hic ut Piso, vivit ut Gallomus, &c. It was said of the Sarmatians, that all their vertue was outward; and of Sejanus, that he had only a semblance of honesty, Intùs summa adipiscendi libido, within he was full of extortion and excess. Hypocrites seem as glo-worms, to have both light and heat; but touch them, and they have neither. The Egyptian Temples were beautiful on the outside, when within ye should find nothing but some Serpent or Crocodile. Apothecaries boxes oft have goodly titles, when yet they hold not one dram of any good drug. A certain stranger coming on embassage unto the Senators of Rome, and colouring his hoary hair and pale cheeks with vermilion hiew, a grave Senator espying the deceit, stood up and said, What sincerity are we to expect at this mans hands, whose locks, and looks, and lips do lye? Think the same of all painted hypocrites. These we may compare (as Lucian doth his Grecians) to a fair gilt bossed Book; look within it, and there is the Tragedy of Thyestes; or perhaps Arrius his Thalya; the name of a Muse, the matter heresie: Or Conradus Vorstius his Book Monster, that hath De Deo in the Front, but Atheism and blasphemy in the Text.

Godw. Antiq. Heb. 207. Raynold. Orat. Omnis Sarmatarum virtus extra ipsos. Tac. lib. 1. cap. 10. Philàm compositus pudor, &c. Tac.

Verse 28. But within ye are full, &c.] Fair professors they were, but foul sinners, not close, but gross hypocrites, such as knew themselves to be so; like as Jeroboams wife knew her self to be disguised, when she went to the Prophet; and as the whore that offered sacrifice to cover her whoredom, Prov. 7. 14. This hypocrisie goes worthily coupled here with iniquity. It ariseth from secret Atheism, as in Ananias and Saphira that noble pair of hypocrites, and paveth a way to the unpardonable sin, as in these Pharisees.

Verse 29. Ye build the Tombs, &c.] And lost their cost, because they received not their doctrine. So do the Papists at this day in their pretended honouring the ancient Saints and Martyrs, whose Religion and practices they persecute in the true professors. How much better Rabus Crispen, the French Chronicler, Knox, Fox, and others, who have raised the Martyrs, as so many Phœnices, out of their ashes again, by recording their holy lives, and Christian deaths? And how shall Cope and Kemp stink for ever in the nostrils of all good people? The former for fouling so much fair paper in railing at, and casting reproach upon the holy Martyrs of the Protestant Religion, in his sixth dialogue especially: The later, for disgracing them some few years since, excusing the powder Traytors at the same time, in a Sermon at S. Maries in Cambridge.

Vetus est morbus quo mortui sancti coluntur, vivi contemnitur. Chrysost. Alan. Copus. in dial. sex cont. Pseudomart. Kemp of Queens Myst. of Iniq. p. 15.

Verse 30. If we had been in the days] Either these men grossly dissembled, or their hearts greatly deceived them; for certainly, an Herod and Herodias to John Baptist, would have been an Ahab and Jezabel to Elias. But as it was said of Demosthenes, that he was excellent at praising the worthy acts of Ancestors, not so at imitating of them: In like sort may we say of the Pharisees, they could well declaim against their fore-fathers cruelties, but not so well disclaim them. They were adversus sua ipsorum vitia facundi satis, as one speaketh in a like case. Shrill accusers of themselves.

ἐπαινέσαι μὲν ἱκανώτατος ἦν τὰ τῶν προγόνων κακὰ μιμήσασθαι δὲ καὶ μισῆσαι. Plutarch.

Verse 31. Wherefore ye be witnesses, &c.] Here our Saviour casts all their cost in their teeth, as if thereby they had meant to commend their fathers cruelty in killing the Prophets, sith they abetted it, by persecuting him and his to the death. Malice is commonly hereditary, and runs in the blood; and (as we use to say of Runnet) The older it is, the stronger; as in the deadly feud of Scotland taken away by King James.

Verse 32. Fill ye up then the measure] Ironicè dictum. It gives us to understand, that sinners are stinted, and cannot do what mischief they would. If at any time they exceed ceed their commiſſion (as they are apt) and help forward the affliction, as out of their innate malice they will, God will ſoon grow jealous for Jeruſalem, and take them off, *Zach.*1.14,15. When wickedneſs hath filled her ephah, God will ſoon tranſport it into the Land of Shinar, Zech. 5. 8.——11. When it is once ripe in the field, God will not ſuffer it to ſhed, to grow again, but cuts it up by a juſt and ſeaſonable vengeance.

Verſe 33. Ye Serpents] Serpentum tot ſunt venena, quot genera, ſaith Iſidore, tot pernicies, quot ſpecies, tot dolores, quot colores. See how our Saviour ſharps up theſe Hereſiarches, that, if poſſible, they might be made ſound in the faith. So deals Peter by Simon Magus, Paul by Elymas, many of our Champions by their Popiſh Antagoniſts. Before God you are deceivers of the people (ſaid M. Philpot Martyr, to his perſecutors) afore God there is no truth in you. And to mocking Morgan he ſaid, I muſt tell thee, thou painted wall and hypocrite, in the name of the living Lord, that God ſhall rain fire and brimſtone upon ſuch ſcorners of his word, and blaſphemers of his people as thou art. And afterward, Thou art but an Aſs in the things of God, in that thou kickeſt againſt the truth, and art void of all godly underſtanding. Thou haſt ſeduced others (ſaid Bonner to Philpot) and madeſt them rejoyce and ſing with thee. Yea, my Lord, quoth he, we ſhall ſing when you ſhall cry, Wo, wo, except ye repent. What an arrogant fool is this (ſaid the Biſhop) I will handle thee like an heretick, and that ſhortly. I fear nothing, I thank God (ſaid the other) that you can do unto me. But God ſhall deſtroy ſuch as thou art, and that ſhortly, as I truſt. Likewiſe to the Biſhop of Chicheſter he ſpake thus: I perceive you are blinde guides, and leaders of the blind, and therefore, as I am bound to tell you, very hypocrites, tyrannouſly perſecuting the truth, which you are not able to diſprove. Thus Hilary called Conſtantius Antichriſt, and Auxentius Devil, becauſe they were Arrians.

Prophets, wiſe-men and Scribes] That is, Apoſtles, Paſtors and Teachers, *Epheſ.*4.11. whom he here calleth by the cuſtomary names of that Countrey. Scribe was an honorable name, till Phariſees diſhoneſted it by their hypocriſie.

Ye ſhall kill and crucifie] If therefore we have not yet reſiſted unto blood, be content with lighter croſſes. and look for heavier. Omnis Chriſtianus crucianus. It is but a delicacy to divide betwixt Chriſt and his Croſs. Luther.

Verſe 35. From the blood of righteous Abel] God reckons of men by their righteouſneſs, *Rom.*10. The righteous (let him dwell where he will, and by whom) is better then his neighbour, ſaith Solomon. This was Cains grief, who was of that wicked one, and ſlew his brother; And wherefore ſlew he him, but becauſe his own works were evil, and his brothers righteous? So Alphonſus Diazius, that Cain the ſecond, ſlew his brother John, becauſe he could not win him to Popery. And I would this Patriarch of the Devil (as one cals Cain) did not ſtill live in his ſons and ſucceſſors, who carry about his club, that is red with Abels blood, Imò ut rem ſacram adorant & venerantur, think they do a goodly act in killing up the poor Lambs of Chriſt. Cæſar is ſaid to have ſlain Grecinus Julius, for this reaſon alone, for that he was a better man, then that it was for the Tyrants behoof, to ſuffer him to live. 1John 3. 12.

Unto the blood of Zacharias] Moſt unworthily ſlain by his pupil Joas (as Linus likewiſe was by his ſcholar Hercules for a few ſharp words that he gave him, as he was teaching him.) Our Saviour inſtanceth in this Zacharias as the laſt Prophet mentioned in the Scripture to have been ſlain by them, though they ſlew many more, not elſewhere mentioned, unleſs it be in that little Book of Martyrs, as one fitly calleth the eleventh to the Hebrews. Quòd melior vir erat quam eſſe quenquam tyranno expediret. Senec.2.de benefic. 2 Chron.24.

Verse 36. Shall come upon this generation] In that last desolation of Jerusalem, whereof more in the next Chapter. God will not fail to punish persecutors. See Acts and Mon. of the Church, fol. 1902. to 1950. Good for them therefore is the counsel that Tertullian gave Scapula, a bloody persecutor, If thou wilt not spare us, yet spare thy self; if not thy self, yet thy City Carthage.

Si nobis non parcis, tibi parces; si non tibi, Carthagini.

Verse 37. How often would I, &c.] How then could they perish, whom God would have saved? It is answered, Voluntas Dei alia est præcepti, revelata Antecedens, alia beneplaciti, arcana consequens. By the former God willed their conversion, but not by the later. A King wills the welfare of all his Subjects; yet he will not acquit those that are laid up for treason, murther, and the like foul crimes. A father is willing to give his son the inheritance; yet if he prove an unthrift, he'll put him beside it, and take another. How oft would I have gathered? that is (say some) by the external Ministry of the Prophets, sent unto thee, verse 34,35. Not by internal regenerating operation of the spirit.

Chytræus in Levit. 12.

Even as a hen gathereth her chickens] Columbarum masculus ipse ovis incubat, sicut Christus ipse ecclesiam, suam fovet. Of unreasonable creatures, birds, and of birds, the hen excels in kindness to her young; so that she doubts not, in their defence, to encounter a Kite, a Dog, &c. Iniquo & impari prælio, though with greatest disadvantage.

Pareus.

And ye would not] Men may nill their conversion then, though called by God, Quo nihil est verius, sed & nihil turpius, saith one. Men are not damned, because they cannot do better, but because they will do no better. If there were no will, there would be no hell, John 12.39. Therefore they could not believe: they could not, that is, they would not, saith Theophylact out of Chrysostome, who yet usually extolleth mans free-will more then is meet.

Cesset voluntas propria & non erit infernus.

Verse 38. Behold, your house is left, &c.] City and Temple both. God will not alway stand men for a sinning-stock. They that will not hear his word, shall hear his rod, and feel his sword too. Elisha hath his sword as well as Jehu and Hazael, 1 King. 19.17: and the one usually precedes the other. They therefore that say, Following of Sermons will make men beggars, forget that to take away the Gospel from Jerusalem, was to leave their houses, as well as Gods house desolate.

Verse 39. Till ye shall say, Blessed, &c.] That is, ye shall never see me, or not till the general Judgement; when as you that would not obey that sweet voyce of mine, Come unto me, ye that are weary, &c. shall have no other command of mine to obey, but that dreadful Discedite, Go ye cursed into everlasting fire, &c.

CHAP. XXIV.

Verse 1. Departed from the Temple]

ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱεροῦ non ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ.

NEver to return more to it. In the ninth, tenth, and eleventh Chapters of Ezekiel, God makes divers removes, and still as he goes out, some judgement comes in; and when he was quite gone, then followed the fatal calamity in the utter ruine of the City and Temple. So it was then, and so it was now, according to that Hos. 9.12. Wo also to them when I depart from them. So Jer. 6. 8. Be instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul be dis-joynted from thee, lest I make thee desolate, a Land not inhabited. Whatever therefore we do, let us retain Christ with us; lay hold on him, as Magdalen did, take him by the feet as the Shunamite did the Prophet, as the Shulamite held her Spouse, constrain him to stay with us, as the two Disciples going to Emaus, cry

Vespera jam venit, nobiscum Christe maneto:
Extingui lucem ne patiare tuam.

To shew him the buildings of the Temple] As thinking by that goodly sight, haply, he might be moved to moderate the severity of that former sentence of leaving their house desolate unto them, Chap. 23. 38. True it is, that Herod (to get the peoples good good will, which yet he could never do) had been at a wonderful charge in building and beautifying the Temple. Josephus the Jew tells us, that for eight whole years together, he kept ten thousand men awork about it; and that for magnificence and statelineſs, it exceeded Solomons Temple, if his words exceed not the truth of the matter. This the Diſciples fondly thought would work upon our Saviour to reverſe his former ſentence, as aboveſaid; but his thoughts were not as their thoughts. Animo magno nihil magnum, ſaith Seneca. The Branble reckoned it a great matter to reign over the trees; not ſo the Vine and Olive. Lib.15. Antiq. cap.14. Iudg.9.

Verſe 2. There ſhall not be left here, &c.] This was afterwards fulfilled, when the Temple was ſo ſet on fire by Titus his ſouldiers, that it could not be quencht by the induſtry of man. Titus (it is ſaid) would have preſerved the Temple, as one of the worlds wonders, from being burnt, but could not; ſuch was the fury of the ſouldiers, ſet awork by God doubtleſs. And when, upon the taking of the City and Temple, the Army ſaluted him Emperor, and many others by way of congratulation ſent him Crowns and Garlands, he, by a memorable example of modeſty, refuſed them, ſaying, that he had done nothing more then lent his hands and help to God, who declared his fierce wrath againſt that ſinful people. And when Julian the Apoſtate, to ſpite the Chriſtians, permitted and encouraged the Jews to re-edifie their Temple at his charge, and they attempted it accordingly, they were hindred from heaven by a mighty earthquake, together with balls of fire iſſuing out of the ground-works, and conſuming the builders. There are that ſay, that at the ſame time the Temple at Delphi was utterly overthrown by earthquakes and thunder-bolts, and could never ſince be repaired. When Phocas the murtherer ſought to ſecure himſelf by building high walls, he heard a voyce from heaven telling him, that though he built his bulworks never ſo high, yet ſin within would ſoon undermine all. We may ſay the ſame to the Jeſuites, telling us ſo oft in their writings de magnitudine Eccleſiæ Romanæ, that be they never ſo high-ſet, God, for their abominations, will abaſe them. It is obſerved of Rome, that ſince it became the Popes ſeat, it was never beſieged by any, but it was ſackt and ranſackt. See its deſtiny elegantly and emphatically ſet forth, *Rev.*18.21. Josephus. Non ſese dicens illa feciſſe, ſed Deo iram ſuam declaranti manus ſuas commodaſſe, Pareus *in hiſt. proſa. medul. Verſe 3. Came unto him privately, ſaying] Becauſe it was dangerous to ſpeak publiquely of the deſtruction of the Temple, as the examples of Jeremy and Steven ſhew. Howbeit Micah the Moraſhite prophecied in the days of Hezekiah, ſaying, Zion ſhall be plowed, &c. and the mountain of this houſe ſhall be as the high-places of a forreſt. And God ſtirred up many faithful witneſſes to cry out againſt Rome in her ruff, and to foretell her ruine. In the year 1159. lived Johannes Sariſburienſis, who reproved the Pope to his face, and wrote his Polycraticon, wherein he freely taxeth all the Romiſh Hierarchy. Bernard alſo, told the Biſhops of his time, that they were not Teachers, but Seducers, not Paſtors, but Impoſtors, not Prelates, but Pilates, &c. And a certain Painter, blamed by a Cardinal for colouring the viſages of Peter and Paul too red, tartly, but fitly replyed, that he painted them ſo, as bluſhing at the lives of their ſucceſſors. Ier. 26.18. Iac. Revius in hiſt. Pont. Rom. p.145. Lib.4. de conſid.

The ſign of thy coming] viz. To deſtroy the Temple.

And of the end of the world] Which they thought could not poſſibly out-laſt the Temple. As they were wont to ſay in the Primitive Church, Abſq; ſtationibus non ſtaret mundus: The world could not ſtand if Gods people did not ſtand before him in prayer. Semen ſanctum ſtatumen terræ, as Tremellius reads, *Iſa.*6.13. Tertull.

Verſe 4. Take heed that no man deceive you] Try the ſpirits, and turn from falſe doctrines, as you would do from a Serpent in your way, or from poyſon in your meats. Deceivers are ſly and ſubtile, and that old Serpent more ſubtile then them all, catcheth the deceived by the deceiver, as the fiſher doth one fiſh by another, that he may make a prey of them both. Theſe, as Harpies, have virgins faces, vultures tallons; they are ravening wolves in ſheeps-cloathing, &c. Shun them therefore, for they will increaſe to more ungodlineſs, and their word will eat as doth a gangrene, 2 Tim. 2. 16, 17. Theodoſius tore the writings of the Arrians that were preſented to him: And when he deſired to confer with Eunomius, his Empreſs Placilla diſſwaded him very earneſtly: leſt being perverted by his ſpeeches he might fall into hereſie. *Theod. were miserably slain by the Romans. So one Moor in King Edward the sixths time, took upon him to be Christ: So did Hacket in Q. Elizabeths time, David George likewise and others in Germany. Here in England, at the Convocation held at Oseney under Steven Langton 1206. a certain young man professed himself to be Jesus Christ; shewing marks of wounds in his hands, feet and sides. He brought also two women with him, whereof one took upon her to be our Lady, and the other Mary Magdalen. This counterfeit Christ, for his labour was worthily crucified. That I say nothing here of Papists, who desperately deny the Lord that bought them, and wickedly set up Antichrist in his stead (as were easie to prove) who opposeth him not so much in his nature or person, as in his unction and function, and thence also hath his name.

Verse 6. See that you be not troubled] Or frighted, as souldiers are by sudden alarm. Quid timet hominem homo in sinu dei positus? David was undaunted, Psal. 3.6. & 27.3. He looked not downward on the rushing and roaring streams of dangers that ran so swiftly under him, for that would have made him giddy: But stedfastly fastned on the power and promise of God All-sufficient, and was safe. So at the sack of Ziglag, 1 Sam. 30.6.

Verse 7. For nation shall rise, &c.] See here the woful effects of refusing Gods free offers of grace. They that would have none of the Gospel of peace, shall have the miseries of war. They that loathed the heavenly Manna, shall be hunger-starved. They that despised the onely medicine of their souls, shall be visited with the pestilence. They that would not suffer heart-quake, shall suffer earth-quake. Or as that Martyr expresseth it. They that trembled not in hearing, shall be crusht to pieces in feeling. As they heap up sin, so they treasure up wrath; as there hath been a conjuncture of offences, so there shall be of their miseries. The black horse is at the heels of the red, and the pale of the black, Rev. 6. 4. God left not Pharoah, that sturdy rebel, till he had beaten the breath out of his body, nor will he cease pursuing men with his plagues, one in the neck of another, till they throw the traytors head over the wall.

Verse 8. All these are the beginning, &c.] q.d. There yet remain far worse matters then war, famine, pestilence, earthquakes. And yet war is as a fire that feeds upon the people, Isa. 9. 19, 20. Famine is far worse then that, Lam. 4. 9. Pestilence is Gods evil Angel, Psal. 78. 49, 50. Earthquakes are wondrous terrible, and destructive to whole Cities, as to Antioch of old, and to Pleurs in Italy of late, where fifteen hundred men perished together. A conflux of all these abides the contemners of Christs Gospel. The holy Martyrs, as Saunders, Bradford, Philpot, &c. The Confessors also that fled for Religion in Q. Maries days acknowledged (as Ursinus relates) that that great inundation of misery came justly upon them, for their unprofitableness under the means of grace, which they had enjoyed in K. Edwards days. When I first came to be Pastor at Clavenna, saith Zanchy, there fell out a grievous pestilence, that in seven moneths space consumed 1200 persons. Their former Pastor Mainardus, that man of God, had often foretold such a calamity for their Popery and prophaneness: But he could never be believed, till the plague had proved him a true Prophet; and then they remembred his words, and wisht they had been warned by him. When the Protestants of France began to grow wanton of their peace and prosperity, to jangle among themselves about discipline, and to affect a vain frothy way of preaching, then came the cruel massacre upon them.

Verse 9. And shall kill you] Besides the Butcheries at Jerusalem, that slaughter-house of the Saints, Nero orientem fidem primus Romæ cruentavit, Nero was the first Roman Persecutor, saith Tertullian, who therefore calleth him the Dedicator of the Condemnation of Christians: He is said to have made such a bloody decree as this, Quisquis Christianum se esse confitetur, is tanquam generis humani convictas hostis, sine ulteriori sui defensione capite plectitor. Whoso confesseth himself a Christian, let him be put to death without any more ado, as a convicted enemy of mankind.

Dedicator damnationis Christianorum. Tert. Alsted. Chron. 331.

Verse 10. And then shall many be offended] As not willing to suffer. How many revolted for fear in the Primitive times, were abjured here in Q. Maries Raign, fell to Popery in the Palatinate, and other places in Germany, since the troubles there, as fast as leaves fall in Autumn? Somewhat men will do for Christ, but suffer nothing.

Verſe 11. And ſhall deceive many] Witneſs the Eaſtern and Weſtern Antichriſt, thoſe deceitful workers, that have drawn millions of ſouls into hell, by their grand impoſtures. The world went wondering after thoſe two Beaſts, which as the Panther, hid their horrid heads, that they might take men with their fleſh-pleaſing ſuperſtitions: And (as the ſerpent Scytale) when they cannot otherwiſe overtake the flying paſſenger, they ſo bewitch him with their beauty and bravery, that he hath no power to paſs away.

Verſe 12. And becauſe iniquity ſhall abound] In theſe laſt and worſt times, as Bernard yoketh them, and as the Scripture oft deſcribeth them. There was never but one Noah, that with two faces ſaw both before and behind him. But loe that Ancient of days, to whom all times are preſent, hath told us, that the laſt ſhall be the looſeſt, the dregs of time, the ſink of ſins of all former Ages. The love of many ſhall wax cold] Converſation with cold ones will caſt a damp, and make one cold, as our Saviour here intimates; there is no ſmall danger of defection, if not of infection by ſuch; they are notable quench-coals. This both David and Eſay found, and therefore cryed out each for himſelf, Woe is me, Pſal. 120. 5. Iſa. 6. 5. There is a compulſive power in company to do as they do, Gal. 2. 14. Why compelleſt thou, &c. It behoveth us therefore to beware, upon whom the ends of the world are come, leaſt we ſuffer a decay, leaſt leaving our firſt love, and led away with the error of the wicked, we fall from our former ſtedfaſtneſs. The world, ſaith Ludolfus, hath been once deſtroyed with water for the heat of luſt, and ſhall be again with fire for the coldneſs of love. Latimer ſaw ſo much lack of love to God and goodneſs in his time, that he thought verily dooms-day was then juſt at hand. Of them that verſe was verified, Principium fervet, medium tepet, exitus alget. Like the Galli Inſubres, they ſhewed all their valour in the firſt encounter. Like Charls the 8. of France, of whom Guicciarden noteth, that in his expedition to Naples, he came into the field like Thunder and Lightning, but went out like a ſnuff. Like Mandrobulus in Lucian, who the firſt year offered gold to his gods, the ſecond year ſilver, the third nothing. Or laſtly, like the Lyons of Syria, whith as Ariſtotle reporteth, bring forth firſt five whelps, next time four, next three, and ſo on, till at length they become barren. So Apoſtates come at laſt to nothing, and therefore muſt look for nothing better then to be caſt off for ever; when they that hold out and hold on their way, paſſing from ſtrength to ſtrength, from faith to faith, &c. ſhall be as the Sun when he goeth forth in his ſtrength; yea, they ſhall ſhine forth as the Sun in the Kingdom of their father, Matth. 13. 43. Caleb was not diſcouraged by the Gyants, and therefore had Hebron, the place of the Gyants; ſo thoſe that hold out in the way of heaven, ſhall be ſure to have heaven. Thomas San-Paulins at Paris, a young man of eighteen years, being in the fire, was pluckt up again upon the gibbet, and asked whether he would turn? To whom he ſaid, That he was in his way toward God, and therefore deſired them to let him go. That Merchant of Paris, his caſe was nothing ſo comfortable, who for jeſting at the Fryers, was by them condemned to be hanged; But he, to ſave his life, was content to recant, and ſo he did. The Fryers hearing of his recantation, commended him, ſaying, If he continued ſo, he ſhould be ſaved. And ſo calling upon the Officers, cauſed them to make haſte to the Gallows to hang him up, while he was yet in a good way (ſaid they) leſt he fall again. Act. and Mon. fol. 825. ibid. fol. 831.

Verſe 14. For a Witneſs unto all Nations] Whileſt, with Moſes, it ſlayeth the Egyptian, ſaveth the Iſraelite; is a ſavour of life to ſome, of death to others, who ſhall be left without excuſe by the Goſpel preached to them, as thoſe that by their obſtinacy have wilfully cut the throats of their own poor ſouls, refuſing to be reformed, hating to be healed. Sure it is that the laſt ſentence ſhall be but a more manifeſt declaration of that judgement which the Lord in this life, moſt an end, by his word, hath paſſed upon people.

Verse 15. The abomination of desolation] That is Antichrist, say some Interpreters; and hitherto may fitly be referred that of Baronius; who in his Annals of the year, 964. reckoning up some Popes monstrously wicked, he calleth them, The abomination of desolation standing in Gods Temple. Others understand it of the Roman Eagles or Ensigns. Others of the Emperor Caius his statue, said by some to be set up in the Sanctuary. As others again of Titus his picture placed there, which haply was that one great sin that so troubled him upon his death-bed. But they do best, that understand the Text of those abominable authors of desolation, the Roman Armies; who laid waste that pleasant Land, and destroyed the Nation; as, besides what Daniel fore-told, is set forth by Josephus at large in his sixth and seventh book, De bello Judaico.

Titus moriens se unius tantùmodò rei pœnitere dixit. Id autem quid esset non aperuit, nec quisquam certò novit, aliud aliis conjicientibus. Dio in vita Tit.

Spoken of by Daniel] Porphyrie that mad Dog, running furiously at God and Christ, Amanuenses, Spiritus sancti Danielem & Matthæum nefariè calumniatus est scripsisse falsa, blasphemed these two Secretaries of the Holy Ghost, Daniel and Matthew, as writer of false things. This was contra solem mingere.

Raynold. de idolalat. Rom. page 246.

Whoso readeth, let him understand] Let him strive to do so by reading with utmost attention, diligence and devotion; weeping as John did, till the sealed book was opened; digging deep in the mine of the Scriptures for the mind of God, 1 Cor. 2.15. and holding it fast when he hath it, lest at any time he should let it slip, Heb. 2.1. Admirable is that, and appliable to this purpose, which Philostratus relateth of the precious stone Pantarbe, of so orient, bright and sweet a colour, that it both dazleth and refresheth the eyes at once, drawing together heaps of other stones by its secret force (though far distant) as hives of Bees, &c. But, lest so costly a gift should grow cheap, nature hath not only hid it in the innermost bowels of the earth, but also hath put a faculty into it, of slipping out of the hands of those that hold it, unless they be very careful to prevent it.

In vita Apollonii, l.3.c.4. Acervos lapidum non aliter ac apum examina pertrahit. Non modò occultis terræ visceribus abdidit, sed & facultatem indidit, qua ex captantium manibus effluerit, nisi provida ratione teneretur.

Verse 16. Flee into the mountains] As Lot at length did, for Zoar was too hot to hold him: So should Judea be for these, who were therefore to repair to Pella beyond Jordan, where they were hid till the indignation was over-past, as Eusebius hath it, in the third Book, and fifth Chapter of his history. Such a receptacle of religious people was Geneva in the Marian persecution. And such (blessed be God our strength for his unspeakable favour) is at this present Warwick-Castle, to my self writing these things, and to many others in these troublous times. So Bucer, and many godly people were entertained and safe-guarded by that noble Franciscus à Sickengen in the German wars.

Verse 17. Not come down to take any thing] See here the miseries of war, which now, alas, we feel and can seal to; being glad to flee for our lives with the loss of all, lest with Shimei, seeking to save our goods, we lose life and all; glad if we may scape with the skin of our teeth: And how like are our present convulsions to end in a deadly consumption? War is called evil by a specialty, Isa. 45.7. Sin, Satan, and War have all one name, Evil is the best of them. The best of sin is deformity, of Satan enmity, of War misery. God yet offereth us mercy, as Alexander did those he warred against, whiles the lamp burned. O let us break off our sins by repentance, and be abrupt in it, lest we should seem to come short, Heb. 4. 1.

Heu fuge nate Dea. Hostis habet muros, &c.

Verse 18. Return back to take his cloathes] The body is better then rayment; And although there is great use of cloathes, in flight especially, to save us from the injury of wind and weather (for we carry the lamps of our lives in paper-lanthorns, as it were) yet life for a prey (though we have nothing else) in a common calamity is a singular mercy. A living dog is better then a dead Lyon, saith Solomon. The Gibeonites, to save their lives, submitted to the meanest offices of being hewers of wood, &c. Skin for skin, &c. Iob 2.4. We should be content to sacrifice all to the service of our lives.

Verse 19. Wo to them that are with child, &c.] By the Laws of Nations, women with child, babes and sucklings, maids and old folk should be spared. But the bloody sword oft knows no difference, as Hos. 10.14. the mother was dashed in pieces upon her her children, Hoſ. 13. 16. their Infants were daſhed in pieces, and their woman with child ript up. So at the ſack of Magdeburg by Charls the Fifth, and of Merindol in France by Minerius, where the Paps of many women were cut off, and their children, looking for ſuck at their mothers breſt, being dead before, dyed alſo for hunger. Many ſuch barbarous butcheries have been acted lately in Ireland, and begin to be alſo now in England, (poor England, now an Iceland!) as at Bolton in Lancaſhire lately. Help, Lord, or thy ſervant periſheth. Act. and Mon. fol. 868.

Verſe 20. But pray ye] Chriſt ſaith not, Fight ye, but pray ye. To fight it boots not: for God hath reſolved the lands ruine: But prayers are Bombardæ & inſtrumenta bellica Chriſtianorum, as Luther hath it, the great guns and artillery of Chriſtians, whereby they may batter Heaven, and make a breach upon God himſelf. Flectitur iratus voce rogante Deus. Something God will yield to the prayers of his people, even when he ſeems moſt bitterly bent, and unchangeably reſolved againſt them. Chriſt here bids them pray, that their flight fell not out in the Winter, when the days are ſhort, ways foul, and all leſs fit for ſuch a purpoſe. Nor on the Sabbath; when though it were lawful enough, yet it would be ſo much the more uncomfortable. This they were bid to pray above thirty years before the City was beſieged. And they had what they prayed for. Their flight was not in winter, for the ſiege began about Eaſter, and the City was taken in September. Neither was it on the Sabbath-day, as we have cauſe to believe: for when Chriſt bids us pray for any thing, it's ſure he means to beſtow it. As when we bid our children ask us this or that, it is becauſe we mean to give it them. χείμα δὲ τὸ χεῖν Hycms. πρὸ τοῦ ὕειν. Bruma, q. ἔαρ-χὴ ἡμᾶς, i. e. ἦμας. Beeman.

Verſe 21. Tribulation, ſuch as was not, &c.] Thoſe very days ſhall be affliction: ſo Mark hath it, chap. 13. 19. As if the very time were nothing elſe but affliction it ſelf. He that can read the hiſtory of it without tears, hath hardly the heart of a man in him. Beſides, thoſe many that periſhed within the walls, Joſephus tells us of a thouſand thouſand of them ſlain by the Romans, and 97000 carryed captive. Oh ſee the ſeverity of God and tremble. Rom. 11. 22. Alterius perditio tua ſit cautio. Scipio wept when he ſaw Carthage on fire. And when Saguntum was taken, the Romans were as much affected, as if Hannibal fuiſſet ad portus, the enemy had been beating upon the walls of the Capitol. ἔσονται γὰρ ἡμέραι ἐκεῖναι θλῖψις. Iſidor.

Verſe 22. There ſhould no fleſh be ſaved] That is, No Jew left alive; the Roman ſouldiers had been ſo often beaten by them, that they deſired nothing more then to rid the world of them. But God, for his Covenant ſake, preſerved a remnant of them, as he ever ſoftneth the ſword of his juſtice in the oyl of his mercy, as Nicephorus hath it. Joſephus attributeth it to Titus his clemency: but our Saviour here better, to Gods infinite mercy to his Elect. Theſe are the ſalt of the earth, that ſprinkled here and there, preſerve it from putrifying and periſhing. God gave all the ſouls that were in the ſhip to Paul, and all that were in Zoar to Lot. If it were not for his Elect in the world, he would make a ſhort work in the earth, Rom. 9. 28. Deus vindicta gladium oleo miſerationis ſemper emollit.

Verſe 23. Then if any man ſhall ſay] Here again our Saviour returns to the deſcription of the laſt times, containing the riſe, raign, and ruine of Antichriſt, whoſe chief engine ſhall be to perſwade Chriſts corporal preſence here and there in certain places, and to tie his worſhip and ſervice to ſuch or ſuch a City, Countrey, Temple, &c. where he may be ſeen, touched, eaten, &c. as they feign in the Euchariſt.

Verſe 24. If it were poſſible, &c.] Fundamentally and finally the Elect cannot poſſibly be deceived: becauſe both the deceived, and the deceiver are with the Lord, Job 12. 13, 16. In the Primitive Church, thoſe capital Hereſies concerning the Trinity and the incarnation of our Saviour did ſo prevail, Ut ingenioſa res fuerit eſſe Chriſtianum, ſaith Eraſmus, that it was a witty thing to be a true Chriſtian. Arrianiſm had ſo overſpread the world, that Athanaſius ſeemed to be alone, as did Elias before him, and Luther after him. But God in worſt times, reſerved a remnant, and at all times, will not ſee nor ſuffer any of his to miſcarry: but will reduce them from their out-ſtrays, as he did Latimer, who was (as himſelf confeſſeth) as obſtinate a Papiſt as any was in England, till converted by Bilney; and as he did Denckius a Learned Dutchman, but a peſtilent heretick, till converted by Oecolampadius; and as he did Francis Junius, a deſperate Atheiſt, till converted by conference with a countrey-man of his not far from Florence. Act. and Mon. fol. 919. *Scultet. Verſe 25. Behold, I have told you before] See therefore that ye ſtand alway upon your watch: for, for this end have I warned you: previſion is the beſt means of prevention.

Leo cassibus irretitus ait si præscivissem. To sin after warning, is to fall with open eyes, which deserves no pity. Not to be warned, is both a just presage and desert of a downfal.

Verse 26. Behold, He is in the Desart] In such an ermitage, or blinde chappel, built in a by-place to the honour of such a Saint, as our Lady of Loretto, Hall, or Sichem (Lipsius, his last dotages) Behold he is in the secret chambers or conclaves (scil. of Cardinals, &c.) or cupboards, as the breaden-god born up and down in a box, or on an Altar, and worshipped by the common people. The Rebels of Norfolk in Edw. 6. time, brought with them into the battel the Pyx under his Canopy, as the Israelites brought the Ark, 1 Sam. 4. 3. and said it should save them. But as then the Ark, so now the consecrated God, with all the trumpery about him, was taken in a Cart, which was then in stead of an Altar, and there lay all in the dust. Believe them not therefore in any of these their sopperies and forgeries. The simple believeth every word: but the prudent man looketh well to his goings. He is a slave to good reason, but not easily swayed by every new opinion.

Verse 27. So shall also the coming of the son of man be] Clear and conspicuous, as the lightning cannot be hid or hindered from being seen all the whole Heaven over. Then shall all secret sins be made visible, as things written with the juice of Limmons are legible, when held to the fire: as visible shall they be, and legible too, as if written with the brightest lightning upon a wall of chrystal.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1021.

Verse 28. For wheresoever the carcase is, &c.] That is, saith M. Lambert, Martyr, wheresoever is declared by the course of the Scriptures, the benefits granted to us by Christs death, thither will men seek and flie, to know how they may enjoy the same. The sacrificed body of Christ (saith another) hath a most fragant smell, inviting the Saints (like birds of prey) to flie from far with marvellous swiftness to this dead, but all quickning carcass. Some interpret it thus: Where the carcass is, that is, the body of the Jews, that had forsaken God and his truth, and so was a dead carcass, (confer Hos. 13. 1.) there will the Roman Eagles and enemies be.

Pemble of the Sacrament.

There will the Eagles be gathered] The Vulturine Eagles especially, whereof read Job 39. 29, 30. they follow Armies, and feed on carcasses. Eagles the Saints are called, 1. For their delight in high flying. 2. For their sharp sightedness, and stedfast looking into the Sun of righteousness. 3. For their singular sagacity, in smelling out Christ, and resenting things above, for the which they are said to have, A nose like the tower of Lebanon. 4. For their feeding upon the bloody sacrifice of Christ, the true carcass. Briefly, this proverbial speech may be well understood, either of the conflux of the godly to the light and liberty of the Gospel, or else of their indissoluble union with Christ, to be perfectly enjoyed at the resurrection. For the sense of it is, that let the Devil use what means so ever he can by his emissaries the false prophets, to divide betwixt Christ and his people, by telling them, There he is, or here he is, it will not be: for they will flee to him as a cloud, or as the Doves to their windows, Isa. 60. 8. Nay, as the Eagles to their carcass, with incredible swiftness; so forcible is the tie that is betwixt them, that they will not be kept asunder. The Israelites removed their Tents from Mithcah, which signifies sweetness, to Cashmonah which signifies swiftness, Numb. 33. 29. To teach us (saith a Divine) that no sooner have the Saints tasted Christs sweetness, but presently they are carryed after him with swiftness: they cannot rest till they are joyned unto him, whom their soul loveth. In reference to whom, Christs last Supper is called by the Ancients, Festum aquilarum, non graculorum, a Feast for Eagles, not for Daws.

Cant. 7. 4.

Verse 29. Immediately after the tribulation of those dayes] After that the mysterie of iniquity hath wrought effectually, and is come to an upshot: after that Antichrist hath had his full forth, as they say, and hath compleated his sin, Christ shall suddenly come, as it were out of an Engine.

Shall the Sun be darkned, &c.] Stupendious eclipses shall precede the Lords coming, and other strange events both in Heaven, Earth and Sea, as Luke hath it. The frame of this whole universe shall shake, as houses give great cracks, when ready to fall. See 2 Pet. 3. 10. and seek no further.

was of old the ſign of the ſon of man in the Wilderneſs, Exod. 13.21. or the ſcars of his wounds, or his croſs, or ſomething elſe that we cannot deſcribe, and need not ſearch into. Look how a King, when he would gather his forces into one, ſets up his Standard, or appoints his rendezvous: ſo, ſuch ſhall be the brigthneſs of Chriſts coming, that all his ſhall be gathered unto him by that token, not to fight; but to triumph with him and divide the ſpoyl, as it were, being more then Conquerors; and what is that but triumphers? The expectation of this day muſt (as that did with Davids Souldiers at Ziklag) digeſt all our ſorrows.

And then ſhall all the Tribes of the earth mourn] This to prevent, we muſt judge our ſelves, 1 Cor. 11.31. and take unto us words againſt our ſins, if we would not have Chriſt take unto him words againſt our ſouls, Hoſ. 14.3. With a great ſound of a Trumpet.] Chriſt ſhall put forth his own mighty voyce, Joh. 5.28. & 1 Theſſ. 4.16. miniſtred by his Angels, as in the Text, and ſet forth by the ſound of a trumpet, in alluſion, belike to Numb. 10. where the people were congregated and called together by the ſound of a trumpet to the door of the Tabernacle. The Lion of the Tribe of Judah ſhall roar from above, and thruſt out his voyce from his holy habitation, when he entreth into judgement with all fleſh, Jer. 25.30,31. As the Lion roareth over his whelps, brought forth dead at firſt, and raiſeth them from death to life, as Pliny reporteth.

And they ſhall gather together his elect] How ſhall they know them from reprobates? By Gods ſaving mark ſet fairly in their fore-heads, Ezek. 9. And by their blith and merry countenances, cleared and cheared in the apprehenſion and approach of their full redemption, now drawing nigh. Beſides, as ſervants know their maſters harveſt from anothers, and can eaſily diſcern the corn from the cockle, ſo can the good Angels ſoon ſingle out the elect, about whom they have been familiarly converſant here on earth; as miniſtring ſpirits ſent forth to miniſter to the heirs of ſalvation, ready preſt to any good-office about them. Sig. ſalutari. Tremel. Heb. 1. 14.

Verſe 32. Ye know that Summer is nigh] Which is ſo much the ſweeter, becauſe brought in, and led out by winter: ſo will eternal life be to the Saints, here toſſed and turmoyled with variety of ſufferings. Many ſharp ſhowers they muſt here paſs thorow, Light is ſown for the righteous, &c. ſown onely; and ſeed-time we know is uſually wet and ſhowrie. Howbeit it is fair weather oft-times with Gods children, when it is fouleſt with the wicked; as the Sun roſe upon Zoar, when the fire fell upon Sodom. But, if they ſhould have never a good day in this world, yet Heaven will make amends for all. And what is it for one to have a rainy day, who is going to take poſſeſſion of a Kingdom?

Verſe 33. Know that it is near, &c.] Some ſpace then there ſhall be, it ſeems, between the fore-going ſigns, and the coming of Chriſt. But though ſpace be granted, yet grace is uncertain. Make ſure work therefore betimes, leſt ye come late, and be left without doors for your lingering.

Verſe 34. This generation ſhall not paſs] viz. That generation that immediately precedes the end of the world. That this is the ſenſe, appears by the Antitheſis, verſ. 36. But of that day and hour knoweth no man, q. d. The generation and age wherein Chriſt ſhall come, ye may know by the ſigns that foreſhew it, but the day and hour ye muſt not look to know, be you never ſo intelligent.

Verſe 35. Heaven and earth ſhall paſs, &c.] What God hath written, he hath written. His word is ſtabliſhed in Heaven, ſaith David: It endures for ever, ſaith Peter; It remaineth firm as Mount Sion, and ſhall ſtand inviolable, when Heaven ſhall paſs away with a great noyſe, and the Earth with its works ſhall be burnt up, 2 Pet. 3.10. to the terror and confuſion of thoſe profane ſcoffers, who deridingly demand, Where is the promiſe of his coming, &c? verſ. 4. that ſay, Let him make ſpeed and haſten his work, that we may ſee it, &c. Wo to you that thus deſire the day of the Lord: To what end is it for you? The day of the Lord is darkneſs, and not light. The great day of the Lord is near, it is near and haſteth greatly. of trouble and distress, a day of wastness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness, to them that are setled on their lees, and that say in their heart, The Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil.

Verse 36. But of that day and hour knoweth no man] That the Lord will come, it is certo certius, not more sure, then what time he will come, is to us most uncertain. Sundry guesses have been given at it by both ancient and modern Writers: most of which, time hath already refuted. In the year of grace 1533. there was one that foolishly fore-told, That the day of judgement should fall out in October next ensuing. And this he gathered out of these words, Jesus Nazarenus Rex Judæorum. Likewise out of these, Videbunt in quem transfixerunt: the numerals of the former point to the year 1532. of the later to 1533. Others there are that place the end of the world upon the year 1657. And for proof they make use of this Chronogram MVnDI ConfLagrat Io; and further alledge, that the general deluge fell out in the year of the worlds Creation 1657. The end of the world, saith another, will be in the year of Christ 1688. three Jubilees and an half (or thereabouts) after the Reformation of Religion by Luther, &c. Joachimus Abbas had long since set the year 1258. Arnoldus de villa nova the year 1345. Michael Stiphelius Saint Lukes day in the year 1533. Cyprianus Leontius the year 1583. Joannes Regiomontanus the year 1588. Adelbertus Thermopedius the year 1599. April 3. Nicolaus Cusanus the year 1700. Cardanus. 1800. Picus Mirandula 1905. &c. So great hath been the folly and sin of many learned men, who have thus childishly set their wits to play in so serious a business, as one well censureth it.

Verse 37. So shall the coming of the Son of man be] Sudden and unexpected. Luther observeth, that it was in the Spring that the flood came, when every thing was in it's prime and pride, and nothing less looked for then a flood: men sinned securely, as if they had lived out of the reach of Gods rod, but he found them out. Security is the certain usher of destruction: as at Laish, Ziklag: Before an earthquake the ayr will be most quiet, and when the winde lyes, the great rain fals. Frequentissimum initium calamitatis securitas, saith the Historian.

Verse 38. They were eating, and drinking] Wine, likely; because our Saviour hereupon bids his Apostles take heed to themselves lest their hearts at any time should be overcharged with surfetting and drunkenness, &c. Luk. 21.34. Like as some do not improbably conjecture, that Nadab and Abihu were in their drink, when they offered strange fire, because after, they were devoured by fire from the Lord. Aaron and the Priests are charged to drink no Wine nor strong drink, when they go into the Tabernacle of the Congregation, lest they dye, *Lev.*10.12.8.9.S. Luke delivers the matter more roundly by an elegant, Asyndeton, They ate, they drink, they married, &c. q.d. they passed without intermission, from eating, to drinking, from drinking, to marrying &c. they followed it close, as if it had been their work, and they born for no other end. Of Ninus, second King of Assyrians, Nephew haply to these Antedihunian belly-gods, it is said, that he was old excellent at eating and drinking. And of Sardanapalus, one of the same line, Tully tells us, that his gut was his god. Summum bonum in ventre, aut sub ventre posuit: and Plutarch, that he hired men to devise new pleasures for him. God would have every man in his honeſt occupation to humble himſelf by juſt labour, and ſo to accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity, Levit. 26, 41. But one of theſe two poor grinders at the mill, is left by Chriſt for her pride and profaneneſs. Many are humbled, but not humble; low, but not lowly. To theſe Chriſt will ſay, Perdidiſtis utilitatem calamitatis, miſerimi facti eſtis, & peſſimi permanſiſtis. Miſery hath no whit mended you: wo be to you.

Hold faſt that thou haſt, that no man take thy crown from thee. Whilſt the Crocodile ſleepeth with open mouth, the Indian Rat gets into him, and eateth his entrails. Satan works ſtrongeſt on the fancy when the ſoul is drouſie. The Spouſe therefore promiſeth to get up early, Cant. 7. 12. to ſhake off ſecurity, and not to be found henceforth ſupine and ſluggiſh, but to ſtand upon her watch: as of Scanderbeg it is ſaid, that from his firſt coming to Epirus, he never ſlept above two hours in a night, but with reſtleſs labour proſecuted his affairs. Ariſtotle and ſome others would not ſleep, but with braſen balls in their hands; which falling on veſſels purpoſely ſet on their beds ſides, the noyſe did diſſwade immoderate ſleep. Our Saviour pronounceth them three times happy that watch, Luk. 12. 37, 38, 43. The bleſſed Angels are called Watchers, ἐγρήγοροι, Dan. 4. 10.

Verſe 43. He would not have ſuffered his houſe, &c.] And ſhall the children of this world be wiſer for their houſes, then we for our ſouls? what are theſe earthly tabernacles, theſe clayie cottages, to our houſes from Heaven? All things here are terrene and abject, nec vera, nec veſtra, ſubject to vanity and violence. Heaven onely hath a foundation, Heb. 11. Earth hath none, Job 26. 7. And things are ſaid to be in heaven, but on earth, as ready with the leaſt ſhake, to fall off. There is nothing of any ſtability or ſolid conſiſtency in the creature. It is but a ſurface, an outſide, all the felicity of it is but skin-deep. Seek therefore firſt Gods kingdom, &c.

Verſe 44. Therefore be ye alſo ready] Suetonius tells us, that it was a piece of Julius Cæſars policy, never to fore-acquaint his Souldiers of any ſet time of removal or onſet, that he might ever have them in readineſs to draw forth whitherſoever he would. Chriſt in like manner, who is called the Captain of our ſalvation. Our enemy is always ready to annoy us, ſhould we not therefore look to our ſtand, and be viligant? Solomons wiſdom, Lots integrity, and Noahs ſobriety felt the ſmart of the Serpents ſting. The firſt was ſeduced, the ſecond ſtumbled, and the third fell, while the eye of watchfulneſs was fallen aſleep.

did the people, then whom he was higher by head and ſhoulders. They ſhould be faithful in all Gods houſe as Servants, as Stewards and Diſpenſers of the myſteries of God, to give to every man his demenſe, his due meaſure of meat, and that which is fit for him, not (as he in the Emblem did) ſtraw to the Dog, and a bone to the Aſs,&c. but to every one his portion, 1 *Cor.*4.1.

Verſe 46. Bleſſed is that ſervant] It was Auguſtines wiſh, that Chriſt when he came might finde him, aut precantem, aut prædicantem, either praying or preaching. It was Latimers wiſh (and he had it) that he might ſhed his heart-blood for Chriſt. It was Jewels wiſh, that he might die preaching, and he did ſo. For preſently after his laſt Sermon at Lacock in Wiltſhire, he was, by reaſon of ſickneſs, forced to his bed, from whence he never came of, till his tranſlation to glory. I have heard the like of Mr. Lancaſter, a precious man of God, ſometimes Paſtor of Bloxham in Oxfordſhire, a man very famous for his living by Faith. Cuſhamerus a Dutch Divine, and one of the firſt Preachers of the Goſpel at Erfurt in Germany, had his Pulpit poyſoned by the malicious Papiſts there, and ſo took his death in Gods work. What, would you that the Lord when he comes, ſhould finde me idle? ſaid Calvin to his friends, who wiſhed him to forbear ſtudying awhile, for his health ſake. And ſuch a like anſwer made Doctor Reynolds to his Phyſitian upon the like occaſion. Eliah was going on and talking with Eliſha (about heavenly things, no doubt) when the Charet of Heaven came to fetch him. There can be no better poſture or ſtate for the Meſſenger of our diſſolution to finde us in, then in a diligent proſecution of our general, or particular calling.

Chriſt is a liberal pay-maſter, and his retributions are more then bountiful. Abraham thought much that the Steward of his houſe ſhould be heir of his goods, *Gen.*15.2,3. Not ſo the Lord Chriſt.

Verſe 48. But and if that evil ſervant] All places are full of ſuch evil ſervants (and ſo is Hell too,) as future their repentance, and ſo fool away their ſalvation. Of ſuch duſt-heaps we may finde in every corner: This is a depth of the Devil, brim-full with the blood of many ſouls, to perſwade them that they have yet long to live, and many fair Summers to ſee: that there is no ſuch haſte, but that hereafter may be time enough: In ſpace comes grace: and a few good words at laſt will waft them to Heaven,&c.

CHAP. XXV.

Verſe 1. Then ſhall the Kingdom of heaven]

OUr Saviour here continueth his former diſcourſe, and ſets it on by a ſecond parable to the ſame purpoſe; not ſo much for the difficulty of the matter, as for our dulneſs and backwardneſs to believe and improve it. Moſes would have men whet good things upon their childrens minds and memories, by going often over them, as the knife doth over the whetſtone. Solomon ſaith good counſel ſhould be faſtened as nails driven home to the head, Eccleſ. 12. 11. Paul holds it profitable to write the ſame things, though not in the ſame words, to his Philippians, chap. 4. 1. Peter ſlacks not to rouſe up thoſe to whom he writes, by remembring them of thoſe points wherein they were ready and well-rooted, 2 Epiſt. 1. 12, 13. And Auſtin adviſeth preachers ſo long to preſs the ſame truths, till they read in their hearers very viſage that they reſent and reliſh them. Deut. 6. 7. Repetere ſicut in acuendo. Shanan & Shanab ſunt cognata. Διεγείρειν. Aug. de doct. Chriſtiana.

Unto ten Virgins] Virgins without number, Cant. 6. 8. Profeſſors at large, good and bad, one with another.

Which took their lamps] The ſolemnities of Marriage were anciently preformed and celebrated by night, Luk. 12. 35. Plutarch. Problem. and the bridegrom brought to his lodging by the virgins, bearing burning lamps before him.

Verſe 2. Five were fooliſh] That is, ſome were wiſe, and ſome others fooliſh, and theſe laſt uſually the moſt, imprudent, improvident, after-witted, oculos habentes in occipitio, that forſee not a following miſchief, but come in with their fools, Had I wiſt, with their Si præſciviſſem, as the Lyon in the Fable. The Spaniards ſay of the Portugals that they are pocos y focos, Few and fooliſh. But of fooliſh Virgins, that is of profligate profeſſors, that have no more then an outſide, there are not a few, but more then a good many in all places, Cant. 6. 8, 9. μωροὶ quaſi μὴ ὁρῶσαι.

Verſe 3. Took their lamps, and took no oyl] Empty casks, barren fig-trees, pretenders only to the power of godlineſs: of whom it may be ſaid, as Livy ſaith of the Athenians, that they waged war againſt Philip the Father of Perſius King of Macedonia (ſo theſe againſt the Devil, the World, and the fleſh;) literis verbiſq́, quibus ſolis valent. Theſe carry Uriah's Letters about them deſtructory to themſelves. For if Religion be not good, why do they profeſs it? If it be, why do they not practiſe it? To ſuch it may fitly be ſaid, as Archidamus to his ſon, raſhly conflicting with the enemy without ſufficient ſtrength, Aut viribus adde, aut animis adime, ſo either add practiſe, or leave profeſſion: And as Alexander, having a ſouldier of his own name, and this ſouldier being a coward, he came to him and ſaid, either leave off the name of Alexander, or be valiant: ſo let theſe Nominals either lay by their lamps, or take oyl with them. Decad. 4.

Verſe 4. But the wiſe took oyl] That is, true faith in their hearts, which as oyl, is ſpredding, ſoftning, ſuppling, ſoaking. Chriſt putteth not upon his a waſhy colour of profeſſion (a blockwood blew) but he dyeth them in grain, with true grace and holineſs.

Verſe 5. While the bridegroom tarried] Tarry he doth. 1. To exerciſe our patience. 2. To eneager our deſires. 3. That his elect may be all gathered. 4. That the myſterie of iniquity may be fulfilled. 5. That the prophecies may be accompliſhed, &c.

They all ſlumbred] The wiſe ones alſo ſlept, but their hearts waked, they ſlept but half-ſleep, they napped and nodded, they ſlept with open eyes, as the Lyon doth; the ſpirit was willing to wake, but the fleſh was weak, and over-wayed it: They ſlumbred, but it was by Candle-light, they had their lamps burning by them, which the fooliſh had not. Cant. 5. 2. ἐνύσταξαν.

Verſe 6. There was a cry made] By the trumpet of the Arch-angel, and the voyce of God, ſay ſome Interpreters: and Hierom reports it for an Apoſtolical tradition, that Chriſt ſhall come at midnight. But of that hour no man knoweth, ſaith the Judge himſelf. Others there are that expound this cry, of the Preaching of the Goſpel, according to that voyce of the Cryer, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, &c. Matth. 3. And here —clames ut Stentora vincas, Cry aloud, ſpare not, &c. Reflè ad Archangeli vocem referetur. Aret. in loc.

Verſe 7. And trimmed their Lamps] The fooliſh alſo made a fair flouriſh, and held themſelves, haply, in caſe good enough for Heaven; deceiving their own hearts, or rather deceived by them, whiles they uſe fallacious and ſpecious ſophiſms, Jam. 1. 26. to make themſelves believe their peny to be good ſilver, when as it is nothing better then a ſlip.

Verſe 8. Our lamps are gone out] They were not lighted lamps, but ſparks of their own tinder-boxes; phantaſtical fire, an ignis fatuus, a painted flame, which neither heats nor lights. The glow-worm ſeems to have both heat and light, but touch it, and it hath neither. Alchymy gold may ſeem brighter and better then true gold, but it can neither paſs the ſeventh fire, nor comfort the heart as a cordial: ſo here. A man may live by a form, but he cannot die by it. They that kindle a fire, but not of Gods ſanctuary, and compaſs themſelves about with ſpecious ſparks, they may walk here for a while in the light of their fire, and in the ſparks that they have kindled. But when all's done, this is all they ſhall have of Gods hand, they ſhall lie down to ſorrow, Iſa. 50. 11.

Verſe 9. Leſt there be not enough, &c.] The beſt have nought to ſpare, what ever Papiſts fancy of the Church-treaſury. The righteous is ſcarcely ſaved; at death he finds all he could do little enough: though he began betime, and beſtirred himſelf to his utmoſt, hard and ſcarce gets he to Heaven, though he hath inſtantly ſerved God day and night. (Act. 26. 7.) with a kinde of extenſion and vehemency. ἐν ἐκτενείᾳ.

But go ye rather to them that ſell] Salſa eſt deriſio non cohortatio, like that, Iſa. 47. 13. As if God ſhould ſay to Papiſts, Go to your Indulgencers, pardon-mongers, Aneylers: or to carnal Goſpellers, Go to your paraſitical-preachers, that have ſoothed you up in your ſins (and ye loved to have it ſo) or at the beſt, have ſhot off a few pot-guns onely againſt groſs ſins, and licked you whole again preſently with, I hope better things of you, &c.

Verſe 10. And they that were ready, went in, &c.] The bridegroom waits no mans leiſure: Love is impatient of delays, leaps over all impediments, thoſe mountains of Bether or diviſion, that it may have not a union onely, but a unity with the beloved. Cant 2 17.

And the door was ſhut] Opportunity is headlong, and once loſt, irrecoverable. It behoves us therefore to be abrupt in the work of repentance, Dan. 4. 27. as a work of greateſt haſte: leſt we cry out, as he once, All too late, all too late: or as a great Lady of this Land did lately upon her death-bed, Time, time, a world of wealth for an inch of time. We want not time ſo much, as waſte it. Remember that upon this moment depends eternity. God hath hang'd the heavieſt weights upon the weakeſt Wyers.

Verſe 11. Afterward came alſo the other Virgins] The greater number by odds, that ſtand trifling & bafling with Chriſt, and their ſouls, futuring their repentance, Epimetheus Poſt-maſters, ſemper victuri in Seneca's ſenſe. Jehoſaphat in temporals, was ever wiſe too late, 2 Chron. 18. 31. & 20. 36, 37. and payd for his after-wit: howbeit in ſpirituals he was a wiſe Virgin, made ſure work for his ſoul, which was an high point of heavenly prudence.

Lord, Lord, open unto us] The ſelf-ſoother (with Siſera) is dreaming of a Kingdom, when Jaels nail is nearer to his temples, then a Crown; unleſs it be ſuch a Crown as Walter Earl of Athol (that Scotch Traytor) had, a Crown of red-hot iron clapt upon his head; being one of thoſe tortures wherewith he ended at once his wicked dayes, and deſires of the Kingdom. Speeds Hiſt. 842. ex Hect. Boeth.

Verſe. 12. Verily I ſay unto you, I know you not] i. e. With a knowledge of approbation or delight. Verba notitiæ, apud Hebræos ſecum trahunt affectum. See more above in the Note upon chap. 7. v. 23.

Verſe 13. Watch therefore] Leſt ye ſmart for it, when God ſhall ſend out ſummons for ſleepers. This is an exhortation anſwerable to that chap. 24. 42. and the upſhot of that, this, and the enſuing parable. See the Notes there.

Verſe 14. And delivered unto them his goods] There is ſcarce any man but hath ſome one thing or other in him, that is excellent and extraordinary: ſome ſpecial talent to trade with, ſome honey to bring to the common Hive, have he but an heart to it. Sua cuiq; dos eſt. Let every man according to his ſeveral ability, improve what he hath to the common benefit. Freely he hath received, freely let him give: ability he hath none but from God; who yet, for our encouragement, is pleaſed to call that ours, that is his own work in us.

Verſe 15. According to his ſeveral ability] Uſurers uſe not to lend to thoſe that cannot give pledge or ſecurity. Howbeit we have nothing of our own, but according to the meaſure of our gifts and faith, Epheſ. 4. the meaſure of the rule diſtributed to us, 2 *Cor.*10.13. the meaſure of grace concredited, *Rom.*12.

Verſe. 16. Went and traded] Grace grows by exerciſe, and decays by diſuſe: as that ſide of the teeth which is leaſt uſed in chewing, is apt to have more rheum to ſettle upon it. Though both arms grows, yet that which a man uſeth, is the ſtronger and bigger: ſo is it in both gifts and graces. In birds their wings, which have been uſed moſt, are ſweeteſt. Among trees, that which is planted and plaſhed againſt a wall, the more it is ſpread and layd forth in the branches, even to the leaſt twig, the more warmth and vigor it gets from the Sun-beams, and the more fruit it beareth. So here.

Verſe 17. He alſo gained other two] The Lord, as he hath a fatherly reſpect to our weakneſs, ſo as not to over-lay us, ſo he takes well aworth what we are able, and exacts no more then he gives. Deſpiſe not therefore the day of ſmall things, ſith God doth not, *Zech.*4.10. Neither caſt away your confidence, becauſe not good to ſuch a degree: but be faithful in weakneſs, though weak in Faith. A palſey-hand may receive an Alms: he that had but half an eye might look upon the braſen ſerpent, and be healed.

Honeſtum eſt ei qui in primis nequit, in ſecundis tertiiſve conſiſtere. Cic.

Verſe 18. Digged it in the earth] Through ſloth and pride: as many now-adays will do no more ſervce to God then may breed admiration amongſt men. Some Preachers (ſaith one) to win applauſe, ſet forth at firſt with ſuch a ſtriſe to ſeem eloquent and learned, that they quickly ſpend their ſtore: and then, rather then they would be obſerved to want, they will give over preaching, or elſe preach once a quarter, to ayr their learning, and keep it from moulding. Such another is the Miſer, like the Corniſh-Cough, which will ſteal a piece of money, and hiding it in ſome hole, will never help her ſelf or others with it afterward.

Biſield on Col. 4. fol. 200.

Verſe 19. And reckoneth with them] This is that we muſt alſo come to. Chriſt will one day ſay, Redde rationem, Give an account of thy Stewardſhip. Cicero could ſay, Let us ſo frame our courſe, as that we reckon upon our laſt reckoning, and make account we muſt all come to an account. And becauſe often-reckonings keep long-friends, Villicus rationem cum Domino crebrò putet, ſaith Cato, Let us be oft dealing with our ſelves, and ſetting things to rights, betwixt God and our own ſouls: ſo ſhall we have the leſs to do at laſt caſt. Sparing a little pains at firſt, doubleth it in the end: as he who will not caſt up his books, his books will caſt up him at length.

2 Cor. 5.10. Ita vivamus ut rationem nobis reddendam arbitremur. Cic. in Verr.

Verſe 20. He that had received five] He was firſt called to an account, and if four, or but one of his five talents had lain dead and unoccupied, he had been doomed for his ill-husbandry. See that ye receive not any Grace of God in vain: neither envie thoſe that have much: a proportion is expected, Non tantùm otioſi, ſed cunctatores plectentur. Thou idle, and therefore evil ſervant, verſ. 26.

Verſe 21. Thou haſt been faithful over a few things] So the Lord calleth the greateſt meaſure of grace here attainable, in compariſon of Heavens holineſs and happineſs, Ne donis vel bonis noſtris efferamur. What's a ſpark to the Sun, a drop to the Ocean?

Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord] A joy too big to enter into us, we muſt enter into it. A joy more meet for the Lord then the ſervant. Yet ſuch a Lord do we ſerve, as will honour his ſervants with ſuch a joy. Amongſt men it is otherwiſe, *Luk.*17.7. *Gen.*15. 2,3. 1 *King.*11.28,40.

Verſe 22. Lord, thou deliveredſt unto me two talents] It is with Chriſtians as with Planets. The Moon goes her courſe in a moneth, the Sun in a year, the reſt not but in many years, yet at length they finiſh. Let us be doing as we can, and our reward is ſure with God. Covet rather graces then gifts; as to pray more fervently, though leſs notionally or eloquently. Stammering Moſes muſt pray, rather then well-ſpoken Aaron. The Corinthians came behinde in no gift, 1 *Cor.*1.7. yet were babes and carnal, *Chap.*3.2,3.

Verſe 23. Well done good and faithful ſervant] Though this ſecond had the ſame good acceptance as the former, yet it follows not that they were both alike rewarded; but had a different degree, as of grace, ſo of glory.

Seneca. Verse 24. Lord, I knew that thou wert, &c.] Invalidum omne naturâ querulum. A sorry senseless excuse it is that this man makes for himself; and such as is both false and frivolous. Verse 29. But from him that hath not, shall be, &c.] See the Notes on Chap. 13. 12. Where the like is spoken, but with this difference. Verse 30. And cast ye the unprofitable servant] That had his soul for salt onely, Verse 33. The sheep on the right hand, &c.] A place of dignity and safety. Our Saviour seems here to allude to that of Moses his dividing the Tribes on Gerizzim and Ebal. Those six Tribes that came of the free-women are set to bless the people: as the other five, that came of the bond-women (whereunto is adjoyned Reuben for his Incest) are set to say Amen to the curses, Deut. 27. 11, 12, 13.

Come, Come, now into my boſom, which is now wide open to receive you, as the welcomeſt gueſts that ever accoaſted me, &c. And ſurely, if Jacobs and Joſephs meeting were ſo unſpeakably comfortable: If Mary and Elizabeth did ſo greet and congratulate, O what ſhall be the joy of that laſt day!

Inherit the Kingdom prepared] Here (as in the Turks Court) every man is aut Cæſar aut nullus, as he ſaid, either a King or a Caitiff; as the Sultans children, if they raign not, they die without mercy, either by the ſword or halter. Turk. Hiſt.

From the foundation of the World] Their heads were deſtinated long ſince to the diadem, as Tertullian hath it. King James was crowned in his Cradle. Sapores King of Perſia, before he was born (for his Father dying, the Nobles ſet the Crown on his Mothers belly) but the Saints were crowned in Gods eternal counſel, before the world was founded.

Verſe 35. For I was an hungred] For in this place, denoteth not the cauſe, but the evidence. It is all one as if I ſhould ſay, This man liveth, for behold he moveth. Where it will eaſily by yielded, That motion is not the cauſe of life, but the evidence and effect of it. So here. Merit is a meer fiction, ſith there can be no proportion betwixt the work and the wages.

Verſe 36. Naked, and ye clothed me] Darius, before he came to the Kingdom, received a garment for a gift of one Syloſon. And when he became King, he rewarded him with the command of his Countrey Samus. Who now will ſay that Syloſon merited ſuch a boon for ſo ſmall a curteſie? A Gardiner, offering a rape-root (being the beſt preſent the poor man had) to the Duke of Burgundy, was bountifully rewarded by the Duke: Which his Steward obſerving, thought to make uſe of his bounty, preſenting him with a very fair Horſe. The Duke (ut perſpicaci erat ingenio, ſaith mine Author) being a very wiſe man, perceived the project, received the Horſe, and gave him nothing for it. Right ſo will God deal with our merit-mongers, that by building Monaſteries, &c. think to purchaſe Heaven. Ælian.

I was ſick, and ye viſited me] Our King Henry the Third, the ſame day that he ſet Sail for France, himſelf did in Perſon viſit the poor and feeble, and dealt large Alms; not refuſing to kiſs the ſick and leprous. This was well done, if without opinion of merit; and with the like minde that Dr. Taylour Martyr, uſually viſited the Alms-houſes and Hoſpitals, there to ſee what the poor and ſick lacked, to procure them ſupplies, and to give them good counſel. Speed. 603. Act. and Mon. fol. 1388.

I was in Priſon, and ye came to me] Many Papiſts have hence concluded, that there are onely ſix works of mercy, Viſito, poto, cibo, &c. whereas indeed there are many more. But it is remarkable out of this Text, that the laſt definitive ſentence ſhall paſs upon men, according to their forwardneſs and freeneſs in ſhewing mercy to the family of Faith. And that the ſentence of abſolution ſhall contain a manifeſtation of all their good-works, and that with ſuch fervency of affection in Chriſt, that he will ſee and remember nothing in them, but the good they have done. See my Common-place of Alms.

Verſe 37, 38, 39. Then ſhall the righteous, &c.] Not that there ſhall be then any ſuch dialogiſm, (ſay Divines) at the laſt day: but Chriſt would hereby give us to underſtand, That the Saints riſing again, and returning to themſelves, can never ſufficiently ſet forth ſuch a bounty in Chriſt, whereby he taketh all they do to their poor neceſſitous brethren, in as good part, as done to his ſacred ſelf.

Verſe 40. One of the leaſt of theſe my brethren] What a comfort is this, that our own brother ſhall judge us, who is much more compaſſionate then any Joſeph? What an honour, that Chriſt cals us his brethren? What an obligation is ſuch a dignity to all poſſible duty? that we ſtain not our kindred. Antigonus being invited to a place, where a notable Harlot was to be preſent, asked counſel of Menedemus, what he ſhould do; He bad him onely remember, that he was a Kings ſon. Remember we that we are Chriſt the Kings brethren, and it may prove a ſingular preſervative. Vellem ſi non eſſem Imperator, ſaid Scipio, when an Harlot was offered unto him, I would, if I were not General. Take thou the pillage of the Field, ſaid Themiſtocles to his friend: for thou art not Themiſtocles. Ἀγαθὸς στρατηγὸς τῶν, σὺ δὲ οὐκ ἂν εἴ Θεμιστοκλῆς.

Ye have done it unto me] Christ, saith Salvian, is, Mendicorum maximus, as one that shareth in all the Saints necessities; and who would but relieve necessitous Christ? Look out some Mephibosheth, in whom we may seal up love to deceased Jonathan. My goodness extendeth not to thee, saith David, but to the Saints, Christs receivers. Mr. Fox never denyed beggar that asked in Jesus name. And being once asked, Whether he knew a certain poor man who had received succour from him in time of trouble, he answered, I remember him well: I tell you, I forget Lords and Ladies to remember such.

Verse 41. Then shall he say also, &c.] Then: Judgement as it begins here at Gods house, so shall it at the last day. The Elect shall be crowned, and then the rebrobates doomed and damned.

Depart from me ye cursed, &c.] A sentence that breathes out nothing but fire and brimstone, stings and horrors, wo and alas, torments without end, and past imagination. Mercy, Lord, saith the mercilesse miser. No, saith Christ, Depart, be packing.

Obj. Yet bless me before I go.

Sol. Depart ye cursed.

Obj. To some good place then.

Sol. To hell-fire, not material fire, but worse in many respects.

Obj. But let me then come out again.

Sol. It is everlasting fire, eternity of extremity. This is the hell of hell: this puts the damned to their εἰς αἰῶ, as much as if they should say, εἰς ἀεὶ, εἰς ἀεὶ, Not ever, Lord, torment us thus. But they have a will to sin ever; and being worthless, they cannot satisfie Gods justice in any time: therefore is their fire everlasting.

Obj. But let me have some good company in my misery.

Sol. The Devil and his Angels.

Obj. But who appointed me this hard condition?

Sol. It was prepared of old. The all-powerfull wisdom did, as it were, sit down and devise most tormenting temper for that most formidable fire. And here it is hard to say, whether be more woful, Depart from me ye cursed, or that which followeth, Into everlasting fire; Pain of loss, or pain of sense. Sure it is, that the tears of Hell are not sufficient to bewail the loss of Heaven; the worm of grief gnaws as painful, as the fire burns. If those good souls, Act. 20. wept because they should see Pauls face no more, how deplorable is the eternal deprivation of the beatifical vision?

Verse 42. For I was an hungred, &c.] Ill works are the just causes of damnation, as being perfectly evil. But good works can be no such causes of salvation, because due debts to God, and at the best, imperfect.

Prov. 17.16. Verse 43. I was a stranger, &c.] These fools of the people had a price in their hands to get Heaven (as Joseph by his bounty bought the Land of Ægypt) but they had no heart to it. Richard, son to Henry the Third of England, was elected King of Romans, being preferred therein before Alphonsus King of Spain his Competitor. The Spaniard pretended and complained to have been first elected. But, being it seems a great Mathematician, he was drawing lines, when he should have drawn out his purse, and so came prevented of his hopes. And is not this many an English mans fault and folly?

μυωπάζοντες. 2 Pet. 1.9. Verse 44. Lord, When saw we thee, &c.] They were sand-blinde, and could not see Christ in poor Christians, whom they should have looked upon, as the onely earthly Angels, the dearly beloved of Christs soul, Jer. 12.7. The house of his glory, Isa. 60. 7. An ornament of God, Ezek. 7.20. A royal diadem in the hand of Jehovah, Isa. 62.3.

Deut. 23.3,4. Verse 45. Inasmuch as ye did it not to one, &c.] Omissions then are damnable sins. Ammonites and Moabites were bastardized and banished the beauty of holiness, the Tabernacle of God, to the tenth Generation, because they met not Gods Israel with bread and water in the Wilderness. Not to do justice is injustice: not to shew mercy is cruelty. Where then will Oppressors appear, that grinde the faces of the poor, that quaff their tears, and make musick of their shreeks? Go to now ye rich men, weep and howl, &c. Jam. 5.1,2,3. If not relieving of the poor damns men, What shall robbing do, but double damn?

Verse 46. And these shall go away, &c.] The sentence began with the godly, the execution with the wicked: both that the godly may see their desire upon their enemies, Psal. 58.10. & 79.10. And also, that in the others misery, they may behold, by the difference their own felicity: and thereby be moved to lift up many an humble, joyful and thankful heart to God.

CHAP. XXVI.

Verse 1. And it came to pass when,&c.]

THis is our Evangelists transition from the Ministery of Christs Doctrine, to the Mysterie of his passion. He had hitherto taught salvation, and now is declared how he wrought it. He had done the office of a Doctor, now of a Redeemer: of a Prophet, now of a Priest.

Verse 2. Is the Feast of the Passeover] At which Feast, Christ our Passeover was sacrificed for us, 1 *Cor.*5.7. and we were purchased by his blood, as Israel was typically out of the world, by the blood of the Paschal Lamb; our hearts being sprinkled therewith by the hyssop bunch of Faith, from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water, *Heb.*10.22.

Verse 3. Then assembled together, &c.] Here was met a whole Council of Caitiffs to crucifie Christ. General Councils may err then in necessary and fundamental points: as the Council of Ariminum and Seleucia (held in two Cities, because no one was able to contain them for multitude, yet) decreed for Arrius against the Deity of Christ. The truth of God may be locked up within the hearts of such a company, as in competition of suffrages, cannot make a greater part in a general Council.

Verse 4. Take Jesus by subtilty, and kill him] Craft and cruelty go commonly coupled in the Churches Adversaries. Neither of them wants their mate, as the Scripture speaks of those birds of prey and desolation, *Isa.*34.16. These Priests and Elders were so bitterly bent against Christ, that nothing would satisfie them but his blood. All plants and other creatures have their growth and encrease to a period, and then, their declination and decay, except onely the Crocodile, who grows bigger and bigger, even till death. So have all passions and perturbations in mans minde their intentions and remissions, except onely malicious revenge. This dies not, many times, but with the man (if that) as nothing can quench the combustible slime in Samosaris, nor the burning flame of the Hill Chimera, but onely earth. Saint Peter tells us, That our Saviour being reviled, did not onely commit his cause to God, but Himself to God: as expecting the increase of his enemies opposition, till they had put him to death. Plin *l.*2.c. 104.& 106. 1 Pet.2.23.

Verse 5. Not on the Feast-day lest, &c.] But God would have it on that Feast-day, and no other, Act. 4. 27. And here these wicked ones fulfill the divine decree: but no thank to them: more then to Haman for Mordecai's advancement, whereunto Haman held the Stirrop only. Divinum consilium dum devitatur impletur, saith a Father. Aug.

Verse 6. Now when Jesus was in Bethany] This History of a thing acted before Christ came to Jerusalem, comes in here somewhat out of place: to shew the ground and occasion of Judas his treason, which was discontent at the loss of such a prize, and our Saviours sharping him up, for shewing his dislike.

In the house of Simon the Leper] A Leper he had been, but was now healed, and haply by Christ: whom therefore he entertaineth in way of thankfulness, as Matthew also did.

Verse 7. An Alabaster box of very precious, &c.] Pliny telleth us, That they were wont to keep the most costly oyntments in boxes of Alabaster. And Herodotus reckoneth μύρου ἀλάβαστρον, an Alabaster box of oyntment, among the precious things that Cambyses the Persian sent for a present to the King of Ethiopia. Mary thought nothing too costly for Christ. See the Notes on *Joh.*12.3. In Thalia.

Verse 8. They had indignation:] Not all, but one of them was displeased, viz. Judas, (as John explains Matthew): who yet was of such esteem and authority amongst the Disciples, that what he did, they are all said to do, and possibly they might, some of them, be drawn to do the same by his example, and upon so specious a pretence of charity to the poor.

To what purpose is this waste?] All seems to be lost to flesh and blood, that is laid out upon Christ, his servants and services. The people is idle, said Pharaoh, when they would needs go worship in the wilderness. And Seneca jeers the Jews for wasting a seventh part of their lives on a weekly Sabbath. Aug. de civ. Dei.

Verse 9. For this oyntment might have been sold.] True, and better it had been sold, had it been a superfluous and idle expence; such as is now-adays ordinary in fine-clothes, sumptuous Feasts, over stately Buildings, &c. Back, Belly and Building, these three, B. B. B. like the daughters of the horse-leech, suck out the blood of mens substance. But here it is a senseless sentence that Judas uttereth, out of discontent onely, that he missed of so fat a morsel. Avarice made Judas, as it did Sejanus, think all which he acquired not, to be lost, Quicquid non acquiritur, damnum est. Sen.

Verse 10. Why trouble ye the woman?] Christ will patronize his well-doers, and stick to them, though all forsake them, 2 Tim. 4.16,17. He many times pleads for them in the consciences of their greatest enemies, who spend more thoughts about such, then the world is aware of: and are afraid of the name of God, whereby they are called, Deut. 28.9,10.

Verse 11. The poor ye have always with you] To try and to exercise your liberality, yea your justice, as the Syriack calleth it, Prov. 3.27. With-hold not thy goods from these owners thereof. Mat. 6.1.

But me ye have not always] Christ dwelt in the flesh, as in a tent or booth, Joh. 1.14. He sojourned here for awhile onely; his abode with us was but temporary, as the Greek word there importeth. ἐσκήνωσεν, ex quo intelligitur Christi moram apud nos temporariam fuisse Beza.

Verse 12. She did it for my burial] This Mary perhaps understood not. So things that we think come to pass by hap-hazard, are preordained, and sweetly ordered by Almighty God in his secret counsel, and by his fatherly providence, to excellent ends many times, such as we never thought on.

Verse 13. Be told for a memorial of her] Though now she be sharply censured by the traytor for a wast-good. Do Well, and hear ill, is written upon Heaven gates, said that Martyr. But God will both right his wronged and honour his disparaged. Maries name now smels as sweet in all Gods house, as ever her oyntment did; when Judas his name rots, and shall do to all posterity. Yea, in the next world, Mary and such, we shall look upon, likely, with thoughts of extraordinary love and sweetness thorowout all eternity: as Judas and such, with execrable and everlasting detestation.

Verse 14. Then one of the twelve, &c.] sc. When he heard of the chief Priests and Elders meeting about such a matter, Satan sets him on being now male-content, to make one amongst them. That spirit of darkness loves to dwell in a soul that is clouded by passion: as in Saul when he was envious at David, and here in Judas, when defeated of his design, and fretted at his Masters reprehension.

Verse 15. What will ye give me] Take heed and beware of covetousness, saith our Saviour: for it is the root of all evil, saith Paul; a breach of the whole decalogue, as some Divines have demonstrated, and universal experience hath confirmed. These fordida poscinummia, as one calleth them, are still found everywhere: such as will sell their souls to the Devil with Ahab, not for seven years enjoyment of the Popedome, as some have done, but for a few paltry shillings, as Judas here did, or some other pidling profit. This our Saviour calleth the Mammon of Iniquity, which is the next odious name to the Devil himself. Luk. 12.15. 1 Tim. 6.10. See Mr. Dikes Caveat for the Covetous. Δεινὸς γὰρ παντὸλμῳ τὸ φιλοχρημοσύνης ἔρως. Isid. Pelus. l. 3. ep. 24.

For thirty pieces of silver] A goodly price, as the Prophet in scorn and detestation calleth it. It was a known set price for the basest slave, Exod. 21.31. Joel 3.3,6. For so small a sum sold this Traytor, so sweet a Master, as had not onely admitted him into his company, but committed the bag to him, and let him want for nothing. Quid non mortalia pectora cogis, Auri sacra fames? Look well to it. For as there were many Marii in one Cæsar, so are there many Judasses in the best. Let Patrons especially look to it: for many of them are worse then Judas; He sold the head, they the members: he the sheep, they the shepheard: he but the body, they the souls, as that scarlet strumpet, Rev. 18.13. Luke 16.9. Virgil.

Verse 16. And from that time he sought] So it was no sudden, but a prepensed wickedness, done in cold blood, and upon mature deliberation. Gods people when they sin, they are pre-occupated, and taken before they are aware, Gal. 6.1. There is no way of wickedness in them, ordinarily. It is of incogitancy: put them in minde, and they mend all. Or, it is of passion; and passions last not long. They deny not Christ that bought them: they can do nothing against the truth, they will not forgo God upon any terms, they never sin with deliberation about this chief end: if they Psal. 139. ult.

err, it is onely in the way, as thinking that they may fulfill such a lust, and keep God too.

Verse 17. Now the first day] That is, on the fourteenth day of the first Moneth, according to the Law. The Priests for politick respects, had adjourned this Feast to the sixteenth day, being the Sabbath, against the letter of the Law; that the celebrity might be the greater, and the people were ruled by them. Our Saviour followeth not a multitude, nor observeth mans tradition herein, but Gods prescription: No more must we. This S. Luke plainly intimateth in his ἔδει, Luk. 22.7. Then came the day of unleavened bread when the Passeover ought to be killed; though the custome were otherwise.

Verse 18. Go into the City to such a man] Meaning some man of his special acquaintance, for so the Greek imports, though he named him not. So Palmoni hammedabber, such an one the speaker, Dan. 8.13. ὁ δεῖνα.

Verse 19. Did as Jesus had appointed them] With a kinde of blinde obedience: such as we must yield to God, notwithstanding all unlikelyhoods or scruples whatsoever, cast in by carnal reason. This the Scripture cals the obedience of Faith, and commends it to us, in the examples of Abraham, Moses, others, Heb. 11.

Verse 20. He sat down with the twelve] With Judas among the rest: though Hilary hold otherwise, for what reason I know not. Christ sat at the Sacrament, when yet the gesture imported in the Law was standing: and this sitting at the Passeover was nowhere commanded, yet by the godly Jews, was generally used. Let this heap of Wheat (the Lords Supper, as some interpret it) be set about with Lillies, that is with Christians, white, and of holy life: that's the main matter to be looked to. Cant. 7.2.

Verse 21. And as they did eat, he said] With a great deal of detestation of so horrid a fact; to see the frontless traytor bear himself so bold amongst them, having now hatcht so prodigious a villany.

One of you shall betray me] But shall any therefore condemn the whole twelve, as if there were never a better? This were to offend against the generation of the righteous, Psal. 73.15. This were to match in immanity that cruel Prince of Valachia, whose custome was, together with the offendor, to execute the whole family, yea sometimes the whole kindred. And yet this justice is done Gods people many times by the Church Malignant. Turk. Hist. fol. 363.

Verse 22. And they were exceeding sorrowful] Not joyful (as some would have been,) to finde out other mens faults, and to exagitate them. Not only those that make, but that love lies, yea or unseasonable truths in this kinde, are shut out of Heaven among dogs and devils. Rev. 22.15.

Lord is it I?] He puts them all to a search, afore the Sacrament. Let a man therefore examine himself, &c. who knows the errors of his life? saith David. In our hearts are volumns of corruptions, in our lives infinite Errata's. Socrates would say, when he saw one drunk, or otherwise disordered, Num ego talis? So would Mr. Bradford, when he looked into the leud lives of any others. 1 Cor. 11.28. Psal. 19.12.

Verse 23. He that dippeth his hand, &c.] My fellow-commoner, my familiar friend. This greatly aggravateth the indignity of the matter. He was ex societate Jesu that betrayed him. So do the pretended Jesuites, Jebusites, at this day. Julius Cæsar was slain in the Senate-house by more of his friends then of his enemies, quorum non expleverat spes inexplebiles, saith Seneca. But the wound that went neerest his heart, was that he received from his son Brutus. Καὶ σὺ τέκνον βρῦτε; this pierced him worse then any Ponyard. Queen Elizabeths grief and complaint was, that in trust she had found Treason. Psal. 41.10. Sen. l. 3. de ira. Dio.

Verse 24. The son of man goeth] That is, dyeth, suffereth. Death was to him but an ἔξοδος as it is called Luk. 9.31. that is, an out-going, or a departure. It was no more betwixt God and Moses, but Go up and die, as it was said to another Prophet, Up and eat. He that hath conversed with God here, cannot fear to go to him; cannot hold death either uncouth, or unwelcome.

But wo unto that man by whom, &c.] He bewails not himself, but Judas. So should we do those by whom we are traduced, and injured. They poor wretches, have the worst of it. Let us pity them, and pray for them, as the holy Martyrs dealt by their persecutors. Ah! I lament the infidelity of England, said Mr. Philpot. Ah! great be the plagues Act. and Mon fol. 1667.

plagues that hang over England, yea though the Gospel should be restored again. Happy shall that person be whom the Lord shall take out of the World not to see them.

Verse 25. Master is it I?] Desperate impudency! debauched hypocrisie! Had he the face to ask such a question? He could not but know that Christ knew all: yet hoped he perhaps, that of his wonted gentleness, he would conceal him still, as he had done for certain dayes before. But incorrigible and incurable persons are no longer to be born with. He heareth therefore, Thou hast said it: that is, Thou art the man I mean. Thus Christ puls off his vizour, washeth off his varnish, and maketh him to appear in his own colours, a covetous Caitiff, an impudent dog, a breathing Devil, as Chrysostom hath it, a mischievous Monkey; which creature hath the gravest countenance of any other; but is unceasantly doing mischief.

Talis res est avaritia, amentes, stolidos, impudentes, canes pro hominibus, & dæmones ex canibus facit. Chrys.

Verse 26. Jesus took bread] From bread and wine used by the Jews at the eating of the Paschal Lamb, without all command of Moses, but resting upon the common reason given by the Creator, Christ autorizeth a seal of his very flesh and blood. And as the housholder, at the end of that solemn Supper, blessed God, first, taking bread, and again, taking wine: so that we should not turn his seal into superstition, he followeth that plainness: ne miseri mortales, in istorum mysteriorum usu, in rebus terrestribus hæreant & obstupescant, as Beza gives the reason. For which cause also, saith he, even in the old Lyturgie they used to cry out to the people at the Lords Table, Sursum corda, Lift up your hearts: that is, Look not so much to the outward signs, in the Sacraments, but use them as ladders to mount you up to Christ in Heaven.

Ut in cœlum usq; ad Christum penetrarent. Ibid.

This is my body] This is referred to Bread by an anomaly of the gender (the like whereof we finde, Ephes. 5. 6.) and so the Apostle interpreteth it, 1 Cor. 10. 16. & 11. 26. The sense then is, This bread is my true essential body, which is given for you: that is, by an ordinary metonymie. This bread is the sign of my body, as circumcision is called the Covenant, that is the sign of the Covenant, and Seal of the righteousness of Faith, Rom. 4. 11. And as Homer cals the Sacrifices, Covenants; because thereby the Covenants were confirmed: Virgil calleth it fallere dextras, to deceive the right hands, for to break the oath that was taken, by the taking of right hands, &c. Transubstantiation is a meer fiction: and the learnedest Papists are not yet agreed whether the substance of the bread in this Sacrament be turned into the substance of Christs body productivè, as one thing is made of another; or whether the bread goes away, and Christs body comes into the room of it adductivè, as one thing succeeds into the place of another, the first being voyded. Suarez is for the first, Bellarmine for the latter sense. And yet because Luther and Calvin agree not upon the meaning of these words, This is my body, the Jesuites cry out, Spiritus sanctus à seipso non discordat, Hæ interpretationes discordant, Ergo: for Luther interpreteth the words Synecdochically, Calvin Metonymically, after Tertullian and Augustine; This is my body, for this is a sign or figure of my body, a Seal also to every faithful Receiver, that Christ is his, with all his benefits.

Verse 27. And he took the cup] Anciently of Glass, afterwards of Wood, and lastly of Silver or Gold. Whence that saying of a Father, Once there were wooden Cups, golden Priests: now there are golden Cups, but wooden Priests.

Drink ye all of it] This is expres against that Antichristian sacriledge of robbing the people of the Cup. Eckius saith the people ought to content themselves with the bread onely, because, Equi donati non sunt inspiciendi dentes, A gift-horse is not to be looked in the mouth. He thought belike, that Lay-men could not claim any right to the bread neither. Bellarmine, a little wiser, grants they have right to the bread, but adds, that in eating the bread transubstantiated by the Priest into the body of Christ, they drink his blood also. But Lombard (his master) denies this: saying, that the bread is not turned, but into Christs flesh; nor the wine, but into his blood. And thus these Babel-builders are confounded in their language, and hard it is to know what the Church of Rome holdeth. The Council of Constance speaketh out, and saith, That albeit Christ instituted, and accordingly administred this Sacrament in both kinds, tamen hoc non-obstante, All this notwithstanding, the authority of the holy Canons, and the approved custom of the Church hath and doth deny the Cup to the Laity. And Nicolas Shetterden Martyr, in his answer compelled the Commissarie to grant, that Christs Testament was broken, and his Institution changed from that he left it. But he said, they had power so to do. Christs redemption is both precious and plenteous. He makes his people a full Feast:

Bread and wine comprehend entire food: for humidum & ſiccum, moyſt and dry are all that is required unto food, Iſa. 25. 6. Therefore as he gave them in the Wilderneſs the bread of Angels, ſo he ſet the Rock abroach for them, and ſo fed them with Sacraments. They did all eat the ſame ſpiritual bread, and they did all drink the ſame ſpiritual drink: that the Ancient Church might give no warrant of a dry Communion. The Ruſſians, a kinde of mongril-Chriſtians, communicate in both kinds; but mingling both together in a chalice, they diſtribute it both together in a ſpoon. 1 Cor. 10. 3, 4. Breerwoods. Enquiries.

Verſe 28. For this is my blood] This cup is my blood, viz. in a Sacramental ſenſe; as before the bread is ſaid to be Chriſts body: If the words of Chriſt when he ſaid, This is my body, did change the ſubſtance, then belike, when Chriſt ſaid, This Cup is my blood, the ſubſtance of the Cup was likewiſe changed into his blood, ſaid Shetterden the Martyr to Arch-deacon Harpfield. And you can no more enforce of neceſſity (ſaid another Martyr) from the words of Chriſt the changing of the bread and wine into his body and blood, then the wives fleſh to be the natural and real fleſh of her husband, becauſe it is written, They are not two but one fleſh. Beſides, whereas it is forbidden that any ſhould eat or drink blood, The Apoſtles notwithſtanding took and drank of the Cup, &c. And when the Sarcament was adminiſtred, none of them all crouched down, and took it for his God. Quandoquidem Chriſtiani manducant Deum quem adorant, ſaid, Averroes the Arabian, ſit anima mea cum Philoſophis. Sith Chriſtians eat their God, I'll have none. Act. and Mon. fol. 1615. Ibid.

Which is ſhed] That is, ſhall ſhortly be ſhed. But all is deſivered and ſet down in the preſent Tenſe, here and elſewhere in this buſineſs: Becauſe to faith (which at this Sacrament we ſhould chiefly actuate and exerciſe) all things are made preſent, whether they be things to come (as to theſe Diſciples) or things paſt, as now to us. A communicant muſt call up his faith, and beſpeak it as Deborah did her ſelf, Judg. 5. 12. Awake, awake Deborah, utter a ſong. Aſcend up to Heaven in the act of receiving, and fetch down Chriſt: lean by faith upon his bleſſed boſome, cleave to his Croſs, ſuck honey out of this rock, and oyl out of the flinty Rock, Deut. 32. 13. & intra ipſa redemptoris vulnera figite linguam, as Cyprian expreſſeth it. Let faith have her perfect work: ſith ſhe is both the hand, mouth, and ſtomack of the ſoul. Cyp. de cœna Dom.

For remiſſion of ſins] This includes all the benefits of the New Covenant, all the purchaſe of Chriſts paſſion, ſweetly ſealed up to every faithful receiver. Chriſt inſtituted *h*is holy Supper, tanquam κ. φαρμακον αλεξιφαρμακον a ſoveraign preſervative or purgative, ſaith Ignatius. And by this Sacrament we are fenced and ſtrengthned againſt the Devil and all his aſſaults, ſaith Chryſoſtom, ſo that he ſhunneth us, as if we were ſo many lions ſpetting fire at him. Ita ut nos fugiat tanquam ſi leones ignem exſpuentes eſſemus. Chryſoſt.

Verſe 29. I will not drink henceforth] So he takes his farewell of his Diſciples: alluding, likely, to that cuſtom among them of drinking no more, till the next day after they had drunk, each his part, of the parting-cup. Poculum ἀπολυτικὸν.

Drink it new with you in my Fathers kingdom] Underſtand it either of the kingdom of grace (Peter ſaith, that he and others did eat and drink with Chriſt after he roſe from the dead, Act. 10. 41. we alſo feaſt with him dayly by faith, at his table eſpecially, where he is both feaſt-maker and feaſt-maſter,) Or of his Kingdom of glory, frequently and fitly ſet forth by the ſimilitude of a ſumptuous Supper, Matth. 8. Luk. 14. &c. ſuch as to which all other feaſts are but hunger.

Verſe 30. And when they had ſung an hymn] The Jews at the Paſſeover ſang the great Hallelujah, that is, the hundred and thirteenh Pſalm, with the five following Pſalms. This they began to ſing, after that dimiſſory cup aforementioned. At all times we ſhould ſing Hallelujah's, with grace in our hearts to the Lord: but at the Sacrament the great Hallelujah, the Hoſannah Rabbah. We ſhould credit the Feaſt by our ſpirituall jollity, ſhouting as a Gyant after his wine, ſinging and making melody to the Lord in our hearts. Chryſoſtom maketh mention of an hymn of thankſgiving, wont to be uſed by the Monks of his time, after they had ſupped: and he calleth them Angels for their holy and heavenly life and converſation. We ſhould come from the Lords Table, as Moſes did from the Mount, with our faces ſhining, as the good women did from the Sepulcher, with fear and great joy, as the people went to their Tents from Solomons Feaſt, joyful and glad of heart, 1 King. 8. 66. If thoſe in the Wilderneſs were ſo cheared & cheriſhed by their Idolatrous feaſt afore the golden Calf, that they did ὑμνος ἐυχαριστ. Hom. 55. in Matth.

1 Cor. 10. 7. eat and drink, and rise up to play, how much more should we by this blessed banquet? To whet our stomacks, let faith feed upon some promise before the Sacrament. A moderate break-fast gets a man the better stomack to his dinner, &c.

Verse 31. All ye shall be offended because of me] Why? what had that righteous one done? Nothing but that his Cross lay in their way, whereat they stumbled shamefully, and left him, to wonder that he was left alone, Isa. 63. 5. Adversity is friendless, saith one Heathen: Et cum fortuna stat, cadit fides, saith another. Job found his friends like the brooks of Tema, which in a moysture swell, in a drought fail. Tempora si fuerint nubila, solus eris.

Ἄφιλον τὸ δυστυχὲς. Ovid.

For it is written, I will smite] This our Saviour purposely subjoyneth, for their support under the sense of their base deserting him. A foul sin it was, but yet such as was long since set down of them; not without a sweet promise of their recollection, I will turn my hand upon the little ones: Or, I will bring back may hand to the little ones, as Tremellius readeth it.

Zech. 13. 7. At reducam manum meam ad parvulos. Term.

Verse 32. But after I am risen again, &c.] Infirmities bewailed, break no square. Our sins hurt us not, if they please us not. The Church stands as right with Christ, when penitent, as whiles innocent, Cant. 7. 12. with chap. 4. 1, 2. &c. Her hair, teeth, temples, all as fair and well featured as ever.

Peccata nobis non nocent, si non placent. Aug.

Verse 33. Though all men should be offended] Peter spake as he meant, but his heart deceived him, as did likewise Davids, Psal. 39. 1, 2, 3. and Orphah's, Ruth. 1. 10. and those Israelites in the Wilderness, that were turned aside like deceitful bows, Psal. 78. 57. They levelled both eyes and arrows (that is both purposes and promises) to the mark of amendment, and thought verily to hit: but their deceitful hearts, as naughty bows, carryed their arrows a clean contrary way. So did Peters here, so will the best of ours, if we watch them not.

Verse 34. Before the cock crow, &c.] Christ mentioneth the cock, quia tam strenuum pugnatorem decebat tale præconium, saith one. The presumption of proud flesh never but miscaries: when humble self-suspition holds out, and hath favour. The story of Pendleton and Saunders is better known, then that it needs here to be related.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1363.

Verse 35. Though I should die with thee] Quot verba tot absurda, as one saith of Peters proposition of three Tabernacles, &c. Sure it is he knew as little what he said here, as there: How much more considerately those Martyrs, who both said it, and did it? The Heavens shall as soon fall, as I will forsake my faith, said William Flower. And, if every hair of my head were a man, I would suffer death in the opinion and faith, that I am now in, said John Ardely.

Act. and Mon. fol. 1430. Ibid. 1438.

Likewise also said all the Disciples] Misled, as Barnabas afterward was (Gal. 2.) by Peters example. The leaders of this people cause them to err, Isa. 9. 16. Our Saviour (to teach us what to do in like case) striveth not with them for the last word: but lets them enjoy their own over-good conceits of themselves, till time should confute them.

Verse 36. Unto a place, called Gethseman] By Mount Olivet stood this Garden: and here he began his passion, as well to expiate that first sin committed in a Garden, as to sanctifie unto us our repasts and recreations. Here, after our Saviour had prayed himself into an agony (to teach us to strive also in prayer as for life, and to struggle even to agony as the word signifieth, Colos. 4. 12.) he was taken quasi ex conducto, and led into the City thorow the sheep-gate (so called of the multitude of sheep driven in by it to be offered in the Temple,) to be sacrificed, as a Lamb undefiled and without spot.

Sit ye here while I go and pray yonder] It may be lawful therefore in some cases to pray secretly, in the presence or with the privity of others, so there be some good use of them.

Verse 37. And he took with him Peter, &c.] He took the same that had seen his glory in the Mount, to see his Agony in the Garden: that they might the better stick to him. Let no man envy others their better parts or places; sith they have them on no other condition, but to be put upon greater temptations, hotter services. If we could wish another mans honour, when we feel the weight of his cares, as David once did of Sauls armour, we should be glad to be in our own coat.

And very heavy] To faint, or fall away in his soul, to be out of the world, as we say, say, He sitteth alone, and keepeth silence, because he hath born it upon him, Lam. 3.28. Ἀδημονεῖν —hominum vestigia vitat.

Verse 38. My soul is exceeding sorrowfull] He had a true humane soul then; neither was his Deity to him for a soul, as some Hereticks fancied: for then our bodies only had been redeemed by him, and not our souls (τὸ γὰρ ἀπροσλημπτον ἀθεράπευτον, as that Father hath it,) if he nad not in soul also suffered, and so, descended into hell. The sufferings of his body were but the body of his sufferings: the soul of his sufferings were the sufferings of his soul, which was now undequaq; tristis beset with sorrows, and heavie as heart could hold. The sorrows of death compassed him, the cords of hell surrounded him, Psal. 18.4,5. the pain whereof he certainly suffered, non specie & loco sed ἀνάλογον τὸ ἀνεκλάλητον, something answerable to Hell, and altogether unspeakable. Hence the Greek Letany. By thine unknown sufferings, good Lord deliver us. Faninus an Italian Martyr, being asked by one why he was so merry at his death, sith Christ himself was so sorrowful? Christ, said he, sustained in his soul all the sorrows and conflicts with Hell and Death due to us: by whose sufferings we are delivered from sorrow, and fear of them all. Πλείωνα Θ. Δι' ἀγνώστων σου παθημάτων. Act. and Mon. fol. 853.

Tarry ye here and watch with me] Yet not for my sake so much, as for your own; that ye enter not into temptation. Luk. 22.40.

Verse 39. And he went a little further] Amat secessum ardens oratio. S. Luke saith he was violently withdrawn from them, about a stones cast, and there he kneeled down and prayed: for further he could not go, thorough earnest desire of praying to his heavenly Father. Luk. 22.41. ἀπεσπάσθη. Tantus desiderium precandi cum incessit, ut illum quodammodò truderet. Cartw.

And fell on his face] He putteth his mouth in the dust, if so be there may be hope, Lam. 3.29. This and the like humble gestures in Gods service do at once testifie, and excite inward devotion.

Let this Cup pass] In the time of execution, they gave the malefactor a Cup of Wine mingled with Myrrhe, Mark 15.23. to stupifie his senses, and so to mitigate his pains. Hence the word Calix or Cup is put here and elsewhere for death it self: which being terrible to nature, is therefore here with strong crying and tears deprecated by our Saviour. This was natural in him, and not sinful in us, so it do not degenerate into that which is carnal fear of death. Heb 5.7.

Neverthelesse not as I will, but, &c.] Here Christ doth not correct his former request (for then there should have been some kinde of fault in it) but explicateth onely on what condition he desired deliverance; and becometh obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross, Philip. 2.8. crying out, Not as I will, but as thou wilt: which shews that he had a distinct humane will, from the will of his Father, and so was very man, as well as God. And here Aristotle, that great Philosopher, is clearly confuted. For he denies that a magnanimous man can be exceeding sorrowful for any thing that befals him. Our Saviour (his Churches stoutest Champion,) was exceeding sorrowful even to the death; and yet of so great a spirit, that he yields up himself wholly to God. Magnus est animus, qui se Deo tradidit; pusillus & degener, qui obluctatur, saith Seneca. He is a brave man that trusts God with all. Μεγαλόψυχος ἐκ ὃν πείθεται. Arist Eth. Sen. epist. 107.

Verse 40. And he cometh unto the Disciples,] They were his care in the midst of his Agony: so was Peter; upon whom he found time to look back, when he stood to answer for his life. So was the penitent Thief; whose prayer Christ answered, even when he hung upon the Tree, and was paying dear for his redemption. Our High-Priest bears the names of all his people on his shoulders, and on his breast, so that he cannot be unmindful of them. Behold he hath graven them upon the palms of his hands, their wals are continually before him, Isa. 49.16. he loveth to look upon the houses where they dwell.

And findeth them asleep] When he should have found them at prayer for him. Prayer is the creature of the holy Ghost: and unless he hold up mens eyes therewhile, even Peter, James, and John will fall asleep in prayer, and put up yawning petitions to God.

And saith unto Peter] Who had promised so much forwardness, and stood in so great danger above the rest, Luk. 22.31. For Satan earnestly desired to deal with him, he challenged Peter forth, as Goliah called for one to combate with. And was it for them to sleep then? or, with Agrippa's dormouse, not to awake, till boyled in lead? ἐξῃτήσατο.

What? could you not watch with me, &c.] How then will ye do to die with me; as erst ye promised me? If the footmen have wearied you, how will ye contend with with horses? Jer.12.5. If you cannot endure words, how will you endure wounds? If ye cannot strive against sin, how will you resist unto blood? *Heb.*12.4. If ye cannot burn your finger with Bilney, your right-hand with Cranmer, how will you bear the burning of your whole body? Alice Coberly being pitiously burnt in the hand by the Keepers Wife, with a hot key which she cunningly sent her to fetch, revoked.

*Act. and Mon. fol.*1719.

Verse 41. Watch and pray] Yea watch, whiles ye are praying, against corruption within, temptations without. Satan will be interrupting as the Pythoniss did Paul praying, *Act.*16.16. as the fowls did Abraham sacrificing, *Gen.*15.11. as the enemies did Nehemiah with his Jews, building, who therefore praid and watcht, watcht and praid. Amongst all actions, Satan is ever busiest in the best; and most in the best part of the best, as in the end of prayer, when the heart should close up it self with most comfort. Watch therefore unto prayer. Set all aside for it, and wait on it, as the word imports, *Coloss.*4.2. while prayer stands still, the trade of godliness stands still: Let this therefore be done, whatever is left undone. Take heed the Devil take you not out of your trenches, as he did David, likely, 2 Sam. 11.2. Out of your strong-hold, as Joshua did the men of Ai. Little children, saith Saint John, abide in God, keep home, keep close to your Father, if you mean to be safe, if that evil one shall not touch you, 1 *Joh.*5.18. nor thrust his deadly sting into you, &c.

1 Joh.2.28.

The spirit indeed is willing] q.d. Though the spirit purpose otherwise, yet the flesh will falter, and ye will be foiled else. Or, our Saviour speaks this by way of excuse of their infirmity, q.d. I see you are willing, so far as you are spiritual and regenerate: but the flesh is treacherous and tyrannical. It rebels ever and anon, and would gladly raign. It hangs off, when called to suffer, and makes shy of the business. So Peter was carryed whether he would not, Joh. 21. 18. So Hilarion chides out his soul (which plaid loth to depart) with Egredere ô anima, &c. So Mr. Sanders, Martyr, in a letter to his wife, a little afore his death, Fain would this flesh, said he, make strange of that which the spirit doth embrace. O Lord, how loth is this loytering sluggard, to pass forth in Gods path, &c? So Mr. Bradford going to his death. Now I am climbing up the hill, said he, It will cause me to puff and blow, before I come to the cliff. The hill is steep and high: my breath is short, and my strength is feeble. Pray therefore to the Lord for me; pray for me, pray for me, for Gods sake, pray for me. See more in the Notes on *Joh.*21.18.

*Act. and Mon. fol.*1359.

*Ibid.*1497.

Verse 42. The second time, and prayed] Prayer is that arrow of deliverance that would be multiplyed. God holds off on purpose, that he may hear oft of us, that we may ply the Throne of Grace, and give him no rest. The Church, *Psal.*80. commenceth thrice the same sute, but riseth every time in her earnestness, vers. 3,7,19. If thy petition be not lawful, never prefer it: as if it be, never give it over. God suspends thee, to eneager thee.

2 King.13.19.

If this cup may not pass, except I drink] It passeth then, even while we are drinking of it. Τὸ πικρὸν μικρὸν, Hold out faith and patience. It is but a storm, and will soon be over. It is but a death, and that's but the day-break of eternal brightness. It is but winking (as that Martyr said) and thou shalt be in Heaven presently.

Verse 43. He came and found them asleep again] After so sweet an admonition, so soveraign a reproof; Who knows how oft an infirmity may recur, even after repentance? See it in Sampson, in Jonah, in these Apostles, for their contention, Who should be greatest, &c.

Luk.26.45.

For their eyes were heavie] For sorrow (saith S. Luke) which, exhausting the spirits, renders a man more sluggish: and hindering concoction, sends up vapours to the brain, and so causeth sleep. This was somewhat, but not sufficient to excuse them. Christ took them with him into the Garden for their society and prayers. But they not onely not help him, but wound him by their dulness unto duty: and in stead of wiping off his bloody sweat, they draw more cut of him. Judas had somewhat else to do now then to sleep, when Peter was fast, and could not hold up. Zachary the Prophet lay under such a like drowsie distemper, *chap.*4.1. for though awaked and set to work, he was even ready to fall asleep at it.

Verse 44. And he left them, and went away again] A most memorable and imitable pattern of patience toward those that condole not, or that keep not touch with us; we must neither startle nor storm, but pass it by as a frailty. And

And prayed the third time] A number of perfection. And, Si ter pulsanti, &c. Paul prayed thrice, and gave over, 2 Cor. 12. becauſe he ſaw it was Gods will it ſhould be otherwiſe: pardoning grace he had, but not prevailing, verſ. 9. So our Saviour here, had an Angel ſent from Heaven to ſtrengthen him, that he might the better drink that Cup, which he had ſo heartily deprecated. Hence the Apoſtle doubts not to ſay, That he was heard in that he feared: he was, and he was not; there's no praying againſt that which Gods providence hath diſpoſed of by an infallible order. And when we ſee how God will have it, we muſt ſit down and be ſatisfied: That which he will have done, we may be ſure is beſt to be done. Luk. 22. 43. Heb. 5. 7.

Saying the ſame words] And they were no whit the worſe for being the ſame. Let this comfort thoſe that complain they cannot vary in prayer: though that be a deſirable ability. The Corinthians were enriched by God in all utterance and knowledge, 1 Cor. 1. 5. But the buſineſs of prayer is more diſpatcht by inward groanings, then outward garniſhes.

Verſe 45. Sleep on now, and take your reſt] q. d. Do ſo, if you can at leaſt. But now the hour is come, wherein you ſhall have ſmall either leaſure or lift to ſleep, though never ſo drouſie ſpirited: for, The Son of man is betrayed, &c. Luther readeth the words indicatively, and by way of queſtion, thus, Ah! Do ye now ſleep and take your reſt? Will ye, with Solomons drunkard ſleep upon a maſt-pole? Take a nap upon a Weather-cock? Thus this heavenly Eagle, though he love his young ones dearly, yet he pricketh and beateth them out of the neſt. The beſt (as Bees) are killed with the honey of flattery, but quickned with the vineger of reproof. Sarcaſmus quo egebat diſcipulorum torpor. Beza.

Verſe 46. Riſe, Let us be going] To meet that death, which till he had prayed, he greatly feared. So it was with Eſter, chap. 4. 16. and with David, Pſal. 116. 3, 4. See the power of faithful prayer to diſarm death, and to alter the countenance of greateſt danger. Quoties me oratio, quem pænè deſperantem ſuſceperat, reddidit exſultantem, &c? How oft hath prayer recruted me? Bern. Serm. 33. in Cant.

Behold, He is at hand] Behold, for the miracle of the matter, yet now no miracle. Tuta frequenſq; via eſt per amici fallere nomen: Tuta frequenſq; licet ſit via crimen habet.

Verſe 47. Lo, Judas one of the twelve] Lo, for the reaſon next afore-mentioned. The truth hath no ſuch peſtilent perſecutors as Apoſtates. Corruptio optimi peſſima, ſweeteſt wine maketh ſowreſt vineger.

With ſwords and ſtaves] What need all this ado? But that the hornet haunted them, an ill conſcience abuſed them. When he put forth but one beam of his Deity, theſe armed men fell all to the ground: nor could they riſe again, till he had done indenting with them. Exod. 23. 18. Joh. 18. 6.

Verſe 48. Whomſoever I ſhall kiſs] Ah lewd loſel! Betrayeſt thou the Son of man with a kiſs? Giveſt thou thy Lord ſuch rank poyſon in ſuch a golden cup? Conſigneſt thou thy treachery with ſo ſweet a ſymbol of peace and love? But this is ſtill uſual with thoſe of his Tribe. Caveatur oſculum Iſcarioticum. Jeſuites at this day kiſs and kill familiarly: officioſè occidunt, as one ſaith of falſe Phyſitians. When thoſe Rhemiſh Incendiaries, Giffard, Hodgeſon, and others, had ſet Savage awork to kill Queen Elizabeth, they firſt ſet forth a book to perſwade the Engliſh Catholicks to attempt nothing againſt her. So when they had ſent Squire out of Spain to poyſon the Queen, they taught him to anoynt the pummel of her Saddle with poyſon covertly, and then to pray with a loud voyce, God ſave the Queen. Lopez, another of their Agents, affirmed at Tyburn, That he had loved the Queen as he had loved Jeſus Chriſt: Which, from a Jew, was heard not without laughter. So Parſons, when he had hatched that nameleſs villany the Powder-plot, ſet forth his Book of reſolution: as if he had been wholly made up of devotion, E ſocietate Jeſu fuit qui Jeſum tradidit. καταφιλεῖν ἐκ δόλου φιλεῖν. Philo Sacramento pacis tradidit ſacrificium pacis. Hieron. Camd. Elizab. Ibid. an. 1598. Ibid. fol. 431.

Verſe 49. Hail Maſter, and kiſſed him] But love is not always in a kiſs, ſaith Philo the Jew; nor in crying Rabbi, Rabbi, as the Traytor here did, Mark 14. 45. out of a ſeeming pity of his Maſters miſery. There are that think that he would have carryed this his treachery ſo cunningly, as if he had had no hand in it: and therefore kiſſed him as a friend, and ſo would ſtill have been taken. Aretius.

swords? If as a so, What means this kiss? Christ knew well enough wherefore he came: but thinks good to sting his conscience by this cutting question.

Layed hands on Jesus and took him] By his own consent, and ἐσυγκάζοντος λόγου, as Irenæus hath it, while the Deity rested, and refused to put forth it self.

Verse 51. One of them which were with Jesus] This was Peter, who asked leave to strike, but stayd not till he had it, out of a preposterous zeal to his Master, and because he would be a man of his word. A wonderful work of God it was surely, that hereupon he was not hewn in an hundred pieces, by the barbarous Souldiers. Well might the Psalmist say, He that is our God is the God of salvation; and unto God the Lord belong the issues from death, Psal. 68. 20. My times are in thine hands, Psal. 31. 15. But this stout swordman could not be found, when his Master was, after this, apprehended and arraigned. Plato hath observed, That the most skilful Fencers are the most cowardly Souldiers.

Peritissimi lanistæ inludo, sunt inertissimi in bello.

Verse 52. Put up again thy sword] See the Notes on Joh. 18. 11.

For all they that take the sword] Without a just calling, as those sworn sword-men of the Devil the Jesuites, whose faction (as one saith of them) is a most agile sharp sword; the blade whereof is sheathed at pleasure, in the bowels of every Commonwealth, but the handle reacheth to Rome and Spain: Their design is to subdue all to the Pope, and the Pope to themselves.

Verse 53. Thinkest thou that I cannot pray] q.d. Need I be beholden to thee for help? Luther very boldly told his Patron and Protector, the Elector of Saxony, That he, by his prayers gained him more help and safeguard, then he received from him: and that this cause of Christ needeth not the help of man to carry it on, but the power of God, set awork by the prayer of Faith. And this way, saith he, I will undertake to secure your Highnesses soul, body, and estate, engaged in the Cause of the Gospel, from whatsoever danger or disaster, Sive id credat C. V. sive non credat, whether your Highness believe me herein, or not.

Judico Celsitud. Vest. plus à me præsidii & tutelæ habituram esse, quàm mihi præstare. Huic causæ nullus gladius consulere aut opem ferre potest, &c. Luth. epist.

More then twelve Legions] A legion is judg'd to be six thousand foot, and seven hundred horse. And this great Army of Angels is by prayer dispatcht from Heaven in an instant. Are we then in any immiment danger? send up to Heaven for help by prayer, and God will send from Heaven and help us. We need not help our selves by seeking private revenge, as Peter here, or using sinister shifts, as David, Psal. 34. 1. for in the same Psalm, Men are exhorted to ensue peace, and pass by private wrongs; because the Angels of the Lord encamp round about them that fear him, and deliver them.

Verse 54. But how then shall the Scriptures, &c.] Why dost thou not then pray (might they object) for an Army of Angels, to rescue thee out of these wicked hands, that now hold thee prisoner, and will let out thy life-blood? How then should the Scriptures be fulfilled, saith he, that have fore-told my death? This was his constant care, even when he hung upon the Cross, to fulfil the Scriptures: and so to assure us, that he was the very Christ.

That thus it must be] Why must? but because it was, 1. So decreed by God. 2. Fore-told by the Prophets; every particular of Christs sufferings, even to their very spetting in his face. 3. Prefigured in the daily morning and evening sacrifice; this Lamb of God was sacrificed from the beginning of the world. A necessity then there was of our Saviours suffering. Not a necessity of coaction (for he dyed freely and voluntarily) but of immutability and infallibility, for the former reasons and respects.

Verse 55. Are ye come out as against a thief?] Secretly, and by night, with all this clutter of people, and clashing of arms, so to make the world believe strange matters of me? whereas, had your cause and conscience been good, you would have taken a fitter time, and I should have had fairer dealing.

And ye laid no hand on me] Ye wanted no will, but ye could never finde cause: and which of you now accuseth me of sin? It is doubtless very lawful, and in some cases needful for Christians to defend their own innocency, and vindicate their wronged credit, as did Moses, Samuel, Paul, Melanthon: I never have sought profits, pleasures, nor preferments, saith he, neither was I ever moved with emulation or envie against any man, Hanc conscientiam aufero, quocunq; discedo. This conscience I carry with me wheresoever I go. Christ of all that ever lived, might best challenge his Adversaries

Adverſaries of injury: For of him it might be truly affirmed, what Xenophon doth of Socrates, what Paterculus doth of Scipio, Quod nihil in vita niſi laudandum aut fecit, aut dixit, aut ſenſit, that he did all things well, as the people teſtified of him, and never ſaid or thought any thing amiſs. Velleius. l. 2.

Then all the Diſciples forſook him and fled] Then, when there was no ſuch need or danger to enforce them, Chriſt having capitulated with the enemy for their ſafety. They had leave to go free before: what ſtayed they for then? Or why flee they now? This was the fruit and puniſhment of their former ſleeping, verſ. 43. Had they watcht and prayd then, they had not now thus entred into temptation.

Verſe 57. Where the Scribes and the Elders were] A full Council then may err. See the Notes on Chap. 2. 4. and on Chap. 26. 3.

Verſe 58. But Peter followed] Firſt, he fled with the reſt, and then, remembring his promiſe, followed afar off: but better he had kept him away: for he ſat with the ſervants, ſo venturing upon the occaſion of ſin, which he ſhould have ſtudiouſly ſhunned; and meerly out of curioſity, to ſee the end and iſſue of Chriſts captivity. We many times tempt Satan to tempt us, by our imprudence. Evil company is contagious, and ſin more catching then the plague. Iſrael going down to Ægypt brought a golden Calf from thence: Jeroboam brought two. A man may paſs thorow Ethiopia unchanged, but he cannot reſide there, and not to be diſcoloured.

Verſe 59. Sought falſe witneſs] Here Chriſt is convented and examined in the ſpiritual Court, with a great deal of injuſtice and ſubornation. They firſt ſought falſe witneſs, as if they had obeyed our Saviour, who bad them ask thoſe that heard him, what he had ſaid unto them, Joh. 18. 21.

Verſe 60. Yea, though many falſe-witneſſes came] So adultery was objected to Athanaſius, hereſie and treaſon to Cranmer. Alſo I lay to thy charge, ſaid Bonner to Philpot, Martyr, that thou killedſt thy Father, and waſt accurſed of thy mother on her death-bed, &c. Q. Elizabeth wrote theſe lines in the window at Woodſtock; Act. and Mon. fol. 1650.

Freedom of ſpeech uſed by the Waldenſes againſt the ſins of thoſe times, cauſed, Ut plures nefariæ eis affingerentur opiniones, à quibus omninò fuerant alieni, ſaith Gerard, That many falſe opinions were fathered upon them, ſuch as they never favoured. So deal the Papiſts by us at this day; They tell the ſeduced people, that we worſhip no God, count gain godlineſs, keep no promiſes, eat young children, make nothing of adultery, murther, &c. Good people, theſe men deny Chriſt to be God, and the holy Ghoſt to be God, &c. ſaid White Biſhop of Wincheſter concerning Woodman, and other holy Martyrs, in a Sermon. See Alex. Cooks pref. to his Abatement of Pop. brags. Eudemon. Johan. contra Cataud. Act. and Mon. fol. 1813.

Yet found they none] The enemies likelieſt projects oft fail. Theſe falſe witneſſes, as thoſe Babel-builders of old, diſagreed in their language, which God confounded; and ſo he doth to this day.

Verſe 61. I am able to deſtroy the temple] Novum crimen Caie Cæſar. For, what if Chriſt had ſaid ſo? Could not he as eaſily have reared a Temple as raiſed the dead, reſtored the blinde, &c? But the truth is, he never ſaid ſo, but was miſ-reported, and falſely accuſed (ſaith Father Latimer,) both as touching his words and meaning alſo. He ſaid Deſtruite, Deſtroy ye; they made it Poſſum deſtruere, I am able to deſtroy. He ſaid Templum hoc, this temple, meaning his own body: they added manufactum made with hands, to bring it to a contrary ſenſe, &c. Thus mutilando vel mutando, by chopping or changing, ill-minded men do uſually deprave and wreſt to a wrong meaning the moſt innocent paſſages and practiſes. So true is that of the Comœdian, peace, or say something that's worth hearing. And, πᾶσιν ἀπολογεῖσθαι θεραπευτικόν. To answer every slight accusation is servile. Some are so thin they may be seen thorow, others so gross, that they need no refutation. These Hypocrites were not worthy of an answer from our Saviour: who knew also that now was the time not of apologizing,

Nihil eſt quin malè narrando poſſit depravarier:
Tu id quod boni eſt excerpis, dicis quod mali eſt.

Isa. 53.7. but of suffering: therefore as a sheep before her shearer is dumb, so he opened not his mouth. Besides, he saw that his enemies were resolved to have his blood, and therefore held it more glorious, τῷ σιωπᾷ ὑπερβαλέσθαι μίσος, as Basil hath it, to choak their spite Nazianzen. had the same thoughts, that men ought to be better advised, then to toss Gods reverend name upon their tongues as a Tennis-ball, or to wear his image for an ornament, &c. And surely, as S. Mark relateth this History, one would think Caiaphas a very conscientious person. For he brings him in saying to our Saviour, Art thou the son of that Blessed One, Mark. 14.61. So he cals God by a periphrasis, as if he were afraid once to name God: when as yet presently after, he profanely adjureth our blessed Saviour by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, &c. And this he doth, not out of any desire to know the truth: but as seeking an occasion, from his bold and free confession of the truth, to put him to death: so going about to entitle God himself to his villanous enterprizes. See here the hateful nature of damned hypocrisie, and abandon it.

Verse 64. Thou hast said] That is, as S. Mark expresseth the Hebraism in plainer terms, I am. q.d. Thou hast said it, and I must second it, I am indeed the promised Messias, and the onely-begotten Son of God. This was the naked truth without Equivocation: a device that the Jesuites have lately fetcht from hell, for the consolation of afflicted Catholikes, and for the instruction of all the godly, as Blackwel and Garnet blush not to profess in print. Let us learn here of our Saviour, to make a bold and wise confession of the truth, when called thereunto: although we create our selves thereby never so much danger from the enemy, who shall so be either converted, or at least convinced, and left inexcusable.

Hereafter shall ye see, &c.] q. d. Now I am in a state of abasement, God having hid his Son under the Carpenters son, whom ye have now bound, and shall shortly crucifie. But not long hence, ye shall see me in a state of advancement, sitting on the right hand of power, pouring out my spirit upon all flesh, Acts 2.33. and, after that, coming in the Clouds of Heaven, as in a Charet of State, to judge you that are now my Judges, &c.

Verse 65. Then the High-Priest rent his clothes] Which the High-Priest ought not by the law to have done, howsoever, Levit. 10.6 & 21.10. and here had no colour of cause at all to do: no not so much as Joab had, when for company, and at his Lords command, he rent his clothes at Abners funeral, whom he had basely murthered, 1 Sam. 3.31.

Verse 66. He is guilty of death] Servile souls! they durst do no otherwise then concur with Caiaphas. So in Popish Councils and Conclaves the Bishops and others (those Aiones & Negones aulici) have no more to do, but simply inclinato capite to say

We had need take heed where we ſet our children to ſervice: for, like water on a Table, they will be led any way, with a wet finger: and as any liquid matter, they will conform to the veſſel whereinto they are poured. Be ſure to teach them Gods fear, and to pray, and then where ever they come to live, they ſhall do good, and finde favour, as the captive children did in the Court of Babylon, Dan. 1. and as the Hebrew Girl did in Naamans Family: that great Lord lighted his Candle at his hand-maids coal: ſo good a thing is it to acquaint our children with the works of God, with the prayſes of his Prophets.

Verſe 70. I know not what thou ſayeſt] He makes as if he underſtood not either her words, or her meaning. A fair warning to ſo foul a ſinner; but he took no notice of it, till Chriſt looked back upon him; to teach us, that without the help of divine Grace, no means can convert a ſinner from the error of his way. God himſelf preached a Sermon of repentance to Cain, but it prevailed not. Whereas Chriſt no ſooner looked back upon this faln Apoſtle, but he went out and wept bitterly. Chriſt cured him with leſs ado, then he did Malchus his ear: that was healed by a touch, this by a look onely.

But though Iſrael play the Harlot, yet why ſhould Judah offend? come not ye to Gilgal, neither go ye up to Bethaven, nor ſwear, The Lord liveth. David ſware once ſuch an Oath, and it was enough of that once, 1 Sam. 25. 22. But Peter ſwears and forſwears again and again, and that after warning: as Aaron went down and did that in the Valley, which he heard forbidden in the Mount, and then excuſeth it by his fear of the people. That cowardly paſſion is the mother of many ſins, of lying eſpecially, Zeph. 3. 13. and ſwearing too, to ſave the life. But better die then lye; and better bear then ſwear. We may not break the hedge of any commandment to avoyd any peece of foul way, but go in a right line to God. Quas non oportet mortes præeligere, quod non ſupplicium potiùs ferre, imò in quam profundam inferni abyſſum non intrare, quàm contra conſcientiam atteſtari, ſaith holy Hoſ. 4. 15.

Zuinglius in his third Epistle? What should not a man suffer rather then sin? Peter sinned to some purpose, if it were as some have thought, that he not onely cursed himself, if he knew Christ, but also cursed Jesus Christ, that so he might appear to be none of his Disciples.

And immediately the Cock crew] Gallicinium complevit Christi vaticinium. The Cock proved a Preacher to Peter. Despise not the Minister though never so mean: it is the foolishness of preaching that must bring men to Heaven. Cocks call men out of their beds, and therehence have their name in the Greek tongue. They constantly keep the Law of crowing at those set times that nature hath enjoyned them: they cry loud and thick against a storm. So do faithful Ministers, when gotten upon their battlements: they clap their own sides first, and then constantly call up others. They cry aloud, and spare not, but lift up their voyce like a trumpet, to tell Judah of their sins, &c. The roaring Lyon of Hell trembleth at their note: and the worlds Sybarites cannot bear their disturbances, and therefore wish them banished. But wisdom is justified of her children, and (though fierce before and untameable,) yet now a little child shall lead them, Isa. 11.6.

Ἀνέκτως quod nos excitet è lecto.

Verse 75. And Peter remembred the words of Jesus] Here began his repentance. If we remember not what is preached unto us, all's lost, saith the Apostle, 1 Cor. 15.2. If we leak and let slip, saith another, how shall we escape? Heb. 2.1,3. The Spirit shall be the Saints remembrancer: and as the Sea casts up her dead; so shall that come seasonably to minde, that was long before delivered, when Gods good time is come to work upon the dead heart. God will be found of his that seek him not. Surely, mercy and truth shall follow them all the days of their lives, as the Sun-beams follow the Traveller that turns his back on them. He will bring back his banished, he will reduce his runagates, he will not suffer any of his to be utterly drowned, though haply they have been drenched in the waves of sin, lain some while in them, yea and have also sunk twice or thrice, as Peter, to the very bottom. Now then how can any either presume of not sinning, or despair for sin, when they read of Peter thus fallen, and now thus remembring, thus rising again by repentance, and received to mercy? The like instances we have not a few, of Origen and other Primitive Christians, who recanting for a season through fear of death, were therefore utterly excluded by Novatus from all hope of mercy: but not so by Christ. Be not thou a terror unto me, O Lord, saith Jeremy, and then I care not, though all the world condemn and cast me out. Bilney, Bainham, Benbridge, Abbes, Whittle, Sharp, and many other Martyrs, having denyed their Lord God, as they called it, for fear of the fagot, could have no rest till they had repented, and publikely revoked their much bewayled recantations. Steven Gardiner indeed, like another Ecebolius, cryed out that he had denyed with Peter, but never repented with Peter, and so both stinkingly and unrepentantly dyed, saith Mr. Fox. It was a saying of the same Mr. Fox that his graces did him most hurt, and his sins most good. A paradox; but by our temptations, we know his meaning. As pain easeth a Christian, death revives him, dissolution unites him, so corruption clarifies him. I dare be bold to say (saith Augustine,) that it is good for proud persons to fall into some foul sin, unde sibi displiceant, qui jam sibi placendo ceciderunt. Salubrius enim Petrus sibi displicuit quando flevit, quam sibi placuit quando præsumpsit, that they may be humbled, as Peter was, and so saved.

He wept bitterly] That one sweet look from Christ, melted him; as Gods kindness did the heard-hearted Israelites at the meet of Mizpeh. In this troubled pool Peter washed himself, in this red Sea the army of his iniquities was drowned. As once his faith was so great, that he leapt into a sea of waters to come to Christ: so now his repentance was so great, that he leapt, as it were, into a sea of tears for that he had gone from Christ. There are that say (and it may very well be) that henceforth he was ever and anon weeping: and that his face was even furrowed with continual tears. He began soon after his sin, Mark 14.72. cùm se proripuisset, when he had thrown himself out, as Beza renders it. He had no sooner took in poyson, but he vomited it up again ere it got to the vitals. He had no sooner handled his Serpent, but he turned it into a rod, to scourge his soul with remorse. Peccatum tristitiam peperit, & tristitia peccatum contrivit, ut vermis is ligno natus, sed ipsum comminuit.

CHAP. XXVII.

Verse 1. When the morning was come]

THey had broken their sleep the night afore: and yet were up and at it early the next morning, so soon as the day peeped, Luke 22. 66. So sedulous are the Devils servants. Esau began to bustle with Jacob even in the very womb, that no time might be lost. ὡς ἐγένετο ἡμέρα.

Verse 2. And when they had bound him] Bound he had been before this (to loose the cords of our iniquities:) but belike they had loosed him again, to try if by fair means they could make him belie himself. So those Martyrs were tempted, Heb. 11. 37. And this was Julians way of persecuting the Primitive Christians, as Nazianzen testifieth: persecutioni suæ miscuit persuasiones; ideoq; fuit superioribus nocentior, & perniciosior. So Bonner, after he had allowed William Hunter Martyr, an half-peny a day in bread and drink in prison, perswaded with him, saying: If thou wilt recant, I will make thee a free-man in the City, and give thee fourty pounds in good money, to set up thine occupation withall; or I will make thee Steward of mine house, and set thee in Office. So, to reduce D. Taylor, Matyr, they promised him not onely his pardon, but a Bishoprick. ἐκρίθησαν, ἐπιέζοντο. Nazianzen. Act. and Mon. fol. 1397. Ibid. 1386.

Verse 3. Then Judas which had betrayed him] Might not Judas have sang care away, now that he had both the bag and the price of blood, but he must come and betray himself? Whiles he playd alone, he won all: but soon after, his own wickedness corrected him, and his backslidings reproved him. Sin will surely prove evil and bitter, when the bottom of the bag is once turned upward. A man may have the stone, who feels no fit of it. Conscience will work once: though for the time, one may feel no fit of accusation: Laban shewed himself at parting. Knowest thou not that there will be bitterness in the latter end? But the Devil deals with men as the Panther doth with the beasts: he hides his deformed head, till his sweet sent have drawn them into his danger. Till we have sinned, Satan is a parasite: when we have sinned, he is a tyrant. But it is good to consider that of Bernard. At the day of judgement, a pure conscience shall better bestead one then a full purse. Jer. 2. 19. 2 Sam. 13. 15. In die judicii plus valebit conscientia pura, quàm mare supra plena. Bern.

When he saw that he was condemned] He hoped, belike, that Christ would, as at other times he did, have delivered himself by a miracle. Let no man flatter himself, as if there were no such hurt in sin; for like dirty dogs, it doth but defile us in fawning: and like a treacherous Host, though it welcome us into the Inn with smiling countenance, yet it will cut our throats in our beds. Judas was first nibling upon the silver bait, after which the hook of Conscience troubled him.

He repented] That is, he changed his minde, from thinking well of his former actions. So those miscreants in Malachi are said to return and discern, &c. Malach. 3. 18. So Rodulphus Duke of Suevia, when at the Popes instigation, taking up arms against Henry the Emperour, he had lost his right hand in the battel, he sent for his Bishops, and other his Confederates, and said unto them: Lo, this is that hand wherewith I swore that allegiance to my Soveraign, which by your means and motion I have violated. Videte an rectâ viâ me duxeritis, &c. Consider whether you have led me on in a right way or not. Μετανοήσας Func. Chronol. Hic fuit ille cui Papa coronam misit cum ista inscriptione, Petra dedit Petro, Petrus diadema Rudulpho.

And brought again the thirty pieces] So did James Abbes bring to the Bishop of Norwich, his forty pence fastened upon him by the Bishop: which when he had received (saith Mr. Fox) and was gone from the Bishop, who had prevailed with him to recant, his conscience began to throb, and inwardly to accuse this fact, how he had displeased the Lord, by consenting to their beastly illusions. In which combat with himself, being piteously vexed, he went to the Bishop again, and there threw him his money and said, It repented him that he ever consented to their wicked perswasions in taking of his mony. Hereupon the Bishop with his Chaplains laboured afresh to win him again. But he was beter resolved, and crying out to God for pardon of his sin (which Judas did not) he obtained mercy, and suffered Martyrdom. Act. and Mon. fol. 1528.

men go not so far, that yet profess large hopes of Heaven) there was wanting that Transmentation, Conversion, Obedience of Faith that should have completed his repentance. He dyed in the birth, as that foolish child Ephraim. He confessed to men, and not to God: and by his confession he sought no more then to ease his heart, as drunkards by vomiting rid their stomacks. So Latomus of Lovain confessed inter horrendos mugitus, se contra conscientiam adversatum esse veritati, roaring and crying out, that against his conscience he had persecuted the truth of God. In trouble of minde all will out. Conscience, like Sampsons Wife, conceals not the riddle: like Fulvia a whorish woman, who declared all the secrets of her foolish lover Cneius a noble Roman.

What is that to us? See thou to that] Miserable Comforters, Physitians of no value. To him that is afflicted pity should be shewed from his friend: but he forsaketh the fear of the Almighty. The Devil and his Imps love to bring men into the bryers, and there leave them: as familiar Devils forsake their Witches, when they have brought them once into fetters. Thus the old Bethelite, that had been at pains to fetch back the Prophet, would not go back with him. Thus the Papists burnt Cranmer recanting, and the present Prelates cast off their great Anti-Sabbatarian White, when they had served their turns on him. David when he was hunted from Samuel the Prophet, he fled to Abimelech the Priest: as one that knew that justice and compassion should dwell in those brests that are consecrated to God. But Judas met with no such matter in the Priests of his time. Those mischievous men left him, when they had led him to his bane.

Job 6. 14.

Verse 5. And he cast down the pieces of silver] That wages of wickedness burnt in his purse, in his conscience; neither could it secure him in the day of wrath. See Zeph. 1. 18. Ezek. 7. 19. Obad. 4. Jam. 4. 1, 2. Omnia fui, & nihil mihi profuit, said Severus the Emperor, when he lay a dying. Most of the Emperors gat nothing by their advancement to the Empire, whereof they were so ambitious, but this, Ut citius interficerentur, that they were slain the sooner. All or most of them, till Constantine, dyed unnatural deaths. Achans wedge of gold served but to cleave asunder his soul from his body; and the Babylonish garment but for a shroud.

And went and hang'd himself] If you confess your self to a Priest, and not to God, said that Martyr, you shall have the reward that Judas had. For he confessed himself to a Priest, and yet went and hang'd himself by and by. So did Pavier, Town-Clark of London, in Henry the Eights time, who had before sworn a great oath, That if the Kings Highness would set forth the Scripture in English, and let it be read of the people by his authority, rather then he would so long live, he would cut his own throat. But he brake promise: for shortly after he hang'd himself. And about the same time Foxford, Chancellour to the Bishop of London, a cruel persecutor and butcher of the Saints, dyed suddenly in his Chair, his belly being burst, and his guts falling out before him; as likewise Judas his did, Cum quodam singulari crepitu fragore, as the word imports, Act. 1. 18. Selneccerus makes mention of a covetous Bishop of Misna in Germany, who had the Devil for his deathsman: And D. Morton, late Bishop of Durham, reports a story of his own knowledge, of one Sir Booth, a Bachelour of Arts in S. Johns Colledge in Cambridge, who being Popishly affected, took the consecrated bread at the time of the Communion; and forbearing to eat it, conveyed and kept it closely for a time, and afterwards threw it over the Colledge wall. But a short time after, not enduring the torment of his guilty conscience, he threw himself headlong over the battlements of the Chappel, and some few hours after ended his life. The spirit of a man may sustain his infirmity: some shift or other a man may make to suffer whatsoever other calamities: But a wounded spirit who can bear? Prov. 18. 14. there's no fighting with a mighty fire, no bearing up sail against a storm. Job when once wet to the skin, curseth the day of his birth, and thinketh it better to be strangled or hanged, then longer to endure it. And yet God was but in jest, as it were, with Job, in comparison of Judas.

Job 7. 15.

Verse 6. It is not lawful, &c.] They would not suffer the price of blood to lye in a Chest; but the blood it self they could well enough suffer to lye in their consciences. So our modern Pharisees (the Popish Prelates) will not be present when the Martyrs are condemned to death, but have an hypocritical form of interceding for them to the secular powers, when as they themselves have delivered them up to the Judges to be executed, Quos suis præjudiciis damnarunt, as one speaketh, having first degraded, excommunicated and adjudged them worthy of death.

Verſe 7. To bury ſtrangers in] Romans and others, with whom they would have nothing common, no not ſo much as a buryal place, Iſa. 65. 4,5. God complains of a people that remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments; Which ſay, ſtand by thy ſelf, come not near to me, for I am holier then thou, &c. ſick they were of a Noli me tangere, ſtrict in niſles, ſenſleſs of foul ſins. There are that tell us, that the nature of this Potters field is ſuch, as, if a ſtrangers body be laid in it, it conſumes it to the bone in four and twenty hours; which it doth not to the body of any Jew. This, if it be true, ſaith one, it ſeems God would have the earth thus markt to preſerve the memory of the bloody money, by which it was purchaſed: and therefore he gave it a vertue to conſume ſtrangers bodies ere they could corrupt, refuſing the Jews; to ſhew how they had loſt their priviledge to their own Land, by crucifying their Lord, and ſtrangers began to be poſſeſt of it. Alſo, to teach us, that his hope is neareſt incurruption, who is the greateſt ſtranger from the ſin of the Jews, that is, crucifying Chriſt.

Medit. for the Paſſion week, by N. Taylour.

Verſe 8. Was called the Field of blood] Not the burial-place for ſtrangers, as they would have had it called (thinking thereby to have gotten themſelves an eternal commendation, for their love and liberality to ſtrangers) but the Field of blood (ſo the Vulgar would needs call it, much againſt theſe Maſters minds,) for a laſting monument of their deteſtable villany, which they thought to have carryed ſo cleanly, that the world ſhould have been never the wiſer; and therefore they would not kill Chriſt themſelves, as they did Steven; but to decline the envie, delivered him up to Pilate to be put to death. It is hard if hypocrites be not, by one means or other, detected: how elſe ſhould their names rot?

Verſe 9. Then was fulfilled] Thoſe blinde Phariſees not onely obſerved not the ſayings of the Prophets which they daily read, but unwittingly alſo fulfilled them.

By Jeremy the Prophet] Indeed by Zachary the Prophet: but either Jeremy had two ſeveral names (as was ordinary among that people) or elſe what Jeremy had preached, Zachary long after committed to writing, as did likewiſe Obadiah, &c.

The price of him that was valued] A goodly price ſet there upon God, for all his paſtoral pains with that perverſ people: and hereupon Chriſt (who is hereby proved to be God) for all his ineſtimable worth, and incomparable love to loſt man-kinde. If we be at any time undervalued, as we are ſure to be (for the world knows us not, 1 Joh. 3. 2.) what ſo great a matter is it? Was not the Lord Chriſt infinitely under-rated?

Verſe 10. And gave them for the Potters Field] To the Potter (ſaith Zachary) in the houſe of the Lord. What the Prophet ſets down in ſhort, and more obſcurely, the Evangeliſt expounds, and applies to Chriſt the antitype. So true is that obſervation of Divines, that the Old Teſtament is both explained and fulfilled in the new, by a happy harmony.

Verſe 11. And Jeſus ſtood before the Governour] The beſt therefore and moſt innocent may be brought before Magiſtrates, and accuſed of high treaſon, which ever was, as Lipſius obſerveth out of Tacitus, Unicum crimen eorum qui crimine vacabant. Eliah was held the Kings enemy. Jeremy layd by the heels for a traytor to the State. Paul ſtiled a peſt. Luther a trumpet of Rebellion. Beza a ſeedſman of ſedition, &c. Chriſts accuſers here, ſhameleſly appeal him of matters that were evidently untrue. This Pilate ſaw, and therefore ſought ſo many ways to deliver him.

Verſe 12. He anſwered nothing] Here the nimble Lawyer would have preſently argued, as the Popes Legat did at the meeting of the Princes at Smalcaldia in Germany. He brought Letters from the Pope to the Elector of Saxony: and becauſe the Elector gave him not a preſent anſwer, he inferred, Qui tacet conſentire videtur. Melanthon being by, made anſwer, Hoc eſt ſophiſticum, eſt regula juris, ſed non valet inconjecturalibus. Nam dicit, videtur, & argumentum videtur, ſolvitur per non videtur. Chriſt therefore anſwered nothing, becauſe they alledged nothing but notorious lyes, and ſuch as he ſaw well the Governour himſelf ſaw thorow, and therefore tryed ſo many policies to ſet him free.

Joh. Manl. loc. com. p. 406.

Verſe 13. Heareſt thou not? &c.] Yes, well enough: but there is a time when a man ſhould be as a deaf man that heareth not, and as a dumb man that openeth not his mouth. Ego aurium Dominus, ut tu linguæ, ſaid he in Tacitus to his obſtreperous adverſary. If

I cannot command thy tongue, yet I can command mine own ears. And the prude will keep silence in an evil time, saith Amos. See the Note above, on Chap. 26. 6. Patience and silence were Isaac's Apology to Ishmael. Sile, & funestam dedisti plagam saith Chrysostom.

Amos 5. 13.

Verse 14. The Governour marvelled,] That Christ should so betray his own cause by an obstinate silence. But why marvelled he not as much at the impudency of the Priests, pressing such palpable untruths against him? He did no doubt: and yet against all equity, yielded to their importunity. But should not Magistrates be men of courage cuerdelions? Solomons Throne was supported by Lyons; to shew what manner of men such should be, as sit in places of Judicature.

Verse 15. The Governour was wont] In remembrance, say some, of their deliverance from the Egyptian bondage. A custome it was, and therefore obtained, but an evil custom, and therefore should better have been abrogated. Custom without truth is but hoarinesse or mouldinesse of errour, saith one. And custome without righteousnesse, is but antiquity of iniquity, saith another. A custome they have in Rome at this day, that if a Cardinal meet a condemned person going to execution, and put his Hat on the Malefactors head, he is thereby set free. I see no sense for such a pardon. But the Inhabitants of Berne in Germany gave a general pardon to most of their Prisoners, and called home their banished that same day wherein the Reformation was received and established amongst them. And they gave this reason for it. Should some confederate Prince pass thorow our Coasts, we should for his sake, pardon our Offenders, upon promise of amendment. Now shall the King of Kings, the Son of God, and our dear brother, who hath done and suffered so much for us, come graciously unto us, and we not honour him this way also? Saul, for joy of his Victory over the Ammonites, would not suffer such to be put to death, as had spoken Treason against him: for to day (said he) the Lord hath wrought salvation in Israel, &c.

Verse 16. A notable Prisoner, called Barabbas] That is, by interpretation his fathers son, his white son, his darling, his tidling, whom he had cockered and not crossed from his youth. Such children are oft undone, as Absolom, Amnon and Adoniah were by their Parents indulgence. How many a Barabbas, brought to the Gallows, blameth his fond Father, and haply curseth him in Hell?

Verse 17. Whom will ye that I release?] Pilate hoped they would never be so grosly wicked, as to prefer such a stigmatical Varlet. But why did he give them the liberty of such a choyce? Why did he not rather (as Job) break the jaws of the wicked, and pluck the spoyl out of their teeth? Should not the standard be made of hardest metals? the chief post of the house be heart of Oak? Was it not pusillanimity and popularity that misled Pilate, and so muzzled him, that he could not contradict the many-headed multitude?

Job 30. 17.

Verse 18. For he knew that for envie] His sin was the greater for his knowledge, Jam. 4. 17. Omne peccatum contra conscientiam, edificat ad gehennam, saith Gerson. When men imprison their light (that Prophet from God) Rom. 1. 18. and after conviction run away with the bit in their mouths, as it were, they run, without Gods greater mercy, upon their utter ruine and destruction. Tostatus truly observeth, that Solomons Idolatry was a sin far more sinful then that of his Wives; because against knowledge.

Verse 19. His wife sent unto him] There are that think that this womans dream was of the Devil: thereby to have hindered the work of redemption by this compositi-on. Satan and his agents, when they cannot conquer, would fain compound. Others will have it to be a divine dream, because it was sent, say they, for the better clearing of Christs innocency, even whiles he stood at the bar: yea, for the salvation of this womans soul, as Theophylact is of opinion.

Opus providentiæ Dei: non ut solveretur Christus, sed ut servaretur uxor. Theophylact.

Verse 20. The chief Priests and Elders perswaded] And prevailed. See then how needful it is that we pray for good Governours; Jerobpam made Israel to sin: Peter compelled the Gentiles to Judaize, Gal. 2. 14. prefer the luſts of their fleſh before the lives of their ſouls. In the preſent inſtance we may ſee, as in a mirrour, the inconſtancy of the common ſort (who erſt cryed Chriſt up for a Prophet, and would have crowned him for a King) and the deſperate madneſs of the Prieſts, Qui citiùs Diabolum ex inferno petiviſſent quam Jeſum, as Pareus hath it; Who would have deſired the Devil of Hell, rather then Jeſus. Sic neutrum modò mas modò vulgus.

Verſe 22. Let him be crucified] He whom erewhile they had little leſs then deified. See how ſoon evil company and counſel had altered them: like as Walnut-tree-roots imbitter the roots of all the trees about them. Siquis obſequatur Callia, ſtatim reddet eum temulentum Callias; ſi Alcibiadi, jactatorem: ſi Crobylo, coquum, &c. ſaith Ælian. Verſe 23. Why? What evil hath he done?] Why? but if he have done no evil, wherefore doth not Pilate pronounce him innocent contra gentes? And quit him by proclamation? which becauſe he did not, but the contrary, was he not therefore, by a juſt judgement of God upon him, kickt off the bench by the Emperour Tiberius? Judge Hales came to an evil end for croſſing his conſcience. And Judge Morgan, who gave the ſentence of that peerleſs Lady Jane Grays death, preſently fell mad: and in all his diſtracted fits, cryed out continually, Take away the Lady Jane, Take away the Lady Jane from me. It is reported of Neveſſan, a better Lawyer then an honeſt man, that he ſhould ſay: He that will not venture his body, ſhall never be valiant: he that will not venture his ſoul, never rich. Act. and Mon. Englands Elix.

Verſe 24. He took water] Too weak an element to waſh off guilt: which is not purged but by the blood of Chriſt, or fire of Hell.

And waſht his hands] An old Ceremony, uſed in this caſe, both by Jews (Deut.21. 6,7. Act.18.6.) and Gentiles, as the Scholiaſt upon Sophocles teſtifieth. And it was as much as to ſay, the guilt of innocent blood doth no more ſtick to my conſcience, then the filth now waſhed off, doth to my fingers. Sed quid hoc eſt? ſaith one: Manus abluit Pilatus, & cor polluit. O Jeruſalem, waſh thy heart from wickedneſs, ſaith the Prophet. God and nature begin at the heart. And Cleanſe your hands, ye ſinners, but withal, Purifie your hearts, ye double-minded, ſaith the Apoſtle. The very Turks, before prayer, waſh both face and hands, ſometimes the head and privities. But bodily exerciſe onely profiteth little. Εἰσὶ γὰρ τοῖς πολλοῖς τῶν ἀνθρώπων πάλαι σφαγὰς ἐπόησεν, ἰδοὺ ἀποπλύνεται χεῖρας ὁ καθαρὸν εἶναι μιαίνων. Jer. 4.14. Jam 4.8. Mun's voyage, pag. 100.

See ye to it] See thou to that, ſaid they to Judas, verſ. 4. See ye to it, ſaith Pilate to them: With what meaſure ye mete it ſhall be meaſured to you again, Mat.7.2. They are payd in their own coyn, their own very words, by a juſt judgement of God, are regeſted upon them.

Verſe 25. His blood be on us, and on, &c.] God ſaid Amen to this woful curſe, which cleaves cloſe to them and their poſterity, as a girdle to their loyns, ſoaking as oyl into their bones to this very day, *Pſal.*109.18, 19. Thirty eight years after this fearful imprecation, in the ſame place, and cloſe by the ſame tribunal where they thus cryed out, His blood be on us, &c. Hiſtorians tell us, that Herod, wanting money, demanded of the Jews ſo much out of their treaſury, as would pay for the making of a water-courſe. But the Jews, ſuppoſing it a needleſs work, not only denyed him, but gave many outragious and ſpiteful ſpeeches, tumultuouſly flockt about him, and with great clamours preſt upon him, even as he was in his ſeat. Whereupon to prevent miſchief, he ſent to his ſouldiers to apparrel themſelves like Citizens, and under their gowns to bring with them a dagger or ponyard, and mingle themſelves amongſt the multitude; which they did, obſerving who they were that made the greateſt uproar. And when Herod gave the ſign, they fell upon them, and ſlew a great multitude. Many alſo, for fear of loſs or danger, killed themſelves: beſides others, which ſeeing this maſſacre, ſuſpecting treaſon among themſelves, fell one upon another. What a diſperſed and deſpiſed people they are ever ſince, exiled, as it were, out of the world, by the common conſent of all Nations, for their inexpiable guilt. See my True Treaſure, Chap.7. Sect.2. And beware by their example of wiſhing evil to our ſelves or others, as our deſperate God-damn-me's do at every third word almoſt, and God will undoubtedly take them at their words, as he did thoſe wretches, that wiſhed they might die in the Wilderneſs, *Numb.*14.28. Verſe 26. And when he had ſcourged Jeſus] So to ſatisfie their cruelty, and move them, if it might be, to pity. But though they relented not at the ſight, it's fit we ſhould. Would it not grieve us at the heart, if we ſhould ſee the Kings ſon baſely whipped by our Adverſaries, onely for our affairs? Chriſt was ſcourged when we had offended, that he might free us from the ſting of conſcience, and thoſe ſcourges and Scorpions of eternal torments, that he might make us a plaiſter of his own bleſſed blood: for by his ſtripes we are healed, by the bloody wails made upon his back we are delivered We hold it a thing almoſt beyond belief, that the applying of medicines to the ſword that wounded a man, ſhall make the wounds heal in a man. But here is a myſterie that only Chriſtian Religion can tell of, and of which there never was preſident in nature, that the ſcourging and wounding of one man ſhould cure another. It is a but ſport to Souldiers to kill and put men to tormentful ends. At the taking of Tripolis in Barbary, the Turkiſh Souldiers, having in their hands one John de Chabos, a French-man, born in Daulphine, they brought him into the Town: and when they had cut off his hands and noſe, they put him quick into the ground to the waſt, and there, for their pleaſure, ſhot at him with their arrows, and afterwards cut his throat. What inſolencies and cruelties they exerciſed upon our Saviour for our ſakes, even the whole band of them, we ſhould read with regret for our ſins, the weapons and inſtruments of all his ſufferings; and ſee thorow his wounds the naked bowels, as it were, of his love to our poor ſouls.

Verſe 28. And they ſtripped him] That we might be cloathed with the rich and royal rayment of his righteouſneſs, that fleece of the Lamb of God, who taketh away, &c.

And put on him a ſcarlet robe] Oreworn and thred bare no doubt: ſo to ſet him forth as an hiſtrionical King, in contempt of him: but the Kingdom of Chriſt came not by obſervation. He is an obſcure King, as Melchiſedech was, but yet a King, as he told Pilate, and this was that good confeſſion witneſſed by him, and celebrated by S. Paul, 1 Tim. 6.13.

Verſe 29. And when they had platted a crown, &c.] Chriſt, by wearing this crown of thorns, the firſt-fruits of the curſe, took away the ſin and curſe of all his people: who muſt therefore, by their obedience ſet a Crown of Gold on his Head, Cant. 3.11. as Canutus in his ſuperſtitious way ſet his crown upon the crucifix. open shame, as a crucified King. Like as that Atheist Lucian, blasphemously calls our Saviour, The crucified consener, the modern Iews contemptuously call him (in reference to his cross) The Woof and the Warp. And, at the sack of Constantinople, the Image of the Crucifix was set up by the insolent Turks, and shot at with their arrows: and afterwards in great derision carried about the Camp, as it had been in procession, those dead dogs railing and spitting at it, and calling it, The God of the Christians. Ten thousand Martyrs were crucified in the Mount of Ararat under Adrian the Emperour, crowned with thorns, and thrust into the sides with sharp darts, in contempt of Christ.

Verse 38. Then were there two thieves] So he was reckoned among the transgressors, Isa. 53. 12. A sinner, not by imputation onely, for he bare the sin of many (ib.) but by reputation also, and therefore crucified in the midst (as the worst of the three, chief of sinners) that we might have place in the midst of heavenly Angels, in those walks of paradise, Zach. 3. 7. The one of those two thieves went railing to hell (his crucifixion being but a typical hell to him, a trap-door to eternall torment) the other went repenting forth-right to heaven, living long in a little time, and by his prayer making his cross a Iacobs ladder, whereby Angels descended to fetch up his soul. It is remarkable, and to our purpose sutable, that Rabus reporteth, that when Leonard Casar suffered Martyrdom at Kappa, a little town in Bavaria, a certain Priest, that had by the law for some villanous act deserved death, being led forth with him towards the place of execution, cryed out often, Ego ne quidem dignus sum, qui tibi in hac pœna associer, justo injustus. I am not worthy to suffer with thee, the just with the unjust. At the death of George Eagle Martyr, in Queen Maries dayes, two thieves being to be executed with him, he exhorted them to imbrace the truth, and to persevere therein. Whereupon one of them scoffingly said, why should we doubt of going to heaven, seeing this holy man shall go before us, as our Captain in the way? we shall certainly flee thither strait, as soon as he hath made us the entry. But the other thief reproved him for it, and gave good heed to George Eagles exhortation, earnestly bewailing his own wickedness, and crying unto Christ for Mercy, &c. This penitent thief exhorted the people upon the ladder, to beware of sin by his example: and so commending his soul to Christ, ended his life quietly, and in a godly manner. The mocker when he came upon the ladder, would have said something, but could not, his tongue did so fumble and faulter in his head that he could not repeat the Lords prayer, but became a singular instance of Gods just judgement upon so profane a person.

He is jealous for Ierusalem with a great jealousie, Zach. 1. 14. (and jealousie is very wakeful, hardly shall the fly paramour avoid the husbands eye) if he see any indignity offered to his beloved spouse, he will arise and play Phineas his part, as that Martyr said. The virgin daughter of Sion, though she be but a virgin, hath a champion that will not see nor suffer her to be abused, Isa. 37. 22. See how he revileth her revilers, Isa. 57. 3, 4. But draw neer hither, ye sons of the sorceress, the seed of the adulterer and the whore, Against whom do ye sport your selves? Against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? Are ye not children of transgression, a seed of falshood? Yea, he giveth incouragement to his Spouse, in an holy scorn to despise and deride her deriders, shaking her head at them, as they do at her, and saying; Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed? &c. q. d. Dost thou know what thou hast done? &c. At Brightwell in Barkshire, one Lener said that he saw that evil-favoured knave Latimer, when he was burned at Oxford: and that he had teeth like an horse. But the Lord suffered not this scorn and contempt of his servant to go unpunished. For that very day, and about the same hour that Lener spake those words, his son wickedly hanged himself.

againſt him, we are not at leaſure to liſten to every ſlight ſlander raiſed of us. And of Severus the Emperour it is recorded, that his care was, what was to be done by him, not what was ſaid or cenſured of him. Do well and hear ill, is written upon heaven gates, ſaid that Martyr. Railers are to be reckoned kill-Chriſts: words may more afflict then blows, Pſal. 42. 3, 10. As with a murthering weapon in my bones, &c.

Ἐπιμελὴς ἦν τῶν πραττομένων, ἀμελὴς τῶν περὶ αὐτὸν λεγομένων. Dio.

Verſe 41. Likewiſe alſo the chief Prieſts] Sick of an ἐπιχαιρεκακία the devils diſeaſe, they petulantly inſult over our dying Saviour, with their Satanical ſarcaſms: which he anſwereth with ſilence, and by a brave compoſedneſs ſets himſelf above the flight of the injurious claw. Facile eſt in me dicere, cum non ſim reſponſurus, ſaith one. It is as impoſſible to avoid, as neceſſary to contemn the laſh of leud tongues, bitter terms, and ſcurrilous invectives. Thoſe ears that were wont to hear nothing but Angelical hymns, are here filled with them, and he replies not. Princes uſe not to chide when Embaſſadours offer them undecencies, but deny them audience.

Verſe 42. We will believe him] They would not: but rather have ſaid, he had done it by the devils help; or have ſearched the devils skull to find out ſome other trick, to elude the truth.

Verſe 43. He truſted in God] Theſe were cruel mockings, as thoſe were called, Heb. 11. 36. Nothing troubled David more then to be hit in the teeth with his God: to have his Religion laid in his diſh, Pſal. 42. & 43. And it went to Iobs heart to hear his friend Eliphaz (a godly man otherwiſe,) ſcoffe him for his Religion, Iob 4. 6. Is not thy fear (or thy Religion) become thy folly? Zedekiah feared more to be mocked of the Iews, then the Caldees, Ier. 38. 19.

Let him deliver him now] But what if he do not deliver him now, is he therefore no ſon? So they would ſeem to argue: and ſo Satan would fain perſwade the Saints when held awhile under the croſs. But the Apoſtle aſſures us otherwiſe, Heb. 12. 6, 7, 8. See my Love-tokens.

Verſe 44. The theeves alſo] Both of them railed at firſt, till one of them was converted by a miracle (for it was one of thoſe ſeven miracles wherewith Chriſt would honour the ignominy of his croſs.) Then till either they both reviled our Saviour, or the better of them ſeemed, at leaſt by his ſilence, for a ſeaſon to conſent to the other. In whoſe example we ſee, that every fool hath a bolt to ſhoot at afflicted godlineſs. Every curr is ready to fall upon the dog that he ſeeth worried: and every paſſenger to pull a branch from a tree that is felled. But there is no ſmall cruelty in compoſing Comedies out of the Tragedies of the Church: and ſo, to draw blood from that back which is yet blue from the hand of the Almighty. God threatneth Edom for but looking upon Iacobs affliction in the day of their calamity.

Obadiah 13.

Verſe 45. Darkneſs over all the land] The Sun hid his head in a mantle of black, as aſhamed to behold thoſe baſe indignities done to the Son of righteouſneſs, by the ſons of men. This darkneſs ſome think was univerſal: not onely over all the land of Iury, but over the whole earth (and ſo the text may be rendered.) Tiberius, ſay they, was ſenſible of it at Rome: Dionyſius writes to Polycarpus, that they had it in Ægypt. And another great Aſtronomer Ptolomy (if I miſtake not) was ſo amazed at it, that he pronounced, either nature now determineth, or the God of nature ſuffereth.

Sol non fert aſpectum illum miſerandum, quem ſine rubore & fronte indæi irrident. Aretius. ἐπὶ πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν.

Vnto the ninth hour] In this three hours darkneſs he was ſet upon by all the powers of darkneſs, with utmoſt might and malice. But he foyled and ſpoiled them all, and made an open ſhew of them (as the Roman Conquerers uſed to do) triumphing over them on his croſs, as on his chariot of ſtate, Coloſ. 2. 15. attended by his vanquiſhed enemies, with their hands bound behind them, Eph. 4. 8.

Verſe 46. Jeſus cried with a loud voice] Therefore he laid down his life at his own pleaſure: for by his loud out-cry it appears, that he could have lived longer, if he had liſted, for any decay of nature under thoſe exquiſite torments that he ſuffered in his body, but much greater in his ſoul. That which for the preſent ſeems to have expreſſed from him this doleful complaint, was, the ſenſe of his fathers wrath in the darkning of the body of the Sun over him: which though God cauſeth to ſhine upon the juſt and unjuſt for their comfort, yet was not ſuffered to ſhine upon him, for thoſe three ſorrowful hours together. When Theodorus the Martyr was racked and tortured by the command of Iulian the Apoſtate, an Angel, in the form of a young man, ſtood by him and comforted him, wiping off his ſweat with a fine linnen cloth, and pouring cold water on his vexed limbs. When Mr. Saunders Martyr was examined before Steven Wincheſter, he felt a moſt pleaſant refreſhing iſſuing from every part of his body to his heart, and from thence ebbing and flowing to each part again. William Hunter Martyr cryed out at the ſtake, Son of God ſhine upon me, and immediately the Sun ſhone out of a dark cloud ſo full in his face, that he was conſtrained to look another way: whereat the people muſed, becauſe it was ſo dark a little before. And I my ſelf was an eye-witneſs of a like anſwer returned from heaven, to a like prayer made by a penitent malefactour executed at Eveſham in Worceſter-ſhire, many years ſince. But our Lord Chriſt was forſaken of all theſe creature-comforts: and (which was worſe than all) of his Fathers favour to his preſent apprehenſion; left forlorn and deſtitute for a time, that we might be received for ever. Howbeit, perplexed though he were, yet not in deſpair; perſecuted, yet not forſaken; caſt down, yet not deſtroyed. He could ſay My God in the midſt of all, by the force of his faith, which individuateth God (as a Father ſaith,) and appropriateth him to a mans ſelf. And Hilary hath a good note, which here comes in, not out of place. Habes conquerentem relictum ſe eſſe, quia homo eſt: habes eundum profitentem Latroni in paradiſo regnaturum, quia Deus eſt. As man he cryes out My God, my God, &c. when, as God, he promiſeth paradiſe to the penitent thief.

Verſe 47. This man calleth for Elias] A malicious miſtake, a deviliſh ſarcaſm. Whiles darkneſs was upon them, they were over-awed and huſht; their mouths were haltred (as horſes muſt be, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, as the Sea was by our Saviour,) and held in with bit and bridle, leſt they come near unto thee. But no ſooner was it light again, but they are at their old trade again; deriding our Saviour, and depraving his words, as if forſaken of his hope in God, he had fled to Elias for help: So when Cranmer, ſtanding at the ſtake, cryed out often, Lord Ieſu receive my ſpirit, a Spaniſh Monk that heard him, ran to a Noble-man there preſent, and tels him, that thoſe were the words of one that dyed in great deſpair.

Verſe 48. And filled it with vinegar] Sorrow is dry, we ſay. This man of ſorrows, more to fulfill the Scriptures, then for his own ſatisfaction, though extream dry no doubt (for now was the Paſchal Lamb a roaſting in the fire of his Fathers wrath) he ſaith, I thirſt, and had vinegar to drink: that we might drink of the water of life, and be ſweetly inebriated in that torrent of pleaſure that runs at Gods right hand for evermore, Pſal. 16. 11. See the Note on Joh. 19. 29.

Verſe 49. Let us ſee whether Elias, &c.] This mocking is the murther of the tongue, which therefore our Saviour ſuffered, ut nos illuſori Satanæ inſultaremus, ſaith one. It is reported of Aretine, that by a longer cuſtome of libellous and contumelious ſpeaking againſt men, he had got ſuch a habit, that at laſt he came to diminiſh and diſeſteem God himſelf. Verſ. 51. The vail of the Temple was rent] To ſhew that there was an end of the Levitical Liturgy; and that now there was free and open acceſs for all Saints to the throne of Gods grace: for the vail was a figure of the ſpirituall covering which was before the eyes of the Church till Chriſts coming.

And the earth did quake] To work a heart-quake in the obſtinate Jews, as in ſome it did: others of them had contracted ſuch an habitual hardneſs, ſuch a hoof upon their hearts, as neither miniſtry, nor miſery, nor miracle, nor mercy could poſſibly molliſie.

And the rocks rent] So they do, where ever Chriſt makes forcible entrance into any heart. I will ſhake all nations, and then the deſire of all nations ſhall come, Hag. 2. 7. And many bodies of the Saints] To ſhew that the heart-ſtrings of death, which before bound them in their ſepulchres, were now broken, and they enlarged to attend our Saviours reſurrection.

Verſe 53. And appeared unto many] Not to converſe again, as heretofore, with men, but to accompany Chriſt, that raiſed them, into heaven; and to be as ſo many ocular demonſtrations of Chriſts quickning power, whereby he ſhall alſo raiſe our vile bodies, and conform them to his glorious body the ſtandard, Phil. 3. ult.

Verſe 54. Truly this was the Son of God] i. e. A divine man, a demy-god, as theſe Heathens reputed thoſe in whom they beheld and admired any thing above the ordinary nature of men, and their expectation. Natural conſcience cannot but ſtoop and do homage to the image of God ſtamped upon his people; as being afraid of that name of God whereby they are called, Deut. 28. 10. There are that think that theſe ſouldiers, our Saviours executioners, were truly converted by the miracles they had ſeen, according to what Chriſt had prayed for them, Luk. 23. 34. And it may very well be: like as Paul was converted upon Saints Stevens prayer; as Juſtin Martyr and others were, by beholding the piety and patience of the Primitive Chriſtians, and as James Silveſter executioner at the Martyrdome of Simon Laloe at Dyjon. He ſeeing the great faith and conſtancy of that Heavenly Martyr, was ſo compuncted with repentance (ſaith Mr. Fox,) and fell into ſuch deſpair of himſelf, that they had much ado to faſten any comfort on him, with all the promiſes of the Goſpel: till at length he recovered, repented, and with all his family, removed to the Church of Geneva: Chriſtians have ſhewed us glorious power (and have as good ſucceſs) in the faith of Martyrdome, as in the faith of miracles; working wonders thereby upon thoſe that have ſought and ſuckt their blood.

Ὁ δ' ἑκατόνταρχος καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ τηροῦντες τὸν Ἰησοῦν, ἰδόντες τὸν σεισμὸν καὶ τὰ γενόμενα, ἐφοβήθησαν σφόδρα, λέγοντες, Ἀληθῶς θεοῦ υἱὸς ἦν οὗτος. Centurio autem, & qui cum eo erant, cuſtodientes Jeſum, viſo terræmotu & his quæ fiebant, timuerunt valde, dicentes, Vere filius Dei erat iſte. Matth. 27. 54. Centurio vero, & qui cum eo erant, obſervantes Jeſum, viſo terræmotu & his quæ fiebant, timuerunt valde, dicentes, Vere filius Dei erat iſte. Luk. 23. 47. Videns autem Centurio quod ſic clamaſſet expirans, dixit, Vere homo iſte filius Dei erat. Mar. 15. 39. Ὁ δὲ ἑκατόνταρχος ἰδὼν τὸ γενόμενον ἐδόξαζε τὸν θεὸν, λέγων, Ὄντως ὁ ἄνθρωπος οὗτος δίκαιος ἦν. Centurio autem, cum vidiſſet quod factum fuerat, glorificabat Deum, dicens, Certe homo iſte juſtus erat. Luk. 23. 47.

Verſe 55. And many women were there] More hardy then the Diſciples, who all, ſave John, were fled and hid. Oh ſtand (ſaith a Divine,) and behold a little, with thoſe devout women, the body of thy Saviour, hanging upon the croſs. See him afflicted from top to toe. See him wounded in the head, to heal our vain imaginations. See him wounded in the hands, to heal our evil actions. See him wounded in the heart, to cure our vain thoughts. See his eyes ſhut up, that did enlighten the world: See them ſhut, that thine might be turned from ſeeing of vanity. See that countenance ſo goodly to behold, ſpetted upon and buffetted, that thy face might ſhine glorious as the Angels in heaven, &c. See the Note on Job. 19. 25.

Beholding afar off] Either out of womanly modeſty, or weakneſs of faith; which, when it is in heart, is able by its native puiſſance to pull the very heart as it were out of hell, and with confidence and conqueſt to look even death, and the devil in the face; as we ſee in Anne Askew, Alice Driver, and other brave women, that ſuffered ſtoutly for Chriſt.

Verſe 56. Among which was Mary Magdalen] Love is ſtrong as death: good blood will never bely it ſelf. Mary alſo the mother of Ieſus was there, ſitting with the ſword thorow her heart, that old Simeon had forehight her. See Joh. 19. 26, 27. with the Note upon that text.

Verſe 57. A rich man of Arimathæa] Not many ſuch, tis well there are any. Joſeph was a Counſellour, a Senatour, one of the Sanedrim or ſeventy Seniours. Chriſt finds friends in the moſt tempeſtuous times and unlikely places; as in Ahabs and Nero's court. Some good Obadiah, or Oneſiphorus, to ſeek out Paul the priſoner, and refreſh his bowels. Serena the Empreſs, wife to Diocleſian that bloody perſecutor, was a Chriſtian, and a great friend to the true Religion. So was the Lady Anne (wife to our King Richard the ſecond,) a diſciple of Wickliff; whoſe books alſo ſhe conveyed over into Bohemia her countrey, whereby a good foundation was laid for the enſuing Reformation. John of Gaunt ſhewed himſelf a great favourer of Wickliff: The like did the Electour of Saxony for Luther. George Marqueſs of Brandenburg, in a meeting of the Emperour and States at Ausborough, zealouſly profeſſed that he would rather kneel down preſently in the preſence of them all, and yield his head to be ſtruck off by the Executioner, then deny Chriſt and his Goſpel.

to wax bold, Mark. 15. 43. the Spaniards, they say, abhor dangers, never adventuring upon hard enterprizes, but aiming to proceed securely. Christs disciples must speak and do boldly in the Lord, Act. 14. 3. whatever come of it. Audendo Graci pervenere Trojam. Alexander never attempted any thing, but he conceived it might be done, and he did it. Historians ascribe most of his success, to his courage; and tell us, that having a souldier of his own name in his army whom he knew to be a coward, he commanded him either to change his name, or shew his valour. So saith Christ to all his Iosephs and Nicodemusses; either play the men, or pretend not to me.

Verse 59. He wrapped it in a clean linnen cloth] Which he had bought new for the purpose, saith Saint Mark, to his no small cost: for linnen in those dayes was precious, so that an hankerchief among even the Roman riotours, was a rich token, as appears out of the Poet. Neither did this rich man lose his cost; for he is and shall be famous for it to the worlds end: though every body be not at leasure to do as Palæottus Archbishop of Bonony did, who wrote a great book of the shadow of Christs body in Iosephs new syndon; which was also commented upon by the Professor of Divinity there.

Verse 60. And laid it in his own new tomb] His own, which was now well warmed, sweetned and sanctified by our Saviours body, against himself should be laid there; as afterwards he might, and probably was too. A new tomb it was; and fit it should be for that virgin-body, or maiden-corps, as one calls it, untoucht and untainted. Besides, else it might have been suspected, that not Christ but another arose; or if he, yet not by his own, but by anothers vertue: like him who revived at the touching of the bones of dead Elisha, 2 King. 13. Buried our Saviour was. 1. That none might doubt of his death. 2. That our sins might be buried with him. 3. That our graves might be prepared and perfumed for us, as so many beds of roses, or delicious dormitories, Isa. 57. 2. He was buried in Calvary, to note that he died for the condemned: and in a garden, to expiate that first sin committed in the garden: and in another mans sepulchre, to note that he died for other mens sins, as some will have it. Helena, mother of Constantine the great, bestowed great cost in repairing this sepulchre of our Saviour, which the Heathens out of hatred to Christ had thrown down, and built a temple to Venus on the same ground. And Ierusalem, that poor ruinous city, being governed by one of the Turks Sanzacks, is for nothing now more famous then for the sepulchre of our Saviour again repaired, and much visited by the superstitious sort of Christians, and not unreverenced by the Turks themselves.

Which he had hewen out in the rock] For his own use. See the like 1 King. 13. 30. The Thebans had a Law that no man should make an house for himself to dwel in, but he should make first his grave. Charls the 5. Emperour, five years before he died, even when he was employed in his greatest affairs, caused a sepulchre to be made, with all things appertaining to it, necessary for his burial; and that secretly, lest it might be taken for ostentation or hypocrisie: Which things he had closely carried with him whithersoever he went five years together; some thinking there had been some great treasure in it: some other that there had been books of old stories: some thought one thing, some another. But the Emperour smiling, said, that he carried it about him, to mind him of his death.

And he rolled a great stone] Either for an inscription to the sepulchre, or for more safety to the body, or that the glory of the resurrection might be the greater, or all these together.

Verse 61. And there was Mary Magdalen] Carefully watching where they laid the Lords body, that they might not leave off their kindness to him living or dead, as she said of Boaz, Ruth 2. 20. Heavy they were as heart could hold: yet not hindred thereby from doing their duty to Christ. So Daniel, though sick, yet did the Kings business. Even sorrow for sin, if it so exceed, as to disable us for duty, is a sinful sorrow, and must be sortowed for.

Verse 62. Now the next day that followed] That is, on that high-day, that double Sabbath; they that had so oft quarrelled Christ for curing on the Sabbath, request a servile work to be done, of securing and sealing up the sepulchre. It is a common proverb, Mortui non mordent, Dead men bite not. But here Christ, though dead and buried, bites and beats hard upon these evil mens consciences. They could not rest the whole night afore, for fear he should get out of the grave some way: and so create them fur-further trouble. Scipio appointed his ſepulcher to be ſo placed, as his image ſtanding upon it might look directly toward Africa: that being dead, he might ſtill be a terror to the Carthaginians. And Cadwallo, an ancient King of this Iſland, commanded his dead body to be embalmed, and put into a brazen image, and ſo ſet upon a brazen horſe over Ludgate, for a terrour to the Saxons. It is well known that Ziſca, that brave Bohemian, charged his Taborites to flea his corps, and head a drum with his skin; the ſound whereof as oft as the enemies heard, they ſhould be appaled and put to flight. And our Edward the firſt, adjured his ſon and Nobles, that if he died in his journey into Scotland, they ſhould carry his corps about with them, and not ſuffer it to be interred till they had vanquiſhed the Uſurper, and ſubdued the countrey. Something like to this, the Prophet Iſaiah foretelleth of our Saviour (and we ſee it here accompliſhed) when he ſaith, In that day the root of Jeſſe ſhall ſtand up for an enſign to the people, and even his reſt (or, as ſome read it, his ſepulcher,) ſhall be glorious. There are that think that theſe words, The day that followed the day of the preparation, are put ironically, or rather by way of a facetious jeſting Aſteiſmos, againſt the hypocritical ſabbatiſm of the High-prieſts, who would ſo worky-day-like, beg the body, ſeal the ſepulcher, and ſet the watch on that Sabbath, for the which they ſeemed to prepare ſo devoutly before it came. Iſa. 11.10.

Verſe 63. Sir, we remember, &c.] They that had forgotten ſo many ſweet and ſavoury ſayings of our bleſſed Saviour, and written them all in the ſand, could remember (but for no good purpoſe,) that which his diſciples could not ſo readily call to mind for their good and comfort; no nor underſtand it, when plainly told them, Mark. 9.32. The ſoul ſhould be as an holy Ark, the memory as the pot of Mannah, preſerving holy truths, for holy uſes. But moſt men have memories like nets, that let go the clear water, catch nothing but ſticks, and refuſe-ſtuff; or like ſieves, that retain the chaff, let go the good corn: like the creature Cervarius, that if he but look back, forgets the meat he was eating, though never ſo hungry, and ſeeks for new: or Sabinus in Seneca, who never in all his life could get by heart thoſe three names of Homer, Ulyſſes and Achilles. Old ſongs, old wrongs, &c. they can retain ſufficiently; but in matters of God, their memories ſerve them not.

This deceiver ſaid] Men muſe as they uſe. Quis tulerit Gracchos? who can endure to hear the devil taxing God of envy, as he did to our firſt parents? or theſe deceitful workers calling the Faithful and true Witneſs, a deceiver, a cheater, one who doth profeſs an art of coſening men to their faces? for ſo the greek word ſignifieth. We muſt look to hear all that naught is, either whiles alive, or when dead. Melanchon mortuus, tantum non ut blaſphemus in deum, cruci affigitur, ſaith Zanchy: and all becauſe he pleaſed not, in all points, the peeviſh Lutherans. In like manner many lewd opinions were fathered upon John Wickliff after he was dead; yea ſome that were monſtrous and diobolical, as that men ought, yea that God himſelf ought to obey the devil, &c. And this famous Doctor dying of a palſie, hath this charitable Eulogy or Epitaph beſtowed upon him by a Monk, The devils inſtrument, Churches enemy, peoples confuſion, hereticks idol, hypocrites mirrour, ſchiſms broacher, hatreds ſower, lyes forger, flatteries ſink: who at his death deſpaired like Cain, and ſtricken by the horrible judgement of God, breathed forth his wicked ſoul to the dark manſions of the black devil. The ſervant is not greater then his Maſter. Him they called Beelzebub, Samaritan, (that is Conjurer) Traitour, and here Deceiver. But what a mouth of blaſphemy opened that Pſeudo-Chriſtian, Emperour Frederick the ſecond, who was heard oft to ſay that there had been three notorious Impoſtors who had cheated the world, viz., Moſes, Chriſt and Mahomet? Leſt his diſciples come by night] A moſt vain, and yet a moſt vexing fear, ſuch as was that of Herod after he had beheaded John Baptiſt: he thought he heard that holy head ever ſhouting and crying out againſt him, for his cruelty. This is John Baptiſt, ſaid he, (when he heard the fame of Ieſus,) whom I have beheaded, Ex. 23.28. I will ſend the hornet, ſaith saith God, before thee. What was that hornet, but the misgiving fear of the Canaanites self condemning consciences, that haunted them perpetually? So here.

Verse 65. Pilate said unto them] He was willing to please both sides: and therefore condescends both to Joseph of Arimathæa for his burial, and to the Priests for securing the sepulcher. Κοινοφιλὴς erat utpote qui ab omnibus gratiam inire cupiebat: quales quidam per jocum placentas dixit. But if I yet please men, saith Paul, as once I did when I was a Pharisee, I am no more the servant of Christ: He scorns that such base counterfaisance should be found in his followers. Mordecai will not crouch or curry favour, to dye for it. Micaiah will not budge, though sure to kiss the stocks for his stiffness.

Gal. 1. 10.

Colos. 2. 8.

Ye have a watch] Appointed for the use and service of the Temple, a band of garrison-souldiers who had their captain, Act. 4. 1. and are here set to watch that true Temple, wherein the Godhead dwelt bodily, i. e. personally.

Verse 66. So they went and made the sepulcher sure] And now they seemed to dance upon Christs grave, as thinking themselves cock-sure of him. So did those bloody tyrants of the Primitive times (who proudly engraved upon pillars of marble, Nomine Christianorum deleto, qui Remp. evertebant,) make no other reckoning, but to raze out the name of Christ from under heaven. Therefore also they did not onely constitute laws and proclamations against Christians, but did engrave the same laws in tables of brass; meaning to make all things firm for ever and a day. But he that sat in heaven, and said, Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Sion, laughed at them, Jehovah had them in derision. Look how Daniel was innocently condemned, cast into the Lions den, had the door sealed upon him, and to see to, no hope or means of life was left him; and yet, by Gods good providence, he came forth untouched, and was made a greater man then ever; So our blessed Saviour was innocently condemned, cast into the grave, sealed up among the dead, and to common judgement left as out of mind: yet early in the morning, at the time appointed by the power of his deity, he raised himself from death, and gloriously triumphed over it and hell. Now thanks be unto God which also causeth us to triumph in Christ, having as prisoners of hope, brought us out of the pit by the blood of the covenant, Zach. 9. 11, 12.

Chap. XXVIII.

Verse 1. The first day of the week.]

Εἰς μίαν σαββάτων.

Greek, of the Sabbaths. One day of seven is due to God of necessity. This the Scripture calls by an excellency, the Sabbath day, without a difference: as if it were the eldest brother to all the dayes of the week, which is called here and elsewhere Sabbaths, in the plurall, Psal. 24. title, A Psalm of David. To this the Greek addeth, Of the first day of the week, which now is the Christian Sabbath, called the Lords day, in honour of Christ, and in a thankful remembrance of his resurrection. See the Note on John 20. 1.

Revel. 1.

To see the sepulcher] To see what the Pharisees had done with the Lords body the day before (for they knew they had been tampering, & feared the worst, as love is suspitious) and to bring the spices, which by an easie errour, they had prepared, Luk. 24. 1. They knew not, belike, that Joseph and Nicodemus had been at that cost and pains before them; neither did any of them consider that what they did herein was superfluous, for that it was impossible for Gods holy one to see corruption. But he is pleased to pass by our well-meant weaknesses, where the heart is upright.

Acts 2.

Verse 2. And behold, &c] The holy Ghost here calls for as great attention, as if we had been present and seen it. Remember (saith Saint Paul) that Jesus Christ of the seed of David, was raised from the dead, according to my Gospel. All the four Evangelists have therefore punctually recorded it, that we may remember and ruminate it, as a main remarkable.

2 Tim. 2. 8.

There was a great earth-quake] Pythagoras said the reason of earthquakes was, the meeting of the dead: An odd conceit. But the true reason of this earthquake, was our Saviours rising from the dead, in despite of infernal spirits, who therefore quaked as much as the earth did, as Hilary hath it. The earth shook both at Christs passion, and at his resurrection: Then, to shew that it could not bear his suffering: Now, to shew that it could not hinder his rising. Resurgente virtutum cœlestium domino infernorum trepidatio commovetur. Hilar.

Rolled back the stone] As an Officer sent to let Christ our of prison, without the keepers consent.

And sat upon it] In contempt of all their weapons, which fell out of their hands for wo, at the sight of the Angel. And as a mighty man when he sits down, shakes the bench under him, so do these the earth.

Verse 3. His countenance was like lightning] So that though he appeared in humane shape, yet it might easily appear that he was more then a man: his visage shewed his power, his habit his innocency, to the terror of the keepers, and comfort of the women.

Verse 4. The keepers did shake] And well they might, as coming to see they had born arms against God, and were therefore obnoxious to his wrath. It is a feareful thing to fall into the punishing hands of the living God here: How then will wicked men bear the horror of the last day? When they shall have an angry God over them, Hell gaping beneath them, an accusing conscience within them, the world all on a light fire about them, the elements melting like scalding lead upon them, the good Angels testifying against them, Job 20.27. the evil Angels waiting to worry them, and hurry them to hell? Oh the unspeakable akings and quakings of heart! the terrible apprehensions, the convulsions of spirit that shall seize and surprize them at that dreadfull day!

Verse 5. Fear not ye] As the wicked are forbidden to rejoyce for joy as other people, Hos. 9.1. So the godly to fear, so long as they have Christ by the hand; no, though the earth be removed, and the mountains cast into the midst of the sea. David would not fear the shadow of death, the darkest side of death, death in its most hideous and horrid representations, because God was with him: When Manasseh, that faced the Heavens in his prosperity, in trouble basely hides his head among the bushes, and is therehence fet, and bound with fetters. These desperate souldiers run away as dastards, when the women stand it out, and as true daughters of faithful Sarah, they are not afraid with any amazement. Psal. 46.2. Psal. 23.3. 2 Chron. 33. 14. 1 Pet 3.6.

I know that ye seek Jesus] God and his Angels know our goodness, why then should we hunt after mens applause? Cæsar hoc ipso veram laudem meruit, quod falsam contempsit, saith Lipsius: It should suffice us, to know, that our faith, how little soever seen or set by the world, shall be found to praise, and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ, 1 Pet. 1.7. The eclipsed Moon shall by degrees wade out of the shadow.

Verse 6. He is not here] q.d. You are much mistaken, and deserve to be chidden for your not crediting, or at least, your not remembring, that he foretold you of his resurrection. All which notwithstanding, Come see the place, &c. q. d. believe your own eyes at least. Hilaris est hæc & plena gaudio invitatio, saith an Interpreter. What marvel then though they departed with fear for their faithlesness, and joy for the good news the Angels had told, and shewd them?

For he is risen] Consentaneum est Phœnicem ante postremum annum Neronis, significâsse Resurrectionem Christi, & omnium credentium, ex morte receptâ divinitùs vitâ. The Phœnix is a fit embleme of the Resurrection. Dio in Nerone.

Verse 7. And go quickly] Angels are called Seraphims for their burning zeal: and are said to be winged creatures for their speediness in serving God and his people. Gabriel wearied himself, as it were, with swift flight, to certifie Daniel of his good acceptance in Heaven. And this Angel bids these women go quickly and carry the good news of the resurrection. Neither God nor Angels can abide oscitancy and dulness in any. Tardis mentibus virtus non facilè committitur, could the Heathen say. Dan. 9. 21. Cicer. 5. to Tusc.

Tell his Disciples] And Peter with the first, Mark 16.7. because he is most dejected (and it is God that comforteth those that are cast down, 2 Cor. 7.6. the Lyon of the Tribe of Judah spareth the prostrate prey) the rest are in their dumps, as well they may, for deserting Christ; but Peter especially for denying him. Now therefore, that he is in a wilderness of ploddings and perplexities, Christ speaks to his heart, Hos. 2.14. He loves to comfort those that are forsaken of their hopes. Satis est prostrasse leoni.

Lo, I have told you] q.d. Be gone now about your busines: you have your full errand, and this is all I have at present to say to you. These good women, at first afraid of the Angel, are now hardly perswaded to depart from him: They could have been content to have heard him further. How unspeakably delicious unto us shall be that innumerable company of Angels, Heb. 12.22. that World of Angels, as the Hebrew Doctors call it, that Panegyris or Congregation-house of the first-born, enrolled in Heaven as free denisons? O præclarum illum diem cum ad illud animorum concilium cœtumq; proficiscar, &c. said the Heathen Orator.

Verse 8. And they departed quickly] According as they were bidden. A ready heart makes riddance of Gods work, and does it up quickly, as afraid to be taken with its task undone. Baruch repaired earnestly, and had done quickly, *Neh.*3.20. Alexander being asked how he had so soon over-run so many Countreys? answered roundly, by making quick work, by dispatching, and not lingering long in a place.

Μηδὲν ἀναβαλλόμενος. Plut.

With fear and great joy] A strange composition, of two contrary passions: but frequently found in the best hearts, *Psal.*2.11. God loves at once familiarity and fear.

Verse 9. Jesus met them] En obedientiæ præmium, timoris remedium, saith Parens. God still meets his people in the use of his ordinances, shewing them great and mighty things that they knew not before, *Jer.*33.3.

Held him by the feet] As those that would loose him no more; The Saints do still the same by faith; clasping about Christ and cleaving unto him, as it were by corporal contact.

Verse 10. Go tell my brethren] Brethren still, though foully fallen, *Jer.*3.1. Infirmities discard us not, if bewailed, disclaimed, set against.

Verse 11. Some of the Watch came into the City] God would have the point of the Resurrection well proved, for our better settlement, in so weighty a matter. The Priests were unworthy to hear of it by an Angel: they shall hear of it therefore by the profane souldiers, who come in to them much affrighted, and thunder-struck, as it were, and told them all. Now the confession of an Adversary is held in Law to be the most certain demonstration of the truth, that can be.

Verse 12. They gave large money] q.d. We know that you Souldiers are good fellows, and both love and lack money. Now if you will but say thus and thus, you shall have a round sum payd you down in ready cash, &c. And what will not such men say or do for money? Pecunia avidos fecit, forma mendacii industrios, jam illa promissio temerarios, saith Aretius.

Verse 13. Stole him away while we slept] If it were so, 1. Ye kept a good watch the while; and wanted some Epaminondas to slay you for sleeping. 2. If all asleep, who told you his Disciples stole him? did you sleep waking, as Lyons do? or did they make so little noyse that you never heard them about it? as Sir Francis Drake, at Tarapasa in the West-Indies, found a Spaniard sleeping securely upon the shore; and by him thirteeen wedges of silver, which he commanded to be carryed away, not so much as once waking the man. Surely here it was neither so, nor so: but the Devil, who began at first his Kingdom by lying, and by lying still upholds it, set these fellows awork to say, as they were taught, any thing for money, though never so absurd and false. But money got on this manner will prove aurum Tolosanum, burn in thy purse, and bring Gods curse upon all thy substance.

*Camd. Elizab. fol.*222.

Verse 14. We will perswade him, and secure you] Hypocrites have enough, if they can collogue with men, and escape the lash of the Law. God is not in all their thoughts, or they think they can perswade him, and secure themselves. Hence that overflow of sin, through hope of impunity, and abundance of Atheism.

Psal.14.3.

Verse 15. So they took the money] So sequacious are such men to sin, where any thing is to be got by it. Balaam will venture hard for the wages of wickedness. Set but a wedge of gold in sight, and Joshuah, that could stop the Sun in his course, cannot stay Achan from fingering it.

And this saying is commonly reported] They were given up to believe this lie, because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved, 2 Thess. 2.10. There are that sense it otherwise. This saying is commonly reported; that is, this vile imposture of the Priests and Souldiers, wretchedly conspiring to cozen the world with such a base lie, is sufficiently known for a piece of knavery, and is so resented to this

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION Upon the GOSPEL according to S^t. Mark.

CHAP. I.

Verse 1. The beginning of the Gospel,&c.]

THE History of our Saviours life and death, Saint Mark is recorded to have written at the request of the Romans: In the Latin tongue say some (who pretend to have seen the Original Copie at Venice) but its more likely in Greek, a tongue (then) very well known to the Romans also. He begins with Johns Ministry, passing over Christs birth and private life for brevity sake (as it may seem) though, Papists feign many idle relations thereof, and so expose us to the jears of Jewish and Turkish miscreants. There are that make Mark an Epitomator of Matthew. But forasmuch as he neither begins like Matthew, nor keeps the same order, but relateth some things that Matthew hath not, and other things much larger then Matthew hath them; judicious Calvin thinks that he had not seen Saint Matthews Gospel, when he wrote his (as neither had Saint Luke seen either of them:) but that, being acted by the same spirit, they agree so harmoniously and happily; an undoubted argument of the Divinity of the Scripture, which therefore a Greek Father cals πανταχόθεν πᾶν, every way sutable to its self.

Verse 2. As it is written in the Prophets] Esay and Malachi: so that there was no cause why that dead Dog Prophyrie should here bark and blaspheme, as if this testimony should be falsely fathered on all the Prophets, when Esay only was the Author of it.

Behold I send my Messenger before thy face] Malachi saith, Before my face, in the person of Christ: to shew that He and the Father are One.

of the Baptiſt, which the Author to the Hebrews begins at the preaching of Chriſt, *Heb.*2.3. But that is onely to prove that ſo great was our Saviours glory in his Miracles, that it matcheth, yea ſurpaſſeth that of the Angels, thoſe Miniſters of the Law. The ridiculous parallel of Apollonius Tyaneus with our Saviour by Hierocles, and the malicious exceptions of R. Nizachon againſt his doings and Miracles, are fully anſwered by Euſebius and Munſter, Annot. in Mat. Hebraice. As for John Baptiſt, he profeſſeth himſelf to be no more then a Voyce: And ſo indeed he was Totus Vox, All Voyce. His Apparel, his Dyet, his Converſation did preach holineſs as well as his Doctrine, *Mar.*6.20. Joh. 5.25.

Verſe 4. John did Baptiſe in the Wilderneſs] Like as at the promulgation of the Law, the people were commanded to waſh their Garments, and ſanctifie themſelves: ſo at the firſt publication of the Goſpel, to waſh their hands, and cleanſe their hearts; and in teſtimony or profeſſion thereof, to believe and be baptiſed for remiſſion of ſins.

Verſe 5. All the Land of Judæa] That is, a great ſort of them: but John quickly grew ſtale to them, John 5. 35. Principium fervet, medium tepet, exitus alget. Weak Chriſtians eaſily fall off, as leaves in Autumn, or untimely figs, *Rev.*6.13.

Verſe 6. And John was clothed, &c.] Elias alſo was a rough hairy man. Thoſe Worthies, of whom the world was not worthy, wandered about in Sheeps skins and Goats skins, *Heb.*11. but they were like the Ark, Goats hair without, but pure Gold within: Plutarch. or like Brutus his ſtaff, Cujus intus ſolidum aurum corneo velabatur cortice. Buchanan Peachams comp. Gentlem. ſeldom cared for a better out-ſide, then a rug-gown girt cloſe about him, yet his inſide was moſt rich.

He did eat Locuſts] Good meat (to thoſe there at leaſt) though courſe, and eaſily come by. Tartarians eat the Carrion-carcaſſes of Horſes, Camels, Aſſes, Cats, Dogs, Peach. Vally. yea, when they ſtink, and are full of Magots; and hold them as dainty, as we do Veniſon.

Verſe 7. I am not worthy] So Jacob cryed out of old: So the Centurion, *Matth.*8. So the Prodigal, *Luk.*15. So Peter, Luke 5.8. So Auguſtin, Domine, non ſum dignus quem tu diligas. I am not worthy of thy love Lord.

Verſe 8. With the holy Ghoſt] By whom your iniquity is taken away, Eſay 6.6,7. See the Note on *Mat.*3.11.

Verſe 9. In thoſe days] When the people flocked ſo faſt to John; that they might not miſtake him for the Meſſias, and that his Baptiſm might be the more famous.

Verſe 10. He ſaw the Heavens opened] The viſible Heavens: ſo that the Baptiſt ſaw ſomething above the Stars: So did Steven; ſo could Chriſt when he was upon the Burton of Melancholy. earth. It is a juſt wonder that we can look up to ſo admirable an height of the Starry-Sky, and that the eye is not tyred in the way: Some ſay it is five hundred years journey to it. Other Mathematicians tell us, that if a ſtone ſhould fall from the eighth Sphear, and ſhould paſs every day an hundred miles, it would be 65 years or more, before it would come to ground.

εὐδόκησεν. Gratificavit. vulgat. Verſe 11. In whom I am well pleaſed] And in him with us, whom he hath made gracious or Favourites in him the beloved One, *Epheſ.*1.5.

Verſe 12. The ſpirit driveth him] That is, ſuddenly carrieth him (who was moſt willing to go) as that legal ſcape-Goat, *Num.*16. into the Wilderneſs; and there permitted him to be tempted, but ſupported him under the temptation, that he came ſafe off again. Sancti etiam nequaquam ſui juris ſunt, ſed toti ſpiritus cedunt imperio. The Saints are at Gods beck and check.

Verſe 13. And was with the wild beaſts] Unhurt by them: as Adam was in the ſtate of integrity. Theſe fell creatures ſaw in Chriſt the perfect image of God; and therefore reverenced him as their Lord, as they did Adam before his fall, See Job 5.21,22.

Verſe 14. Jeſus came into Galilee] To decline Herods rage. And whereas it may ſeem that our Saviour herein took a wrong courſe, ſith Herod was Governour of Galilee; we muſt know, that the Phariſees were the men that delivered up John to Herod, *Mat.*17.11,12. And that but for them, there was no great fear of Herod.

Verſe 15. And ſaying, The time is fulfilled] Theſe were four of our Saviours Sermon-Calvin. in Iſaiam. heads. The Prophets of old were wont to ſet down ſome ſhort notes of their larger diſcourſes to the people, & to faſten them to the doors of the Temple, till the people had read them. And then they were taken down by the Prieſts, and laid up for the uſe of poſterity.

Repent

Digitized by Google

Repent ye and believe, &c.] Repentance then is a Goſpel-duty, and (as ſome argue from this Text) before faith; the proper purchaſe of Chriſts blood, Act. 5.31. Indeed, Faith and Repentance keep up a Chriſtians life (ſaith a learned man) as the natural heat and radical moyſture do the natural life. Faith is like the innate heat: Repentance like the natural moyſture. And as the Phyloſopher ſaith, If the innate heat devour too much the radical moyſture, or on the contrary, there breed preſently diſeaſes: ſo if believing make a man repent leſs, or repenting make a man believe leſs, this turneth to a diſtemper. Lord caſt me down (ſaid a holy man upon his death bed) as low as Hell in repentance: and lift me up by Faith into the higheſt heavens, in confidence of thy ſalvation.

Verſe 16, 17, 18, 19, 20.] See the Notes on Matth. 4.18, &c.

Verſe 21. He entred into the Synagogue, and taught] This is noted as remarkable in Saint Mark, that he often inculcateth that our Saviour taught.

Verſe 22. And they were aſtoniſhed] If it could be ſaid of Dr. Whitaker, that no man ever ſaw him without reverence, or heard him without wonder; How much more of Chriſt, ſith grace was poured into his lips? Pſal. 45.2. D. Hall's Epiſt. decad. 1. Ep. 7.

As one that had authority] Seeſt thou a Preacher deliver the Word with ſingular authority (as Paul, we believe therefore we ſpeak) eſteem him very highly for the works ſake. The Corinthians are checkt, for that they were unruly, and would raign without Paul, 1 Cor. 4. Zedekiah is blamed, 2 Chron. 36.12. becauſe he humbled not himſelf before Jeremiah a poor Prophet, ſpeaking to him from the Lord.

And not as the Scribes] Frigidly and jejunely. Didſt thou believe thy ſelf, thou wouldſt never plead thy Clients cauſe ſo coldly and careleſly, ſaid Cicero to his Adverſary.

Verſe 23. With an unclean ſpirit] Gr. In an unclean ſpirit. An unregenerate man is in maligno poſitus, as S. John ſaith of the world. He is inverſus decalogus: whole evil is in man, and whole man in evil, till at laſt (without grace) he be ſatanized and tranſformed into a breathing Devil. By reaſon of the inhabitation of unclean ſpirits, our ſpirits have in them Trenches, Cages, Forts and ſtrong holds of Satan, 2 Cor. 10.4. ἐν πνεύματι ἀκαθάρτῳ. 1 John 5.19.

Verſe 24. What have we to do with thee?] Not to do with Chriſt, and yet vex a ſervant of Chriſt? Could the Devil ſo miſtake him, whom he confeſſed? It is an idle miſpriſion, to ſever the ſenſe of an injury done to any of the members, from the head.

Thou Jeſus of Nazareth] Though the Devils confeſſed Chriſt to be the Holy One of God, yet they call him Jeſus of Nazareth; to nouriſh the error of the multitude that thought he was born there, and ſo, not the Meſſias. Neither did the Devils cunning fail him herein, as appears, John 7.44.

Art thou come to deſtroy us?] Before the time: ſuch is the infinite goodneſs of God, that he reſpites even wicked men and ſpirits, the utmoſt of their torments.

I know thee who thou art] This he ſpake, not to honour Chriſt, but to denigrate him, as commended by ſo lying a ſpirit. Laudari ab illaudato, non eſt laus, ſaith Seneca.

The holy One of God] Some reſt in prayſing the Sermon, and ſpeaking fair to the Preacher. The Devil here did as much to Chriſt, to be rid of him. So did Herod. Mark. 6.20.

Verſe 25. Hold thy peace] Capiſtrator, be thou haltered up, or muzled. Chriſt would not hear good words from an evil mouth. High words become not a fool, ſaith Solomon. The Lepers lips ſhould be covered according to the Law. φιμώθητι.

Verſe 26. And when the unclean ſpirit had torn him] So he will ſerve all that he is now at Inn with, as Bradford hath it. You are the Devils birds (ſaith he to all wicked ones) whom when he hath well fed, he will broach you, and eat you, chaw you and champ you, world without end, in eternal wo and miſery. Serm. of Rep. pag. 70.

And cryed with a loud voyce] But ſaid nothing: according to verſe 25.

He came out of him] With as ill a will goes the worldlings ſoul out of his body. God tears it out, as Job ſomewhere hath it, death makes forcible entry. Job 27. 8.

Verſe 27. For with Authority] As he taught, ſo he wrought with Authority. The ſame word is uſed verſe 22. ἐξουσία.

Verſe 28. His fame ſpred] Thoſe that do worthily in Ephrata, ſhall be famous in Bethlehem, Ruth. 4. 11. Cicero worthily preferreth Cato before Socrates, quoniam hujus Cic. de Amicitia.

hujus dicta, illius facta laudantur. But our Lord Christ was mighty both in *deed and word, Luk.*24.19.

Verse 29. They entred into the house] Happy house in such a guest. If Elizabeth held it so great a matter, that the Mother of her Lord should come unto her; what may Peter think, sith the Lord himself comes to give him a visit?

Verse 31. The fever left her] For Christ (the great Centurion that hath the command of all diseases, *Mat.*8.9.) had rebuked it, *Luk.*4.39. as once he did the red Sea, *Psal.*106.9. which therefore fled, *Psal.*114.3.

Verse 32. When the Sun did set] And the Sabbath was ended; for till then many held it not lawful.

Verse 33. All the City] i.e. The sick folk in the City, by a Synecdoche. As, all that were in debt or distress came to David, and he received them: So all that were diseased came to this Son of David, and he relieved them.

Verse 34. Suffered not the Devils to speak] For what calling had they to preach the Gospel?

Verse 35. And in the morning,&c.] The fittest time for prayer, or any serious business. Therefore not onely *David, Psal.*5.3. and other Saints, but also Heathens chose the morning chiefly for Sacrifice: as Nestor in Homer, the Argonauts in Apollonius. The Persian Magi sang Hymns to their gods at break of day, and worshipped the rising Sun. The Pinarii and Potitii sacrificed every morning and evening to Hercules, upon the great Altar at Rome,&c. Men should rise betimes on the Sabbath day especially, both the better to prepare for the publike, as also to consecrate as much time as they can. *Psal.*92.2. *Exod.*19. Shall Philistims be up betimes to go to see Dagon, Papists to Mattens, Israel to dance before their golden calf, Exod. 32.5,6. young men to go a Maying, ringing,&c. worldlings to their Markets, fairs, by peep of day; and shall Christians lie bathing in their beds on their Lords day?

Verse 36. Followed after him] Gr. Followed hard after him, as Davids soul did after God, *Psal.*63.8. and as Gods grace did after *David, Psal.*23.6.

Verse 37. All men seek for thee] But few seek Christ seriously, seasonably, sincerely. Hence so many miss of him: Vix quæritur Jesus propter Jesum. All men seek themselves, and not the things of Jesus Christ. *Phil.*2.21.

Verse 38. Let us go into the next Towns] The neighbouring Burroughs, such as were between a City and a Town. Though secret prayer were sweet to our Saviour, yet he left it to preach and profit many.

Verse 39. In their Synagogues] Which were as Chapples of Ease, or petty-Parish-Churches, belonging to the Temple, as the Cathedral. In these it was lawful to pray, preach and dispute, but not to sacrifice, *Act.*15.21.

Verse 40. Beseeching him, &c:] Morbi virtutum officina, saith Ambrose. We are best, when we are worst, saith another. Therefore King Alured prayed God to send him alwayes some sickness.

CHAP. II.

Verse 1. And it was noised.]

THe Son of righteousnes could as little lie hid, as the Sun in Heaven.

Verse 2. Many were gathered together] Erasmus observeth, that Origen, in his Sermons to the people, chideth them for nothing more, then for their thin assemblies to hear the Word, and for their careless hearing of that, which they ought to attend to with utmost diligence: recte judicans, saith he, hinc esse præcipium pietatis profectum aut defectum. Erasm. in vitâ Orig. operib. præfix.

Verse 3. Which was born of four] Apprehensis quatuor lecti extremitatibus, vivo cadaveri persimilis. Wicked men are living ghosts, walking Sepulchers of themselves. Bring them to Christ that they may be cured.

Verse 4. They uncovered the roof] Which in those Countreys was flat; so that they might walk upon it, Deut. 22. 8. preach upon it, Mat. 10. 27, &c.

Verse 5. When he saw their faith] By their works; as the goodnes of the promised Land was known by the grapes and fruits, brought back by the Spyes. In all our good works, Christs eye is upon our faith, without which, it's impossible to please God.

Verse 6. But there were certain of the Scribes] Little do Preachers know when they preach, what hearers sit before them. Aranea fel est, quod api mel. Some of our hearers carry fel in aure, as its said of some creatures, they carry their gall in their ears.

Verse 7. Who can forgive sins, &c?] Man may remit the trespass, God onely the transgression.

Verse 8. Perceived in his spirit] That is, by his Deity, as 1 Tim. 3. 16. Heb. 9. 14. Or, by his own spirit, as 1 Pet. 3. 8. not by inspiration, as 2 Pet. 1. 21.

Verse 9.] See the Note on Mat. 9. 5.

Verse 10. Hath power on earth] Christus jure divino omnia faciebat; non injustâ aliqua virtute ac tyrannicâ. Christ did all in his Fathers right, and not perforce.

Verse 11. I say unto thee, arise] See here our Saviours letters testimonial, wherby he approves his authority and power to be authentick. Ye are our Epistle, saith the Apostle. 1 Cor. 3. 2.

Verse 12. We never saw it on this fashion] Or, Thus: Bullinger observeth of this Evangelist, quod fucum sæcularis sapientiæ & eloquentiæ, rei per se alioqui splendidissimæ, nusquàm allevit, that he cares not to gild gold, or muddle over a Topar: but sets down things plainly without welt or guard of worldly wisdom, or eloquence. Truth is like our first parents, most beautiful, when naked. οὕτως.

Verse 13. And he taught them] To teach us, that nothing can be better and more useful to the Church, then wholsome teaching; which therefore our Saviour never neglected. It was grown to a Proverb at Constantinople, Better the Sun should not shine, then Chrysostome not preach.

Verse 14. And as he passed by he saw Levi] Our Calling is of Free-Grace, Ezek. 16. 6. Esay 65. 1. The Scribes and Pharises are let alone, and this Publican called to the work.

And he arose and followed him] Leaving his gainful trade, and following his own ignominy, ruin, death. Nihil hic disputat unde vivere debeat: faith fears no famine: Christ is an universal Good, an All in all.

Verse 15. Many Publicans and sinners sate also] All at Matthews charge; and he thought it well bestowed, to bring them to Christ. So Paul, being himself assured of salvation, could do or suffer any thing for the salvation of his poor countrymen. Rom. 8. 38, 39. with Rom. 9. 1, 2.

Verse 16. They said unto his Disciples] They durst not say it to Him: Where the hedge is loweste the beast breaks over. The Devil, as the Poet ——quæ desperat renitescere posse, relinquit. What he hopes not to effect, he never attempts. Horat. de Arte Poet.

Verse 17. He saith unto them] Though not for their sakes (for he knew it was to no purpose) yet for his other hearers sakes, he makes Apology, Ier. 3. 14, 15. God oft gives a Pastor after his own heart, for a few that are to be converted.

Verse 18. The Disciples of John and of the Pharisees] Beza notes, that onely here, and Mat. 22. 16. Luk. 5. 24. is mention made in the Gospel of the Pharisees Disciples, unhappy, Plato in Menone.

Verse 19. While the bridegroom is with them?] Christ is mel in ore, melos in aure, jubilum in corde. There cannot be but musick in his Temple.

Verse 20. Then shall they fast] Novices are not to be tied to the austerities of Religion. The Pharisees are revived in the Anabaptists, qui initiatis Christo ne risum quidem mediocrem admittunt, saith Calvin. Capistranus the Minorite, sent by the Pope into Germany and other Countries Anno 1453. to preach obedience to the See of Rome, gat a great deal of credit to his corrupt doctrine, by such a Pharisaical severity. Sed tales Doctores meretur mundus suo fastidio veritatis, saith one, they that wil not receive the truth in love, are left to the efficacy of error.

Verse 25. Have ye never read?] Satis false, q. d. Ignoratis adhuc, quod adeo notum & tritum. Miror ego vestram vel insciliam, vel ignaviam. Its a shame for you, that you are yet so stupid, or so stubborn.

Verse 26. And to them that, &c.] Though meaner men then David.

Verse 27. The Sabbath was made for man] That is, for mans safety and advantage. As he would be undone without it, he would grow wild, and forget God: so, if it stand in the way of his safety, it is not to be observed; as if an enemy then assault us, we may fight with him. Pompey could never have taken Jerusalem, but that the superstitious Jews refused to defend themselves on the Sabbath: which when he observed, he then on that day most fiercely assaulted them, and took their City.

Dio Cassius.

Verse 28. Therefore the Son of man] This Lordship taking beginning in Christ, seems to be, from him, derived to all that are in Christ. As Psal. 8. 4, 5. compared with Heb. 2. 6, 7. Whatever David speaks of man, is applied to Christ, and so is proper to the Saints, by vertue of their union with Christ.

Is Lord also of the Sabbath] And can dispense with it. The Schoolmen say that God can dispense with the materiallity of any precept in the decalogue, the three first excepted.

Chap. III.

Verse 1. There was a man there, &c.]

A Fit object inciteth and should elicite our bounty. Where God sets us up an Altar, we should be ready with our Sacrifices, with such Sacrifice God is well pleased, Heb. 13. 16.

παρατηρούντες. Verse 2. And they watched him] So carnal men do still watch and pry into professors and their conversation, 1 Pet. 3. 2. curiously observing what they may catch and carp at. But it is a brave thing to thrattle envy, to stop an evil mouth, to deny them occasion to blaspheme, as Christ did; to lead convincing lives, as Bradford and Bucer did, whom neither their friends could sufficiently praise, nor their foes find any thing to fasten on.

Act. and Mon.

Verse 3. Stand forth] That the miracle might be notified, and God the more glorified. It is a dishonour to a parent to hang his picture in a dark corner: so here, we should shew forth the vertues of him who hath called us, 1 Pet. 2. 9.

Verse 4. To do good or to do evil] Not to do good then, as there is opportunity, is to do evil. Qui non, cum potest, servat, occidit. Non faciendo nocens, sed patiendo fuit, it is said of the Emperour Claudius. Not robbing onely, but the not relieving of the poor, was the rich mans ruin, Luke 16. passive wickedness is taxed in some of the Churches, Rev. 2. & 3.

ψυχὴν. To save life] Gr. soul, for man, and man for the body of man. So Psal. 16. Thou wilt not leave my soul in the grave, that is, my body, as Piscator senseth it.

Verse 6. With the Herodians] Whom yet they hated in their hearts; but they can easily comport and comply to do Christ a mischief, as conceiving that Christ pertained to Herods jurisdiction.

Verse 8. From beyond Jordan] This Country by Josephus is called Perœa, as Ultrajectum in Germany. Da Magistrum πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου.

Verse 9. Lest they should throng him] Gr. afflict him, press, or pinch him, as they did: a piece of his passion, verse 10. διὰ τὸν ὄχλον.

Verse 10. As many as had plagues] Gr. stripes, scourgings. Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth with lesser and lighter afflictions, and scourgeth every son, &c. with hard and heavy judgements, as plagues, banishments, persecutions, &c. Oh the bloody wails that God hath left on the back of his best children! μάστιγας. Heb. 12. 6. Non vulgares morbi sed saeviores, & inusitati, qui quasi clamitant de ira & pœna divina.

Verse 11. Thou art the Son, &c.] The matter is well amended since Satans first on-set upon Christ. Then it was, If thou be the Son of God. The same power when he listeth, can change the note of the Tempter to us.

Verse 12.] See the Note on Mat. 12. 16.

Verse 13. And calleth unto him whom he would] Nec volentis, nec volantis, sed Dei miserentis, as a Nobleman, after Paul, gave it for his Motto. It is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, though he run as fast in a bird can flie: but in God that sheweth mercy.

Verse 14. That they should be with him] As his household servants, more happy herein then those of Solomon. Christ hath many retainers, few fast and faithful servants that follow him in the regeneration. There are those that will wear his livery, but serve themselves.

Verse 15.] See the Note on Mat. 10. 8. Mallem obedire quam miracula facere, saith Luther. A man may do miracles in Christs name, and yet perish: But whoso calleth upon the name of the Lord, shall be saved.

Verse 16. And Simon he surnamed Peter] Not now, but after that famous confession of his, Mat. 16.

Verse 17. Boanerges] Syr. Benai-regeschi, filii fragoris. Naz. saith they were so called for the bigness of their voice. Farellus was famous for his loud speaking: when the envious Monks rang the Bells to drown his voice as he was preaching at Metis, ille contrà ad ravim usque vocem intendit, nec vinci se à strepitu ullo passus est. But there may be a great deal of force in a low language. Basil was said to thunder in his preaching, lighten in his life. Hierom was called Fulmen Ecclesiasticum, Athanasius Magnes & Adamas. A Loadstone for his sweetness, and an Adamant for his stoutness. The Apostles had fiery tongues, but yet cloven. Barnabas and Boanerges, The son of Consolation and of Thunder make a good mixture. The good Samaritan pours in wine to search the sores, and oyl to supple them. Discretion must hold zeal by the heel, as Iacob did his brother: these two must be as the two Lions that supported Solomons Throne. He that hath them, may be a Moses for his meekness, and a Phinees for his fervour. It was a good caution that Oecolampadius gave Farellus, Evangelizatum, non maledictum missus, &c. laudo zelum, modo non desideretur mansuetudo, &c. Thou art sent, not to rail, but to reveal holy truths in meekness of wisdom. διὰ τὸ μεγαλόφωνον. Melch. Verse 18. And Bartholomew] See the Note on Mat. 10. 3.

Verse 19. And they went into the house] But could not rest in the house: for a demoniack was brought home to him, and the multitude met to hear; and Christ gratified them, with the neglect of himself. Now to all his he saith, as Abimelech did to his souldiers, What ye have seen me do, make haste and do as I have done. Mat. 12. 22.

Verse 20. They could not so much as eat bread] For when he was in the house to repose and refresh himself, they brought unto him a possessed person. Iudg. 9. 48.

Verse 21. They went out to lay hold on him] Some read, to lay hold on the multitude, as mad, because so eager and earnest, that they left not our Lord liberty for his necessary repose and repast. But if it be meant of Christ, his mother also may seem to have been in the common error, Verse 31. She was not then without original sin (as the Franciscans would have it, and do therefore name Joachim and Anna kissing, by which Verse 22. By the Prince of Devils, &c.] A devilish blasphemy, occasioned perhaps, by the former calumny of his kinsmen. What advantages make our adversaries of our smaller differences? Every subdivision is a strong weapon in the hand of the contrary party.

Scilicet, the self-same day wherein he had had that busie bout with the blasphemous Pharisees. See this Note on Mat. 13. 1.

Verse 2. He taught them many things by Parables] Ministers must likewise fetch comparisons from things most familiar, and best known to their hearers: as the Prophets from fishes when they have to deal with the Egyptians; from flocks and herds, when with the Arabians; from Merchandise and Navigation, when with the Tyrians and Sidonians, &c. And as our Saviour from fishing, when he dealeth with fishers: from sowing, when with seedsmen, &c.

Verse 3. Hearken, behold] Christ well knew the fickleness of mens spirits, and how every small matter calls them off, when most earnestly set to hear: See the Note on Mat. 13. 3.

Verse 8. Fruit that sprang up and increased] This is spoken in opposition to the thorny ground, where the thorns grow up together with the corn, and over-top it: Whereas the good ground brings forth fruit increasing, and ascending: and although it have many thorns, yet grace is superiour to corruption, and keeps it under.

Verse 9. He that hath ears, &c.] A form of speech to stir up attention: like the Athenian Ἀκούσατε ἄνδρες; and our Oyer, from the French. Our Saviour cryed and said so, saith Saint Luke.

Verse 10. And when he was alone] Or solitary. A well-chosen season is a very great advantage.

The Romans thought they had Victory tyed to them: we have not the knowledge of divine truths tyed to us, &c. But as the Romans dedicated a lake (the depth whereof was unknown) to Victory, ſo muſt we be wiſe to ſobriety; and what we cannot comprehend of Gods revealed will, run to Chriſt, and he will teach us: but ſtill cry, O the depth! *Tuba. Verſe 28. Firſt the blade, then the ear] And the husbandman looks upon it with delight, in hope of an harveſt: ſo doth God take in good part our weak beginnings, whiles we ſtrive to be better: his bleſſing is upon our very buds, Eſay 44. 3. The firſt ſprings in the womb of grace are precious to him, Eph. 2. 1.

Verſe 29. Becauſe the harveſt is come] After long looking for, Iam. 5. 7. (See the Note there.) When will it once be? ſaith God Ier. 13. 27.

Verſe 30. Whereunto ſhall we liken, &c.] The wiſdom of God, the great Counſellor, ſeems to be at a fault for a fit expreſſion low enough for our ſlow apprehenſion.

Verſe 31, 32.] See the Notes on Mat. 13. 31, 32.

Verſe 33. As they were able to hear] Not as he was able to have ſpoken; a Miniſter muſt maſticate his matter as Nurſes do their childrens meat, and ſpeak to his hearers ſhallow capacities; or elſe he ſhall be a Barbarian to them, and they to him. He's the beſt Preacher ſaith Luther, that preacheth vulgarly, trivially, &c.

Verſe 34. He expounded] He read them the riddles, as it were, or untyed the knots. So Judg. 7. 15. We read of a dream and the interpretation, or breaking of it. A metaphor from the breaking of a Nut to get the kernel. ἐπέλυε.

Verse 37.] See the Notes on Mat. 8. 24, 25, &c.

Verse 38. Asleep on a pillow] Neither did the noise of the sea, nor the hurry of the seamen labouring for life, awake Christ, till his own time was come. Despair not, if help be not at hand at first, as we desire: but awake Christ, as here; and Esay 51. 9. God hath a mighty arm, but it may be asleep; the Church therefore cryes three times in a verse, Awake.

Verse 40. Why are ye so fearful?] Increpatio cum admiratione: As their, Master, carest thou not, &c. was interrogatio conquerentis & reprehendentis. But if Cæsar in a tempest could bid the Barge-man be of good cheer, for he carried over the fortune of Cæsar, which could not miscarry; how much more might those that were upon the same bottom with Christ, have been confident of a safe arrival?

How is it that ye have no faith?] A little they had, Mat. 8. 26. But this unexercised was, to comfort, as good as no faith.

ἐν πνεύματι ἀκαθάρτῳ. Beza.

Verse 2. A man with an unclean spirit] Græcè. In an unclean spirit, quod eum spiritus quasi inclusum teneret. So the flesh is called the old man, as if it were the whole of a natural man: and the devil is said to work effectually in such, Eph. 2. 2. See the Note on Mark 1. 23.

Verse 3. Who had his dwelling among the Tombs] the burial-places of the Saints were antiently thought to have a kind of holiness in them. Hence grew that superstition of meeting and praying together at the Saints sepulchers; and afterwards of praying for them, and to them. Which to foment, the Devil usually haunted such places, there to play his pranks.

Verse 4, 5, 6.] See the Notes on Mat. 8. 28.

Verse 7. I adjure thee by God] Exemplum horrendum impudentiæ sceleratorum spirituum, saith Beza. To adjure one is to take an oath of him for our own security. An oath is not rashly to be undertaken, but by a kind of necessity, when it is exacted. Hence the Hebrew Nishbang is a passive, and signifieth To be sworn, rather then to swear.

Verse 8. For he said] Or, For he had said: and so had put him into a new hell, as it were,

Virg. Qui si non aliqua nocuisset mortuus esset.

Verse 9. My name is Legion] That is, a multitude. A legion was commonly among the Romans, saith Isidore, six thousand armed souldiers. Six thousand, six hundred, sixty six, saith Hesychius. So many devils were gotten in one poor man. Let us in him see, what the best of us have deserved: and, sith we have escaped, offer a Passeover each for himself.

Verse 10. He would not send them away, &c.] Because, saith Cajetan, they have several regions, where they most haunt, and do hurt: and are therefore loath to be put out of their old quarters.

Verſe 20. Began to publiſh in Decapolis] A great mercy to them to have ſuch a Preacher ſent amongſt them. Bethſaida was denied this favour, Mark 8. 26.

Verſe 1,2.] See Mat. 13. 54.

τέκτων. Verſe 3. Is not this the Carpenter?] Not the Smith, as Hilary and Ambroſe render it. Chriſt made yoaks and ploughs, ſaith Juſtin Martyr. And hence in his preaching he drew ſimilitudes from the yoak, Mat. 11. 29. and plough, Luk. 9. 62. ſaith à Lapide. See the Note on Mat. 13. 55.

Verſe 4.] See Mat. 13. 57. John 4. 44.

Verſe 5. He could do there no mighty work] He could not, becauſe he would not. Note here the venemous nature of infidelity, that transfuſeth as it were, a dead palſie into the hands of omnipotency, diſabling Chriſt, in a ſort, to do ſuch a man good. Chriſt by his abſolute power cau do all things: by his actual power he can do no more then he will do.

Verſe 6. And he marvelled] Unbelief muſt needs be a monſtrous ſin, that puts Chriſt to the marvel.

Verſe 7. By two and two] Both for more authority, and for mutual comfort. Two are better then one, Eccl. 4. 9. See the Note there, and on Mat. 10. 1, 2.

The like is ſaid to have been uſed here in England, in the times of the Barons Wars. Verſe 12. That they ſhould repent] This muſt be done; or men are utterly undone, Aut pœnitendum aut pereundum. Hence Repentence is ſo preſſed and preached in both Teſtaments, Exod. 23. 20. with 33. 2, 3, 4. Immediatly after God had given the Law (by the rules and threats whereof God the Father was to proceed, ſaith One) and after they had tranſgreſſed it, he could not go along with them, for he ſhould deſtroy them: but his Angel, that is Chriſt, he would ſend with them; who alſo would deſtroy them, if they turned not and repented according to the rules of his Law, the Goſpel.

Verſe 34. They were as Sheep, &c.] They were all ſlaves to the Romans, and many of them lame and diſeaſed: but nothing troubled Chriſt ſo much as this, that they wanted Paſtors and Teachers. They that are without a teaching Prieſt, are ſaid to be without God in the world, 2 Chron. 15. 3.

They found fault] They mumped at it, as we say: they dispraised, accused, complained. Vituperant homines quam collaudant promptius, saith one: Another being demanded, what was the easiest thing in the world? answered, To find fault with another. Μαμᾶσθαι ῥᾷον ἢ μιμεῖσθαι, saith a Third: It is easier to find a fault, then to mend it.

Verse 3. Except they wash their hands oft] Or up to the Elbow, or with utmost diligence. The Pharisees deemed it as great a sin to eat with unwashen hands, as to commit fornication. Do not our Modern Pharisees the Papists as much? Fornication is a money matter with them; but to eat an Egge in Lent, or the like, a deadly sin. You may see them sometimes in Italy go along the streets with a great rope about their necks, as if they were dropped down from the gallows. And sometimes they wear a sawsedge or a swines-pudding in place of a silver or gold chain. Is not this sufficient to deserve heaven by?

Verse 17. His Disciples asked him] Saint Matthew saith, Peter asked him: but then it was in the name of all the rest: and therefore they are all blamed for their ignorance.

Verse 18. Are ye so without understanding also?] What no wiser at seventeen years of age, then ye were at seven? as rude and unskilful in the sixth year of your apprentiship, as at the first on-set? God requireth and expecteth a proportion of knowledge according to the means we have had, the time we have enjoyed them, the capacities and natural abilities that he hath given us: and according to the places and stations wherein he hath set us to do him service. If the leaders of Gods people cause them to erre, how should those that are led by them do otherwise then be destroyed? Hence this sharp reprehension.

Purging all meats] that is, leaving (by this separation) the nourishment of the body clear from the dregs.

Verse 20. That defileth the man] Far worse then any jakes. Sin is the Devils excrement.

Verse 21. Evil thoughts, adulteries, &c.] Even all sorts of sins against both the Tables of the Law, as is well observed. Here's pride and folly against the first Commandment: blasphemy against the second and third: Of sins against the fifth Commandment he had spoken before: and here are murders against the sixth; adultery and fornication against the seventh; thefts and covetousness against the eighth; guilt against the ninth; evil thoughts against the tenth. See what a foul fountain, what a seminary of sin mans heart is. If his tongue be not a City, or a Countrey, but a world of wickedness, what then is the heart? Grotius in loc. Iam. 3.

Verse 23. All these evil things] Should God but break open that sink of sin that is within us, we should never indure the stench, but rid our selves out of the world, as Judas, Ahitophel, &c.

Verse 24. Would have no man know, &c.] There was therefore two wills in Christ: the one whereof rightly willed that which the other justly and wisely nilled.

But he could not be hid] He is a God that hides himself: we must fetch him out of his retiring room by our fervent prayers. Isay 8. 17.

Verse 33. And he took him aside, &c.] Though these mens faith was but weak, yet he yieldeth unto them at the first word, who held off the Syrophenis's before, to the third Petition: He knew the strength of her faith. The skilful Armourer trieth not an ordinary piece of Arms with Musquet shot. The wise Lapidist brings not his softer stones to the stithy. The good Husband-man turns not the wheel upon his cummin, nor his flail upon his fetches. For his God doth better instruct him, Esay 28 26, 29.

Verse 34. He sighed] As if himself had felt and fainted under the same burden: so the word signifieth. And he was so much the more sensible, as well weighing the cause. στέναξε.

Verse 35. His ears were opened] So are the ears of all that belong to Christ, and their tongues loosed to his praise, which before were bound by Satan. O pray that God would make the boar of our ears as wide as may be, and teach us that pure language, Zeph. 3. 9. that our tongues may run as the pen of a ready writer. Psal. 45. 1.

Verse 36. So much the more] Eò magis præfulgebat utique quia non visebatur, as Tacitus saith of Brutus: the more he sought to secret himself, the more he was noticed.

Verse 37. He hath done all things well] Praise we him much more for his spiritual cures, of like kind, upon our selves and others.

Chap. VIII.

Verse 1. The multitude being very great.]

YEt not so great as the five thousand before fed with fewer loaves, and more leavings: To teach us, that Gods blessing, and not the muchness of meat, feeds and satisfies.

Verse 2. I have compassion, &c.] See the Notes on Mat. 15. 32, 33, 34, &c.

ἐκλυθήσονται Verse 3. They will faint] Their sinews will be loosened, as it useth to fare with men in fainting fits. Physitians sometimes let blood usque ad deliquium animæ: so doth God; as he did David often. See the Note on Mat. 15. 32.

Verse 4. With bread] That is, with the coursest fare. Horatius opponit panem libis & placentis. Lib. 1. Ep. 10. Bread is used for homely provision.

Verse 5, 6, 7, &c.] See the Notes on Mat. 15. 34, 35, 36.

ἀνασενάξας. Verse 12. And he sighed deeply] His heart was straightned (as the word signifies) and would have burst, but for a vent.

Ezek. 9. 4. Expletur lachrymis egeritúrque dolor.

So those marked mourners sighed and cried for others, who were altogether insensible of their own miseries. So Habbakkuk trembled and quivered for the Caldeans calamities, cap. 3. 16.

Verse 13. And he left them] See the Notes on Mat. 16. 1, 2.

Verse 15. Of the leaven of Herod] Of the Sadduces saith Matthew: to the which Sect some conceive that Herod had now joyned himself, the better to still the noise of his conscience, by making himself believe there was no judgement to come.

Verse 16] See Mat. 16. 7.

Verse 17. Perceive ye not yet?] Christ reckons upon our time; and looks for improvement of our talents.

Verse 18. Do ye not remember?] All's lost that is not well laid up in this pot of Manna, the sanctified memory, 1 Cor. 15. 2.

Verse 19, 20.] See the Note on Mat. 16. 10, 11, &c.

Verse 21. How is it that ye do not understand?] It is very ill taken when we improve not experiments. Of all things God can least abide to be forgotten.

Verse 22. And they bring a blind man unto him] This is another of those miracles mentioned by Saint Mark onely, See chap. 7. 32.

Verse 23. He took the blind man by the hand] He could have delivered him to his friends, to lead him: but he did it himself, as holding it an honour, a pleasure, to do men in misery any office of courtesie.

And led him out of the town] Either that the miracle he wrought might be the less noticed: or as holding the Inhabitants unworthy to behold it. All Israel might see Moses go towards the Rock of Rephidim, none but the Elders might see him strike it. Their unbelief made them unworthy this priviledge: so might their unthankfulness the men of Bethsaida. Wo to thee Bethsaida. It is no small favour of God to make us witnesses of his great works.

Verse 24. I see men as trees, walking] This was done (saith an Expositor) to the end that Christs power might be the more distinctly known: as also to instruct men in their degrees and progresses of spiritual illumination, to give God the glory wholly, both for the beginning, and for the accomplishment. He is Author and finisher of our faith, Heb. 12. 2.

πάντας ὡς. Verse 25. He saw every man clearly] Procul & dilucidè, longè lateque. When we come to heaven, we shall see as we are seen, who now see but as in a glass obscurely, as old men do through Spectacles, 1 Cor. 13.

Verse 26. Neither go into the town] Christ would not vouch-safe such an ungratefull people the benefit of one more Preacher, though never so mean. This was a greater judgement upon them then, if he had turned some other way that arm of the sea that brought so much weakh into their town.

Verse 27, 28.] See the Note on Mat. 16. 13.

Verse 29. Thou art the Christ] This was much in few. Here is not Thou art Peter, and and upon this rock, &c. Which if either Saint Mark or Saint Peter had esteemed (as Papists now do) the foundation of the Christian Church, it had not been here omitted (as Beza well observeth) sith it goes for currant among the Ancients, that Saint Mark wrote this Gospel at Saint Peters mouth.

Verse 30.] See Mat. 16.20.

Verse 31. And after three dayes] That is, within three days, or on the third day.

Verse 32,33.] See Mat. 16.22,23.

Verse 34. Whosoever will come after me] See the Notes on Mat. 10.38. and Mat. 16.24.

Let him deny himself] Christianity (saith one) is perpetua naturæ violentia, a continual crossing of corrupt nature.

Take up his Cross] It is but a delicacy that men dream of to divide Christ and his Cross. Every Christian must be a Crucian, said Luther, and do somewhat more then those Monks that made themselves woodden Crosses, and carried them on their backs continually, making all the world laugh at them. Joh. de Polemar. Orat. in Concil. Basilens. ap. Binnium.

Verse 35. For whosoever will save his life] As that revolting Priest, Host to Philbert Hamlin, Martyr, slain by his enemy upon a private quarrel. As those Angrognians that yielded to the Papists that came against them, and were more cruelly handled by them then their neighbours that continued constant in the truth. As Denton the Smith of Welle in Cambridgshire, that could not burn for Christ, and was afterwards burned in his own house. As West that was Chaplain to Bishop Ridly, who refusing to die in Christs cause with his Master, said Mass against his conscience, and soon after pined away for sorrow. If I shrink from Gods truth (said Doctor Taylor Martyr) I am sure of another manner of death then had Judge Hales: who being drawn for fear of death, to do things against his conscience, did afterwards drown himself. Act. and Mon. fol. 835. Ibid. 873. Ibid. 1558. Ibid. 1570. Ibid. 1382.

Verse 36. For what shall it profit a man] And yet many do as Shimei, that to seek his servants, lost himself. And as Jonas, that was content to be cast into the Sea, that the Ship with her lading might come safe to shore.

Verse 37. Or, what shall a man give?] See the Notes on Mat. 16.26.

Verse 38. In this adulterous and sinful, &c.] The worse the times are, the better we should be. Stars are most needed in a dark night. We may as well, saith Zuinglius, Ad aram Jovis aut Veneris adorare, ac sub Antichristo fidem occultare. Antichrists limbs have their mark in their hand, which they may shew or hide at pleasure: but Christs members have their mark in their foreheads onely. Davids Parents and brethren came down to him to the cave of Adullam, though to their great danger, 1 Sam. 22. 1. Onesiphorus was not ashamed of Pauls chain at Rome, 2 Tit. 1.

When he cometh in the glory] David going against Goliah took onely his sling, and a few stones; but when against Nabal, he marched better appointed. So Christ came at first in a mean condition: but when he comes again to judgement, he shall march furiously, attended with troops of Saints and Angels.

Chap. IX.

Verse 1. Shall not taste of death]

Saints onely taste of death, sinners are swallowed up of it, they are killed with death, Rev. 2.23. Whereas the righteous do mori vitaliter; death is to them neither total, nor perpetual, Rom. 8.10,11.

Verse 2.] See the Notes on Mat. 17. 1.

Verse 3. Became shining] Gr. Glistring and spartling as stars, which twinckle and beckon to us as it were to remember their and our Creator. στίλβοντα.

Verse 4,5,6.] See Notes on Mat. 17.3,4, &c.

Verse 7. They were sore afraid] And even ready to run away, as unworthy, ἔκφοβοι. Deut. 9.19.

Verse 8,9, &c.] See Ubi suprà.

Verse 10. And they kept that saying] With much ado they kept it (as the word imports) ἐκράτησαν ports) for the rest of the Disciples were very inquisitive, likely, what was said and done in the Mount. A friend that can both keep counsel, and give counsel, is worth his weight in gold.

ἐξουθενωθῆ. Verse 12. Set at nought] Vilified and nullified as an ἔνδικος, or one that had nothing in him. Vermis sum & non homo. I am a worm and no man, saith the Psalmist in the person of Christ.

Verse 13, 14. See Mat. 17. 14, 15. &c.

Tertull. And the Scribes questioning with them] Purposely to put them to shame in their Masters absence: Marcian the Heretick, for his arroding the good names of others, was called Mus Ponticus. And Epiphanius fitly resembleth Hereticks to Moals; who do all their mischief by working under ground. But if once they be above ground, they are weak, and contemptible creatures.

Verse 15. Were greatly amazed] To see him come in so opportunely, in the very nick, which is his usual time. See the Note on Matt. 17. 14.

ἐσπάραξε. Verse 18. Teareth him] Teareth him as dogs do: so the Greek word signifieth, Matt. 7. 6.

Verse 19. Bring him unto me] Thus mans perverseness doth not interrupt the course of Christs goodness.

Verse 20. The spirit tare him] Thus things oft go backward ere they come forward; as the corn grows downward before it comes upward. Duplicantur lateres, venit Moses. This childe had never such a sore fit, as now that he was to be cured. See verse 26.

παιδίου. Verse 21. Of a child] Neither yet is there any injustice with God, that little ones thus suffer: they are not innocents, but estranged from the womb, they go astray assoon as they be born, Psal. 58 3. the first sheet or blanket wherein they are covered is woven of sin, shame, blood and filth, Ezek. 16. 4, 6. Infants have sin, though unable to act it: as Pauls Viper, stiff with cold, might be handled without harm, yet was no less venemous. But no sooner can they do any thing, but they are evil-doing, Ut urtica statim urit, & cancri retrocedunt, & echinus asper est, as young nettles will sting, young Crab-fish go backward, and as the young Urching is rough, &c.

Verse 22. It hath cast him into the fire, &c.] So doth blind zeal deal by them in whom it is.

Mr. Sa. Ward. Verse 23. All things are possible, &c.] Questionless (saith a Reverend man) justifying faith is not beneath miraculous in the Sphear of its own activity, and where it hath warrant of Gods Word. The prayer of faith is after a sort omnipotent, saith Luther.

But if thou canst do any thing] This woful father had no further patience to parley; but through weakness of faith, and strength of affection to his distressed child breaks off his tale, and begs present help. He that believeth, maketh not haste. Esay 28. 16.

Verse 24. I believe] This act of his in putting forth his faith to believe as he could, was the way to believe as he would.

Help thou mine unbelief] That is, my weak faith, which he counteth no better then unbelief: howbeit, God counts the preparation of the heart to believe, faith: as in those Samaritans, Joh. 4. Doctor Cruger cryed out on his death bed, Credo languidâ fide, sed tamen fide. Much faith will yield unto us here our Heaven: and any faith, if true, will yield us Heaven hereafter.

Selnecer. Pa. dagog.

Verse 25. I charge thee] Cum emphasi dictum & magna authoritate, saith one, when the Lyon of the Tribe of Judah roareth on this wise, Devils run and wriggle into their holes, as worms use to do in time of thunder.

Verse 26. And rent him sore] The nearer any is to help and comfort, the more Satan roareth and rageth.

Verse 27. But Jesus took him by the hand] Christ ever reserveth his holy hand for a dead lift.

Verse 28.] See Mat. 17. 19, 20, 21. The History of the dispossession of the Devil out of many persons together in a room in Lancashire, at the Prayer of some godly Ministers, is very famous. Read the book and Judge These Ministers (being Non-Conformists) were questioned for it in the High-Commission-Court, as if it had been a device to strengthen the credit of their cause.

Verse 29. But by prayer and fasting] The cause why they could not cure the child, was παρεπορεύοντο.

Verse 30. And they departed thence] Clàm & celeriter, privily and hastily, as the Greek imports: and why they did so, see Luke 9.53.

Verse 31. For he taught his Disciples and said] i.e. He said it often, that they might remember it once; which they had no minde to do, Luk. 9.43.

Verse 32. They understood not that saying] They could not conceive that the Saviour of the world should suffer as a Malefactor.

Verse 33. And being in the house] sc. That he had hired there, Mat. 8. See Mat. 18.1.

Verse 34. Who should be the greatest] viz. In Christs earthly Kingdom, in the which they vainly dreamt of a distribution of honours and Offices, as once in the dayes of David and Solomon.

Verse 35. He sat down] tanquam serii quicquam traditurus: The teacher sat: the Learners lay at his feet. See the Note on Mat. 5.2.

Verse 36.] See Mat. 18.2,3.

Verse 37. Receiveth not me] Non removet, sed corrigit, saith Erasmus. He receiveth not me onely, but him that sent me.

Verse 38. And John answered him] John was soon sated with that sad discourse of our Saviour, and begins a relation of another business, little to the purpose.

Verse 39. Forbid him not] It is probable that this man would not forbear, unless Christ himself should forbid him: which here he refuseth to do, and shews reason for it.

Verse 40. Is on our part] Is to be esteemed among such as favour me in this furious Age.

Verse 41. For whosoever shall give, &c.] Much more he that shall cast out Devils in my name, and out of love to me.

Verse 42.] See Mat. 18.6.

He shall not lose his reward] For his cup of cold water he shall have a torrent of pleasure. If therefore ye will be wise Merchants, happy Usurers, part with that which ye cannot keep, that ye may gain that which ye cannot lose.

Verse 43. It is better for thee to enter] The Trojans, after long debate, concluded it better to part with Helen, though a Lady of incomparable beauty, then by retaining her longer, to venture their utter wreck and ruine.

Ἀλλὰ κ) ὡς πίσαρ ἐσὶ ἐν νῆυσι νεῖσθαι, say they. Did we but fore-think what sin will cost us, we durst not but be innocent. Hom. Iliad.

Verse 44. Where their worm] As out of the corruption of our bodies worms breed, which consume the flesh; so out of the corruption of our souls this never-dying worm. This worm (say Divines) is onely a continual remorse and furious reflection of the soul upon its own wilful folly, and now woful misery. Oh consider this before thy friends be scrambling for thy goods, worms for thy body, Devils for thy soul. Go not dancing to Hell in thy bolts, rejoyce not in thy bondage, as many do; to whom the preaching of Hell is but as the painting of a Toad, which men can look on and handle, without affrightment.

Never dyeth, and the fire is not quenched] O quam diuturna & immensa est æternitas! said the Devil once. A child with a spoon may sooner empty the Sea, then the damned accomplish their misery. A river of brimstone is not consumed by burning. Manlii loc. com. pag. 33.

Verse 45. It is better for thee] Gr. It is a goodly thing to go, though maimed, to Heaven. καλὸν ἐστι.

To be cast into Hell, where the fire] About the year 1152. King Lewis of France cast the Popes Bulls (whereby he required all fruits of vacancies of all Cathedral Chuches in France) into the fire: saying, he had rather the Popes Bulls should rest in the fire, then his own soul should fry in Hell. Speeds Hist. fol. 406.

Verse 46. Where their worm dyeth not] i.e. Where there is eternity of extremity. Of all outward torments none more unsufferable, then that by fire: As of all inward, none like that of having worms ever grubbing and gnawing upon the entrails. Add hereunto, that worms and fire use to make an end of other things: Not so here. The fire fails not, as did that fire in the Valley of Hinnom, wherein the dead carcasses were burnt without Jerusalem, Jer. 19. The worm dies not, as do those worms that swarm in Sepulchers.

pulchers. O the terrors and torments, the fathomless perdition, the remediless misery into which the damned are plunged, without the least hope of ever either mending or ending! Plato travelling into Ægypt together with Eurupides the Tragedian, got much Hebrew learning; He calleth Hell πυρὶ ἀϊδίῳ, a fiery Lake: and saith, that there their worm dyeth not, their fire is not quenched, Phæd. p. 400. This he might have from Isa. 56.24. though it be his practise lacte gypsum miscere, as Irenæus spake, To stain the pure streams of Divine truths with fabulous narrations.

Verse 47. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out] Out with it, away with that earthly idol, that image of jealousie, Eze. 8.3. though it be to thee as an hand for profit, or an eye for pleasure.

Verse 48. Where the worm never dies] This is three several times repeated, that it may the better be observed. Utinam de Gehenna ubiq; dissereretur, saith a Father. O that word Never (said a poor despairing creature on his death-bed) breaks my heart. This worm of conscience is worse then the fire, if worse may be; it is the very Hell of Hell, as being the furious reflection of the soul upon it self for all its neglected opportunities, and flagitious practises. This will be a bodkin at thy heart one day (saith a Reverend man) I might have been delivered.

Verse 49. For every one shall be salted with fire] The Spirit, as salt, must dry up those bad humours in us that breed the never dying worm; and as fire, must waste our corruptions, which else will carry us on to the unquenchable fire.

Verse 50. Salt is good] Nature hath prudently mingled salt with all things, that they may not easily putrifie. Greges enim pecorum urinam salsissimam effundere videmus, & Joh. Bodin. Theat. Naturæ. in omnes stirpes salem infusum.

Have salt in your selves] Habete in vobis sal. A cujus admonemur tribus literis (ut curiosè observat quidam) Sapere, Agere, Loqui. The conjuring of salt among the Papists is intolerably blasphemous: It is thus; I conjure thee, O salt, by the living God, &c. that thou mayst be made a conjured salt to the salvation of them that believe. And that Act. and Mon. unto all such as receive thee, thou mayst be health of soul and body: and that from out of the place, wherein thou shalt be sprinkled, may fly away and depart all phantasie, wickedness or craftiness of the Devils subtilty, and every foul spirit, &c. By Salt here we may understand mortification and holy discretion; or sincerity of Doctrine and Discipline, whereby the Saints are seasoned and preserved from the putrifaction of sin and error; from the plague of emulation and dissension, as those good souls (Miconius and his Colleagues) who could say with comfort, Cucurrimus, certavimus, laboravimus, pugnavimus, vicimus & viximus semper conjunctissimè, &c. We have run together, striven, laboured, fought, overcome, and lived always together in much peace and concord.

And have peace one with another] By mortification, season, tame, and purge your own hearts of those lusts that war in your members, Jam. 4. 1. and prove offensive to others, Mar. 9.43. so shall you be at peace one with another. Stomack-worms are killed with salt.

Chap. X.

Verse 1. And as he was wont, he taught]

Greg. in Pastor. Prædicationis officium suscipit quisquis ad Sacerdotium accedit. It was death for the High-Priest to enter the Holy-place, or to come abroad, without his Bells and Pomegranates. Saint Mark is much in setting forth Christs forwardness to teach.

Verse 2,3, &c.] See Mat. 19.1,2,3 &c. The Athenians and Romans had their divorces also. Their bill was onely this, Res tuas tibi habeto, Take what's thine own, and be packing.

Verse 4. Moses suffered to write] Not commanded. There is difference between a permission and a precept, properly so called. See the Note on Matth. 19.7. Non statim probat Deus quod permittit. God approves not presently whatsoever he permits.

Verse 10. And in the house] This is one of those passages related by St. Mark onely.

verse 50. And he casting away his garment] Though a beggar, he stood not upon the loss of his coat; but for joy of his calling cast it from him. So Joh. 4. 28. Heb. 12. 1.

Verse 51. What wilt thou, &c.] Christ though he know our thoughts and suits long before (for he is intimo nostro intimior nobis) yet he will have us utter our own wants in our own words, and make our requests known unto him with thanksgiving, Phil. 4. 6. this is as sweetest musick in his ears.

Verse 52. Followed Jesus in the way] Followed him now without a guide: Or followed him, though going up to Jerusalem to suffer death. Love is strong as death.

Chap. XI.

Verse 1.] See Mat. 21.1.

Verse 2. Whereon never man sat] As if it had been done on set purpose. Here was a wheel within a wheel, Ezek. 1. the better to convince the stubborn Jews of his Kingly office.

Verse 3. Say ye that the Lord hath need of him] See here six several arguments of our Saviours Deity: 1. That he knew there was such an Ass-colt. 2. That he sent for it. Piscator. 3. Fore-saw that the masters of the colt would question them that fet it. 4. That he professeth himself the Lord of all. 5. That he could tell they would send the colt. 6. That accordingly they did so.

Verse 4, 5, 6, &c.] See Mat. 21. 9. Luke 19. 32.

verse 11.] See Mat. 21. 12.

Verse 12. He was hungry] This, and that he knew not but that there were figs on the tree, declare him to be the true Man.

Verse 13. The time of figs was not yet] viz. Of ripe-figs; but if he could have found but green figs only, he would at that time have been glad of them. He looked for somewhat from that great shew of leaves. But the old Proverb became true, Great bruit, little fruit.

Verse 14.] See Mat. 21. 19.

Verse 15. Began to cast out] As he had done once before, Joh. 2. 15. See the Note there. Hath not the Lord done the like also alate amongst us, casting out many Church-choppers, that have been money-changers rather then Ministers in the Temple?

Verse 16. And would not suffer] This is one of those things recorded by Saint Mark onely.

Verse 17. My house shall be called, &c.] He inveighs against the same fault with the same arguments, as before, Joh. 2.

Verse 18. Astonished at his doctrine] whiles they hung upon his holy lips, Luke 19. ult.

Verse 19. He went out of the City] Having first cryed, and said, He that believeth on me, &c. Joh. 12. 42. to the end of that chapter.

Verse 21. And Peter calling to remembrance] So the fig-tree bare far better fruit now that it was dried, then when it was green and flourishing. Instruunt nos Patres, tum docentes, tum laborantes: The Saints teach us, as by their instructions, so by their infirmities. Aug.

Verse 22, 23.] See Mat. 21. 21.

Verse 24. Whatsoever things soever ye desire, &c.] To an effectual prayer two things are here required, 1. An earnest desire after the thing prayed for: the desire of the righteous shall be satisfied: but a cold suitor begs a denial. 2. A confident expectation of a gracious answer. He that prayeth and doubteth, shutteth heaven gates against his own prayers, Jam. 1. 7. Prov. 10. 24.

Believe that ye receive them] Even as soon as you ask, as the word signifies. See Dan. 9. 20, 21, 24. λαμβάνετε.

Verse 25. And when ye stand, praying] Several gestures in prayer are described, not prescribed in Gods Book. The word here rendred stand, importeth a presenting ones self before the Lord, whether he stand, sit, or kneel, &c. στήκητε.

Verse 26.] See Mat. 6. 14. with Notes there.

Verse 27, 28, 29, &c.] See Mat. 21. 23, 24, 25, &c.

Verse 30. From heaven, or of men, answer me] So when the enemies of Reformation demand what we mean by so doing; ask them what they think of that we do? Is it from heaven, or of men? If from heaven, why do not they approve it? If of men, why do not they disprove it by the Scriptures? Bucer and Melanchthon framed a form of Reformation according to the truth of the Gospel, with the approbation of the Peers and States of Cullen; but the Clergy, though not able to contradict it by good reason, yet rejected it with slander, and said that they had rather chuse to live under the Turkish Government, then under a Magistrate that embraced that Reformation. *Melch. Verse 3. And beat him] Properly, they bilded him; but by a Metonymie, they beat him. Sic percutimus vulpem, ut pellis ei detrahatur: So men beat a Fox, that they may the better hild him. Δέρω proprie excorio, pellem detraho, Gerhard.

Verse 4. Wounded him in the head] Caput comminuerunt, they brake his head. Theophylact interpreteth it, They completed their villany, and spent all their spite upon him. συνετέλεσαν καὶ ἐκορύφωσαν τὴν ὕβριν. Theophylact.

Verse 6. They will reverence my Son] They will surely be ashamed to look him in the face. This is the proper signification of the word. But sin had woaded an impudency in their faces, that they could blush no more then a Sack-but. ἐντραπήσονται.

Verse 13. To catch him in his words] As Hunters catch the beast in a toyl; as Fowlers catch the bird in a snare, as Saint Matthews word here signifies. Ἀγρεύσωσι. παγιδεύσωσι.

Fistula dulce canit, volucrem dum decipit auceps.

Verse 14. To give Tribute] This tribute the Jews then paid to the Romans, as now they do to the Turks, for the very heads they wear. And yet they had the face to say to our Saviour, Joh. 8. 33. We never were in bondage to any man. But perhaps these Jews were of the Sect of Judas Gaulonites, who would not be drawn by any torments to acknowledge any Lord upon earth; believing that God onely was to be held their Lord and King. Νεκρὸν. Ennius.

Verse 34. Answered discreetly] That he was better then the Pharisees used to be. He was Egregè cordatus homo, and began to lift up his head out of the mud toward heaven.

Verse 35. How say the Scribes] They were great Genealogists; how was it then that they were no better versed in the Genealogy of Christ? that they could give no better an account of his two-fold nature? Of other things one may be ignorant, and yet be saved: Not so here.

Verse 36. Said by the holy Ghost] The Psalms then are a part of holy Writ by Christs own testimony, who also Luk. 24. 44. divideth the Old Testament into the Law of Moses, the Prophets and the Psalms. Yea, Psalmorum liber quæcunque utilia sunt ex omnibus continet, saith Augustine after Basil: The Psalms are a treasury of all holy truths.

Verse 37. The common people] The lesser fishes commonly bite best.

Verse 38. Love to go in long clothing] Down to the heels, as Senators, or Counsellors. A garment that Christ himself wore, as being a Citizen or free Denison of Capernaum. But he loved not to go in it, as these Pharisees, these glorious Masters of the Jews; he affected not this habit more then another out of pride and vain glory, to be looked at, and admired by the vulgar. This they thought a goodly business.

Verse 42. Two mites] A mite is valued of our money to be three parts of one c. Her mite could weigh but little, but her heart weighed heavy: and so her heart, being put to her mite, gave it weight above the greater (but far more heartless) largesses of the Pharisees.

Verse 43. This poor Widow] Women are noted in the Parable of the lost Groat to be fond of money: Widows especially, and poor Widows, make much of that little they have, as their life, so it is called here, verse 44. even all her life, that is her lively-hood. All this she cast in, it being rather to and for the service of God, then to the poor. She resolves, as a Widow indeed, to trust wholly in God.

Chap. XIII.

Verse 1. What manner of stones, &c.]

Huge stones, and so cunningly cimented, as it were inoculated the one into the other, that a man would have thought and sworn almost, that they had been all but one entire stone. Josephus writeth of these stones, that they were fifteen cubits long, twelve high, and eight broad.

Quasi tota moles ex unico ingenti lapide in tantam magnitudinem consurgeret.

Verse 2. There shall not be left one stone, &c.] There's no trusting therefore to Forts and strong holds, no though they be munitions of rocks; as Esay speaketh; The Jebusites that jeared David and his forces, were thrown out of their Sion. Babylon, that bore her self ſelf bold upon her twenty years proviſion, laid in for a ſiege, and upon her high Towers and thick walls, was ſurpriſed by Cyrus, ſo was this goodly Temple by Titus, who left onely three towers of this ſtately edifice unrazed, to declare unto poſterity the ſtrength of the place, and valour of the vanquiſher. But, ſixty five years after, Elius Adrianus inflicting on the rebelling Jews a wonderful ſlaughter, ſubverted thoſe remainders, and ſprinkled ſalt upon the foundation.

Verſe 12. See Mat. 10. 21.

Verſe 13. And ye ſhall be hated of all men] Odio generis humani, as Tacitus, ſpeaking of the Chriſtians under Nero. Saint Luke adds, But there ſhall not an hair of your heads periſh: for the very hairs of your head are numbred, ſaith Saint Matthew, chap. 10. 30. Lib. 15.

Verſe 14. The abomination of deſolation] The Roman forces, therefore moſt abominable to God and his Angels, becauſe they deſolated the pleaſant land, and aboliſhed the true worſhip of God. See Revel. 17. 4, 5.

Where it ought not] viz. In reſpect of the Romans, who did it onely out of ambition and covetouſneſs, See Eſay 10. 7.

Verſe 15, 16, &c.] See Mat. 24. 15, 16, 17, &c.

Verſe 19. For in thoſe dayes ſhall be affliction] Gr. Thoſe dayes ſhall be affliction: as if the very time were nothing elſe but affliction in it ſelf. See the Notes on Mat. 24 21.

Verſe 20. Except the Lord had ſhortned] Mutilaverat, truncaverat. Not in reſpect of the divine decree, but 1. of the long miſeries that the people had deſerved. 2. Of the enemies rage, that would have exceeded, See Zach. 1. 13. κολοβόω.

Verſe 24, 25, &c.] See Mat. 24. 29, &c.

Verſe 28. Now learn a Parable of the fig-tree] We ſhould not reſt content with a natural uſe of the creatures, as bruits do, but pick ſome ſpiritual matter out of every ſenſible object. Thus Reverend Maſter Deering when the Sun ſhined on his face now lying on his death-bed, fell into a ſweet meditation of the glory of God, and his approaching joy. D. Hall's Art of Divine Meditation.

Verſe 30. Till all theſe things be done] Begun they were in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, carried on by the enemies rage againſt the Church, and to be ended with the laſt age of the Church, which begins at the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh.

Verſe 34. The Porter to watch] That the reſt did their work.

Verſe 35. When the Maſter cometh] But come he will to judgement, as ſure as that he hath deſtroyed Jeruſalem: This is a pledge of the other.

Verſe 37. Watch] What Serbidius Scevola was wont to ſay of the Civil Law, holds more true of the divine Law: Jus civile ſcriptum eſt vigilantibus, non dormitantibus. The Law was written for thoſe that obſerve to obey it. And that very good counſel that Bucer gives upon this text, Meritò ſemper ſonare auribus noſtris debet hæc vox, vigilate: This word Watch ſhould be ever ſounding in our ears, running in our minds. Let it be our conſtant care, that death do not ſurprize us ſuddenly. No gueſt comes unawares to him that keeps a conſtant table.

Verse 1. After two dayes]

TWo days after the former discourse. This Sun of righteousness shone most amiably toward his going down.

Verse 2. Not on the feast-day] And yet they did it on the feast-day, as loth to lose the opportunity then offered them by Judas the traytor: But God had a special hand in it, that by the circumstance of time Christ might appear to be the true Passeover. He was crucified on the very true day of that Feast.

ἀδόλως. Mistici Melius, omnino vis. Sultet, ex Hartungi Critica.

Verse 3. Of spikenard very precious] Or pure, right, sincere, not sophisticate, or adulterate; so Theophylact interprets it. But Scultetus saith it was spikenard of Opis, a Town not far from Babylon, whence the most precious odours and oyntments were transported into other parts.

Verse 4.] See Mat. 26. 8.

Verse 5. Three hundred pence] That is, fifty-two French pounds and more, as Budæus computes it. She spared for no cost.

ἐνεβριμῶντο. Murmur & fremitus indignantium significatur. Beza.

They murmured against her] But Judas began: So dangerous a thing it is to converse with Hypocrites. One rotten sheep may rot the rest: Uvaque conspectâ livorem ducit ab una. Great danger there is, if not of infection, yet of defection. Peter by his halting, compelled others to do so too, Gal. 2.

Verse 6. 7, 8, &c.] See Mat. 26. 10, 11, &c.

Verse 14. The guest-chamber] In a private house; for the whole City was then turned into a great Inn, for the receipt of strangers that came up to the Feast.

Verse 15, 16.] See Mat. 26. 18, 19, &c.

Verse 17, 18, 19, &c.] See Mat. 26. 20, 21, &c.

Verse 21. Good were it for that man] For his own particular: for otherwise in respect of the glory of Gods justice, in that mans righteous condemnation, good it was that he was born.

Verse 22. 23, &c.] Mat. 26. 26, &c. The Lords supper is (as Justin Martyr saith) τροφὴ εὐχαριστηθεῖσα, food made up all of thanksgiving.

Verse 25. I will drink no more] ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν οὐ μὴ I will not, not, not drink, So Heb. 13. 5. I will not, not, not forsake thee. Our Saviour here seemeth to allude to that grace-cup (as they call it) after which they might not eat any thing more, till the day following Verse 31. I will not deny thee] The Syriack addeth Mari, that is, Domine mi. And this he affirmed magis ex abundanti. So did Pendleton the Apostate, when he said to Sanders the Martyr with greatest vehemency, I will see the uttermost drop of this grease of mine molten away, and the last gobbet of this flesh consumed to ashes, before I will forsake God and his truth. Act. and Mon. 1563.

Verse 32, &c.] Mat. 26. 36.

Verse 33. Began to be sore amazed,] Animo & corpore per horrescere, horripilari, ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι. Now it was, that he took that terrible cup at his fathers hands, and drunk it off all at once: which we must else have been sipping and sucking at, throughout all eternity.

Verse 36. Abba, Father] Father, Father, with greatest earnestness. This was an effectual prayer, had he said no more. God can feel breath in prayer, Lam. 3. 56.

Not that I will, but, &c.] Apostopesis emphatica, saith Beza.

Verse 37. Couldst thou not Watch] How then wilt thou die with me? So how will they endure wounds for Christ, that cannot endure words? See Jer. 12. 5.

Verse 40. Neither Wist they what to answer] They were ashamed to excuse it, yet fell again into it.

Verse 41. Sleep on now, take your rest] If you can at least, or have any mind to it, with so many swords and halberds about your ears. They were in heavinesse, and yet are sharply reproved for relapsing so oft into the same sin. Let not us be more mild then Christ was; but deal freely and faithfully with all.

Verse 42. Rise up, let us go.] To meet the enemy in the face. See how couragious he grew upon his prayer.

The Jews of Tiberias began their Sabbath sooner then others: those at Tsepphore coutinued it longer; adding de profano ad sacrum. Among our Forefathers at the ringing of the Bell to Prayer on Saturday-evening, the husbandman would give over his labour in the field, and the tradesman his work in the shop, and set themselves to prepare for the Sabbath. Among the Jews at this day in many Cities, there is one goes about and proclaims the approaching of the Sabbath, about half an hour before it begins, that they may prepare.

Verſe 3.] See Mat. 28. 5, 6, &c.

Verſe 4. And when they looked] Or, as ſome read it, when they looked up: for till now they may ſeem either to have gone plodding on with their eyes downward; or elſe to have looked on one another, as people uſe to do when they are conferring.

Verſe 7. Tell his Diſciples, and Peter] q. d. tell him howſoever, for he is in great heavineſs; and this will be very good news to him. Tell him that Chriſt is riſen again for his juſtification, Rom. 4. Or, tell his diſciples and Peter, quia ille ſe præ aliis incredulum oſtenderat, as Tolet hath it, becauſe he hath expreſſed ſo much unbelief above the reſt, and is therefore, it may be, ſet here behind all the diſciples, as inferiour to them.

Verſe 8. Any thing to any man] Whom they met with, but haſtened to the Diſciples.

Verſe 9. He appeared firſt] This honour done to Mary Magdalen, Mark relateth more at large then the reſt: though otherwiſe moſtly he be more brief then the reſt.

Verſe 10, 11, &c.] See Mat. 28. 9, 10.

Verſe 14.] See Luke 24. 36. Joh. 20. 19.

Verſe 15. Preach the Goſpel] Eckius hence blaſphemouſly inferreth, that Chriſt did never command his Apoſtles to write, but to preach onely. Eck. Enchirid. cap. Eccleſia.

To every creature] That is, to Man, who is a little world, an Epitome of every creature. 2. To the Gentiles alſo, who had been denied this favour of the Goſpel, as if they had been none of Gods creatures.

Verſe 16. He that believeth] That which you preach.

And is baptized] As content to give up himſelf to Chriſt, and to receive his mark, making a publike profeſſion of the faith.

He that believeth not] He ſaith not, or, Is not baptized; for it is not the want, but the contempt of Baptiſm that damneth. Unbelief is a bloody ſin, Heb. 10. 26. a heavy ſin, Joh. 3. 19. a moſt ingrateful, inexcuſable ſin, ſuch as ſhuts a man up cloſe priſoner in the dark dungeon of the Law, unto unavoidable deſtruction, Gal. 3 23.

Shall be damned] Here's quick work. God will not ſtay ſo long now with people, as he did of old, when there was not ſo much mercy offered. See the Note on Heb. 2. 3.

Verſe 17. In my name they ſhall, &c.] This promiſe was peculiar to the primitive Chriſtians and to ſuch as lived immediately after Chriſts aſcenſion. That was an extraordinary providence, that when Squier that Traytor Anno Dom. 1597. had poiſoned the pummel of Q. Elizabeths ſaddle, when ſhe was to take horſe: albeit the ſeaſon were hot, and the veins open to receive any malignant tainture, yet her body thereupon felt no diſtemperature: her hand felt no more hurt then Pauls did, when he ſhook off the Viper into the fire. Speed's Hiſt. fol. 1184.

Verſe 18. It ſhall not hurt them] No more ſhall the deadly poyſon of ſin hurt thoſe that have drunk it, if they belong to God; provided that they caſt it up again quickly by Confeſſion, and meddle no more with ſuch a miſchief.

Verſe 19. He was received up, &c.] This Saint Luke more fully ſets forth, Luke 24. 50, 51. & Act. 1. 9.

Verſe 20. And they went forth] Viz. From Jeruſalem, according to Iſa. 2. 3. Pſal. 110. 2.

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION Upon the GOSPEL according to S^t. Luke.

CHAP. I.

Verſe 1. Many have taken in hand.]

OR, have attempted, but not effected. Hence ſome have concluded, that Luke wrote firſt of the four Evangeliſts. Howbeit the common opinion is (and the moſt ancient copies ſay as much) that Matthew wrote his Goſpel eight years after Chriſt, Mark ten, Luke fifteen, and John fourty two. ἐπεχείρησαν.

Verſe 2. Which from the beginning were eye-witneſſes] Therefore it may ſeem his Goſpel was not dictated to him by Paul (who was no eye-witneſs) as ſome Ancients have affirmed. But if we can believe Tacitus or Suetonius in things that fell out long before they were born, becauſe we are confident of their diligence in enquiring: how much more ſhould we believe Saint Luke upon ſuch doubted aſſurance? &c.

Verſe 3. Having had perfect underſtanding] Or, Following them cloſe at heels, (and as we ſay) hot-foot. παρηκολουθηκότι.

From the very firſt] Or, from above, as inſpired from heaven. Ἄνωθεν.

To write unto thee in order] Diſtinctly, and yet cohærently. A ſingular praiſe in an Hiſtorian, for the which Ambroſe much admireth this our Evangeliſt above all the other. καθεξῆς.

Verſe 4. Wherein thou haſt been inſtructed Which thou haſt received by hear-ſay, or by word of mouth: and wherein thou haſt been catechiſed, receiving the myſteries of the faith by the Miniſtry of the voyce. And ſurely when we ſee men caring and caſting how to find out this certainty here ſpoken of, and not to be led by conjectural ſuppoſitions, κατηχήθης.

poſitions, but be fully perſwaded as St. Luke was, and would have his Theophilus to be, then there will be ſome hopes that the Lords party will increaſe.

Verſe 5. In the days of Herod] Herod a ſtranger, upon the death of Antigonus, laſt of the Maccabeans, by Auguſtus his favour, was made King of Judæa, and reigned 34. years. After his and his ſons death, Judæa was again reduced into a Roman Province; and the government thereof committed unto Pontius Pilate, then to Petronius, after him to Fœlix, Feſtus, Albinus and Florus, whoſe cruelty provoked the Jews to rebellion and war, to their utter overthrow.

Of the courſe of Abia] According to their weekly waitings at the Altar: 1 *Chron.*24. God would not have his Miniſters over-wrought, though he require them to labour according to their ſtrength, even unto laſſitude. But how thankleſs is their labour, that do wilfully over-ſpend themſelves!

Verſe 6. In all the Commandments and Ordinances.] That is, in all the duties of both the Moral and Ceremonial Law.

Blameleſs] Sine querela, ſaith the Vulgar, without complaint. They neither complained of others, nor were complained of by others. As it is reported of Burleigh, Lord Treaſurer in Queen Elizabeths reign, that he never ſued any man, nor did any man ever ſue him: and was therefore in the number of thoſe few, that both lived and died with glory.

Αμεμπτοι. Camd. Eliz. fol. 495.

Verſe 7. And they had no child] Which was then held an heavie judgement, as that which rendred them ſuſpected of impiety: ſith Godlineſs had the promiſe of increaſe both within dores and without.

Verſe 8. In the order of his courſe] He took but his turn, and ſerved but his time. God never purpoſed to burthen any of his creatures with devotion.

Verſe 9. To burn incenſe] In the incenſe of prayer, how many ſweet ſpices are burned together, by the fire of Faith, as humility, love, &c?

Verſe 10. Praying without, at the time of incenſe] Cant. 3.6. the Church is ſaid to aſcend out of the wilderneſs of this world with pillars of ſmoak, elationibus fumi, that is with affections, thoughts, deſires toward heaven. And although ſhe be black as ſmoak, in regard of infirmities, yet hath ſhe a principle to carry her upwards.

Verſe 11. Standing on the right ſide of the Altar] As Satan ſtood at the right hand of Jehoſhuah to moleſt him: So ſtand the Angels at our right hand, in the publick Aſſemblies eſpecially, to withſtand him. And to ſignifie this, the curtains of the Tabernacle were wrought full of Cherubins within and without.

Zach. 3.1.

Verſe 12. He was troubled] But without cauſe: he ſhould have been comforted rather; for his ſins were covered. How will wicked men ſtand before Chriſt?

Verſe 13. For thy prayer is heard] Both for a Son, and for a Saviour.

Verſe 14. Thou ſhalt have joy] This is not every fathers happineſs. Many fathers are forced through grief for their untoward children to wiſh to die, as Elias did when he ſat under the juniper: and as Moſes did when wearied out by the people, *Numb.*11.15.

Verſe 15. Great in the ſight of the Lord] Significatur ſingularis quædam præſtantia, ut Gen.10.9. He ſhal be ſingularly qualified.

Verſe 16. Shall he turn to the Lord] An high honour to have any hand in the converſion of ſouls. They that wiſe others ſhall ſhine in heaven, *Dan.*12.2.

Verſe 17. In the ſpirit and power of Elias] There is a great agreement between the times of Elias and John Baptiſt. Herod anſwereth to Ahab, Herodias to Iezabel, &c.

The diſobedient to the wiſdom of the juſt] i. e. By his preaching he ſhall turn the hearts of the Gentiles to the Jews, and by his Baptiſm tye them up, as it were, together. He made them (according to the phraſe that Joſephus uſeth of him) to convent or knit together in Baptiſm.

ἐν βαπτισμῷ συνάγειν. Joſep. Antiq. l.18.c.7.

Verſe 18. For I am an old man] Thus Reaſon will be encroaching upon the bounds of Faith, till ſhe be taken captive by infidelity. Drive therefore Hagar out of doors.

Verſe 19. That ſtand in the preſence of God] Ut apparitor, ab apparendo, ready preſt to any ſervice.

Verſe 20. And behold thou ſhalt be dumb] His tongue that ſo lately moved through unbelief is now tied up. God will not paſs by the well-meant weakneſſes of his own, without a ſenſible check. He was alſo deaf as well as dumb: hence they made ſigns to him, verſ. 62.

Verſe 21. The people waited for Zacharias] They would not away without the bleſſing, preſcribed to the Prieſts, Numb. 6. In the Councel of Agathon it was decreed, that people ſhould not preſume to go out of the Temples, before the Miniſters had bleſſed the Congregation. Canon. 32.

Verſe 22. He could not ſpeak unto them] Hereupon a Divine thus deſcants: Tacuit pater vocis, & ceſſit in miraculum: Vox ſi ſileat, cedit in contradictionem. Nunquid æque obmuteſcit pater & filius? Johannes & Zacharias? Nunquid & præco mutus eſt? Let us leave to the Papiſts (ſaith another) Miniſtrorum muta officia, populi cæca obſequia, their Miniſters, dumb Offices; their peoples, blind obedience.

Verſe 23. Aſſoon as the daies, &c.] Zachary, though he ceaſed to ſpeak, yet he ceaſed not to miniſter. Though he were dumb, yet he was not lame, but could do ſacrifice, and did it. We may not ſtraight take occaſions of with-drawing our ſelves from the publick ſervices.

Verſe 24. And hid her ſelf] Obſcurum qua id fecerit ex cauſa. Its hard to ſay wherefore ſhe did this, ſaith a learned Interpreter: but, likely, out of modeſty; and that ſhe may make no ſhew, till ſhe were ſure; as alſo that the miracle might appear the greater.

Verſe 25. Thus hath the Lord] She ſaw that all her prayers, that ſhe had haply forgot, were not loſt, but laid up with God, who now ſends in the bleſſing, that ſhe had deſpaired of. The Lord oft doth things for his people that they look not for, Iſa. 64. and ſtays ſo long, that when he comes, he finds not Faith, Luke 18. 8.

To take away my reproach among men] Barrenneſs was counted a diſhonor, Gen. 30. 23. Their Virgins were not praiſed, Pſal. 78. 63. that is, married, and commended for their fruitfulneſs. See the Note on verſ. 7.

Verſe 26. Unto a City of Galilee] God and his Angels can find out his hidden ones, Pſal. 83. 3. in what corner of the country ſoever.

Verſe 27. Eſpouſed to a man] 1. The better to free her from ſuſpition of fornication. 2. That ſhe might have one to provide for her, when ſhe was with Child. 3. That the myſterie of God manifeſted in the fleſh might come to light by little and little. Senſim ſine ſenſu.

Verſe 28. Hail thou that art highly favoured] A ſalutation, and not a prayer, as Papiſts pervert and abuſe it. And when the Ave-Mary-Bell rings, which is at Sun-riſing, Noon, and Sun-ſetting, all men in what place ſoever, houſe, field, ſtreet, or market do preſently kneel down, and ſend up their united devotions to heaven by an Ave-Maria. Alſo, where one faſteth on Friday, which they count our Lords day, many faſt on Saturday, which they count our Ladies day. κεχαριτωμένη. Sands his Survey.

Verſe 29. She was troubled at his ſaying] Affect not the vain praiſes of men, ſaith one. The bleſſed Virgin was troubled, when truly praiſed of an Angel. They ſhall be praiſed of Angels in heaven, who have eſchewed the praiſes of men on earth.

What manner of Salutation] Cujus eſſet (ſaith one Interpreter) voluit enim probare ſpiritum. Qualis & quanta, ſaith another: Id eſt, quam honorifica & magnifica, ac proinde ſupra ſortem ſuam poſita. What an honorable ſalutation it was, and more then ſhe could acknowledge.

Verſe 30. Fear not Mary] We are not fit to hear, till quit of carnal affections and paſſions. The ear which taſtes words, as the mouth doth meat, when filled with choller or other ill humors, can reliſh no comfort.

Verſe 31. Shalt call his name Ieſus] See the Note on Mat. 1. 21. If it were ſuch a mercy to Iſrael that God raiſed up of their Sons for Prophets, and of their young men for Nazarites, Amos 2. 11. What was it to Mary, and in her to all mankind, that ſhe ſhould be mother to the Arch-prophet, to that famous Nazarite?

Verſe 32. Son of the higheſt] Anſwerable to the Hebrew Elion, whence ἥλιος for the ſun, cujus antiquiſſima veneratio, ſaith Beza, whom the ancients deifie.

Verſe 33. And of his Kingdom there ſhall be no end] St. Paul ſaith indeed that he ſhall at the end of the world deliver up the Kingdom to God the Father: not that his Kingdom ſhall then ceaſe, but that form of adminiſtration only, that he now uſeth in the collecting and conſerving of his Church.

Verſe 34. How ſhall this be?] This is a ſpeech not of unbelief, but of wonderment, as deſiring alſo to be better informed.

Verſe 35. The power of the higheſt ſhall over-ſhadow thee] As once he did the confuſed Chaos

Digitized by Google

Chaos in the Creation: This very expreſſion was a great confirmation to the Virgins faith, and may well ſerve for a caution to us not to be over-curious in ſearching into this ſecret.

Verſe 36. Who was called barren] It is obſerved that the barren women (ſo called in both Teſtaments) had the beſt Children, as Sarah, Rebecca, Rachel, Elizabeth, &c. becauſe long held off, and much humbled. Some alſo have obſerved that the New-Teſtament affords more ſtore of good women then the Old.

D. Hall's Contemplat. on the New Teſtament.

Verſe 37. For with God, &c.] We never doubt of Gods will, but we do in ſome meaſure doubt of his power. See them both running parallel, Job 42. 2.

Verſe 38. Behold the handmaid of the Lord] Not Mall Gods maid, as a black-mouthed Blatero hath blaſphemed in print, that the Puritans rudely call her.

Stoffords Female Glory.

Verſe 39. Into the hill-country] Of Juda, ſouthward of Jeruſalem, into the City of Hebron, Joſh. 21. 9.

Verſe 40. Saluted Elizabeth] To whom ſhe could not reſt till ſhe had imparted the good news, and both given and received ſome ſpiritual gift for mutual confirmation and comfort, Rom. 1. 11, 12. Grief grows greater by concealing, joy by expreſſion. Only the meeting of Saints in heaven can parallel the meeting of theſe two Couzens.

Verſe 41. The babe leapt in her womb] Such comfort there is in the preſence of Chriſt (though but in the womb) as it made Iohn to ſpring. What then ſhall it be in heaven, think we?

Verſe 42. Bleſſed art thou among women] So is Iael the wife of Heber ſaid to be, Judg. 5. 24. who yet perhaps was hardly ſo good a woman as Deborah, that called her ſo. But it was no ſmall confirmation to the bleſſed Virgin, to hear the ſame words from Elizabeth, that ſhe heard before from the Angel.

And bleſſed is the fruit, &c.] Or, becauſe bleſſed is the fruit of thy womb, therefore bleſſed art thou, &c. Yet more bleſſed (as Auſtin ſaith) in receiving the faith, then in conceiving the fleſh of Chriſt; She conceived Chriſt when ſhe yielded her aſſent to the Angel, and ſaid: Be it us thou haſt ſaid, let it even be ſo. We alſo conceive Chriſt in our hearts, when we aſſent to the promiſes of Pardon, of Salvation by Chriſt: hoping perfectly for the grace that is to be brought unto us at the Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Pet. 1. 13. It is with us all, as it was with that captive woman, Deut. 21. If ſhe conſented to marry, ſhe ſaved her life by it.

Verſe 43. That the mother of my Lord, &c.] That the Lord himſelf ſhould come amongſt us, as he did in the fleſh, and doth ſtill by his Spirit, Oh what a mercy!

Verſe 44. Leaped in my womb] More like a ſuckling at the breaſt (as the word ſignifieth) then an Embryo in the womb. The Spirit then worketh, even in unborn babes that are elect, ſome kind of ſaving knowledge of Chriſt, anſwerable to faith in thoſe that are grown up. The babes motion here was not natural, but ſpiritual (ſaith one:) Therefore Iohn was ſanctified in the womb, and did really rejoyce at the preſence of Chriſt in the Virgin. Now ſanctification preſuppoſeth Juſtification, and that, Faith; Yea this joy was a true effect of faith in the Meſſiah: therefore infants are capable of faith: Thus He. Seminal faith we cannot deny them.

βρέφος Puer recens natus, 1 Pet. 2. 2.

Tates his Model, &c.

Verſe 45. Bleſſed is ſhe, &c.] Mary believed: ſo did not Zachary, though a man, a Prieſt, Aged, Learned, Eminent, and the meſſage to him of more appearing poſſibility. This, Elizabeth here ſeems to have an eye to.

Believed that there ſhall be, &c.] The ſame may be ſaid of every believer. It is true alſo in caſes ordinary: A perſwaſion that God will help and keep us, will indeed help and keep us. Mark 9. 23.

Verſe 46. And Mary ſaid] See the benefit of good ſociety, and how one Chriſtian kindleth another. As Iron ſharpneth Iron, ſo doth the face of a man his friend. Prov. 27.

Μεγαλύνει. Doth Magnifie the Lord] Makes room for him, enlargeth her thoughts of him, throws wide open the everlaſting doors, that the King of glory may come in, in State.

ἠγαλλίασε. ἐπὶ τῷ Θεῷ. Super Deo. My ſpirit rejoyceth] Tripudiat, danceth a galliard (which ſeemeth to come from the Greek word here uſed) danceth Levaltoes in God, or for God my Saviour, as the matter and ground of my joy.

Verſe 48. The low eſtate] Vilitatem, the vile and abject condition. Contra Mariæ merita, quæ prædicant Papicolæ. Here's no mention of merit. See Beza's Annot. in loc.

All generations shall call me blessed] How much more should we with one mind and one mouth bless God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ? This is an honor that he much standeth upon, Rom. 15.6.

Verse 49. He that is mighty] The mighty strong God. Ὁ Δυνατὸς.

Hath done great things for me] No small things can fall from so great a hand. He gives like himself.

And Holy is his Name] God that is holy, is to be sanctified in holiness. Isaiah 5.16. when men see their children especially (as here) the work of Gods hands, Isaiah 29. 23.

Verse 50. From generation to generation] Personal goodness is profitable to posterity.

Verse 51. He hath shewed strength, &c.] It appears by the whole frame of this holy song, that the blessed Virgin was well versed in the Scripture, which she here makes so much use of in sundry passages. She was eruditionis pietatis & modestiæ delicium, as one speaketh of the Lady Jane Gray. She had by much reading made her bosom Bibliothecam Christi, Christs library, as a Father saith; and may seem to have been exercised in the good word of God from her infancy, as 2 Tim. 3.15. and as that sweet yong Gentlewoman, Mrs. Elizabeth Wheatenhall, daughter of Mr. Antony Wheatenhall, of Tenterden in Kent, deceased; Who not yet being ten years old when she dyed; Yea, before she was nine years old (not much above eight) could say all the New Testament by heart: And being asked where any words were, she would presently name Book, Chapter and Verse: One Mr. Stoughton a Minister writeth this upon his own knowledge and examination of her. Mr. Stought. in his Davids love to Gods word, Epist. to the Read.

He hath scattered the proud] He by his strong Arm hath so splitted them, that they shiver into pieces: or hath made them as darts, which being among the enemies, are lost: or hath hurled them hither and thither, as the wind doth the dust of the mountains. Διεσκόρπισε.

Verse 52. He hath put down the mighty] As he did Bajazet the proud Turk, and set up Tamberlain a Scythian shepheard; who said that he was sent from heaven to punish Bajazets rashness; and to teach him that the proud are hated of God, whose promise is to pluck down the mighty, and raise up the lowly. Turk. Hist.

Verse 53. He hath filled the hungry] See the Note on Mat. 5.6.

Verse 54. He hath holpen his servant] He hath put under his hand, and raised him prostrate, taken him up at his feet. This he will not do for an evil doer: he taketh not the ungodly by the hand, Job 8. 20. Ἀντελάβετο.

Verse 55. As he spake to our Fathers] Who lived upon reversions, and dyed upon the promises, accounting them good free-hold. God keeps promise with nights and days, Jeremiah 33. 20, 25. How much more will he, with Abraham, and his seed for ever?

Verse 56. And returned to her own house] An honest heart is where its calling is. Such a one, when he is abroad, is like a fish in the air; whereinto if it leap for recreation or necessity, yet it soon returns to its own element.

Verse 57. And she brought forth a son] The voice of the Lord maketh the Hindes to calve, Psal. 29. 9. though of all other bruit creatures they bring forth with greatest trouble, bowing themselves, bruising their yong, and casting out their sorrows, Job 39.4,6. How much more will he help his dear handmaids?

Verse 58. The Lord had shewed great mercy] And the greater, because in her old age. Births, with those that are ancienter, are with greater danger: so is the new birth in old sinners.

Verse 59. To Circumcise the child] Infants are no innocents, they are conceived in sin, and the first sheet or blanket wherewith they are covered is woven of sin, shame, blood and filth, Ezek. 16. 4, 6. They were Circumcised, to signifie that we had better be flayed, and have our skin quite stript off, then to have it as a skin-bottle hanging in the smoak of filthy desires, and blown full of unclean motions with the breath of Satan.

Verse 60. He shall be called John] Bucer here observeth that he that was high Priest when Solomon built the Temple, was called Iohn: and that there was herein a sweet suitableness. Pulchre vero convenit, saith he, ut quo nomine sacerdos Salomonis typici, Bucer. in loc.

typici, hoc & veri vocaretur: that the Type and Truth might accord in the very name.

Verse 61. There is none of thy kindred] There is an inbred desire in us all of immortality: we would eternize our names, and do therefore call our children, cities, lands, &c. after them, Psal. 49. 11. But they do best that get assurance that their names are Written in heaven. They that depart from God shall be written in the earth, Jerem. 17. 13. as Cains son, Lord Enoch of Enoch, Gen. 4. And those men of renown, Gen. 11. 4. were.

Verse 62. And they made signs to his father] Who therefore seems to have been deaf (as well as dumb) because he had not hearkned to the Angels speech, but gainsaid it.

Verse 63. And he asked for a Writing-table] Tabellam, sc. ceratam, in qua olim stilo scribebatur, saith Sa. He had an excellent faculty of whom Martial reporteth,

Currant verba licet, manus est velocior illis:
Et vix lingua suum, dextra peregit opus.

Martial. lib. 14. de Notario.

Verse 64. And he spake and praised God] And had he had as many tongues as he had hairs upon his head, he could never have sufficiently praised God for his son, but especially for his saviour. See 1 Tim. 1. 15, 16, 17. Zachary believeth and therefore speaks, Psal. 116. 10. the tongue of the dumb sings, Isa. 35 6.

Verse 65. And fear came on all] This was either the fear of admiration at the many strange accidents, about the birth of the Baptist; or the fear of punishment, seeing so good a man as Zachary so long to have suffered for his unbelief.

Ludolf. de vita Christi.

Verse 66. And the hand of the Lord] That is, his grace and blessing. He had the honor to be Legis & gratiæ fibula, as Chrysologus hath it; the buckle and boundary of the Law and Gospel.

Verse 67. Was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophecyed] This was a plentiful amends for the late loss of his speech. See here the goodness of God to all his; Quibus non solum ablata restituit, sed insperata concedit (saith Ambrose) Ille dudum mutus Prophetat. God is better to his then their hopes.

Verse 68. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel] This is Hymnus Evangelicissimus, say both Bucer and Pellican. A most Evangelical Canticle.

Redeemed his people] From the wrath of God over them; the guilt and power of sin within them, from Satan and the punishment of sin without them.

Verse 69. An horn of salvation] A Cornu-copia, or a mighty Saviour, qui instar bovis cornupetæ inimicos populi Dei prosternat atque dejiciat, that can bestir him much better then that Hee-goat, Alexander the great, who had a notable horn between his eyes, wherewith he cast down the Ramm to the ground, and stamped upon him, &c. Dan. 8. 7. Macedones tunc temporis Ægeades, id est caprini dicti sunt. Occasionem vide Justin. lib. 7. The Macedons were at that time called Goat-sprung.

Piscat.

Verse 70. By the mouth] There were many Prophets, yet had they all but one mouth: so sweet is their harmony.

Verse 71. That we should be saved] Gr. Salvation from our enemies. This properly importeth the privative part of mans happiness, but includes the positive too.

Verse 72. To perform the mercy] Gods love moves him to promise, his truth binds him to perform. See both these, 2 Sam. 7. 18, 21. For thy words sake, and according to thine own heart: (that is, ex mero motu) hast thou done all these things.

Verse 73. The oath which he sware] ὅρκος quasi ἕρκος a hedge, which a man may not break: much less will God.

Verse 74. Might serve him] Servati sumus ut serviamus. Christ hath therefore broke the Devils yoke from off our necks that we may take upon us this sweet yoke, and not carry our selves as sons of Belial. Serve we must still, but after another manner, as the Israelites did, when brought out of the Egyptian bondage; Yet thou shalt keep this service, saith Moses, Exod. 12. 25.

In holiness and righteousness] These two make up one perfect pair of Compasses, which can take the true latitude of a Christian heart.

Verse 75. Before him] the sense of Gods presence makes men conscientiously obedient to both tables of the Law. Cave spectat Cato, was a watch-word among the Romans. Noli peccare, Deus videt, Angeli astant, &c. Take heed what thou doest, God beholds thee, Angels observe thee, &c.

Verſe 76. And thou child] ſcil. qui nunc tantillus es, in virum magnum evades: Though little, thou ſhalt prove great.

verſe 77. To give knowledge] Not by infuſion, Dan. 1. 17. but by inſtruction. See the dignity and duty of Miniſters.

Verſe 78. Whereby the day-ſpring] Or as Beza rendereth it, The Branch from on high, not from beneath, as other plants or branches. So the anchor of hope entereth not into the deep, but into that within the vail, Heb. 6. 19. ἀνατολή.

verſe 79. That ſit in darkneſs] This imports 1. continuance, 2. content.

To guide our feet] The ſuperſtitious Pagans thought that their goddeſs Vibilia kept them in their right way when they travelled: But we have a better guide to God. Arnob. adverſ. Gent. lib. 4.

verſe 80. And the child grew] Though his meat was but courſe, and not ſo nouriſhing. The bleſſing of God is the ſtaff of bread: bread would no more nouriſh without it, then a piece of earth.

Chap. II.

Verſe 1. A decree from Caſar Auguſtus]

BY a ſweet providence of God, that Chriſt might be born at Bethlehem, according to the Scriptures. Howbeit Auguſtus thought not ſo (as it is ſaid in another caſe of Nebuchadnezzar, Eſay 10.) but ambitiouſly ſought the ſetting forth of his own greatneſs, and large command, and carried it without puniſhment; when as David ſmarted ſore for a like offence. But God will take that from others, that he will not bear with in his own, Amos 3. 2.

That all the world] That is, the Roman world: but ſuch was their ambition, that though they had but a part, yet they ſtiled themſelves Lords of all the World. So the Pope (the image of that Beaſt) will needs be ſtiled Univerſal Biſhop. The Great Turk (that Eaſtern Antichriſt) calls himſelf God on earth, Sole Monarch of the world, Commander of all that can be commanded, &c. and by many other ſuch like ſwelling titles.

Verſe 2. When Cyrenius, &c.] Quirinus the Latine Writers call him. Now that the Scepter was departed, Shiloh came.

Verſe 3. And all went to be taxed] To pay a certain ſmall ſum of money in token of fealty. I was once at a Court-Sermon (ſaith Melanchthon) on the Nativity day, and this was the Text: but the Preacher, inſtead of diſcourſing on Chriſts Incarnation, ſpent the whole hour, in a very cold day, in perſwading the people to obey Magiſtrates, and to give them as much money as they call for. This is the guiſe of Court-Paraſites, Princes terncher-Flyes. Ioh. Manl. loc. com. 479.

Verſe 4. And Joſeph alſo went up] By a ſpecial providence of God, as is above noted, verſe 1. and not onely ſo; but that the holy Virgin might ſtill have with her the keeper and cover of her virginity; that the devil might not have occaſion to raiſe up falſe reports about her great belly.

Verſe 5. Being great with child] Yet could not be excuſed. This was a cruelty in Auguſtus (not to ſpare great-bellied women) but a mercy of God to mankind; for what the better had it been for us, if Joſeph had gone to Bethlehem, and not Mary alſo?

Verſe 6. The days were accompliſhed] Her delivery might well be haſtened, or at leaſt faciliated by her long journey; for it was no leſs then four days journey from Nazareth to Bethlehem. Some ſay ſhe was gravida, but not gravata; great-bellied, but not unweildy: Lumen enim quod in ſe habebat, pondus habere non poterat, ſaith Auguſtine: but I am not bound to believe him.

Verſe 7. And ſhe brought forth her firſt-born] Whether ſhe were Deipara, the Mother of God, was a great controverſie, and raiſed a great ſtorm in the Council of Epheſus; inſomuch as the Emperour declared both ſides hereticks. But foraſmuch as ſhe was the Mother of Chriſt, Mat. 1. 23. and Chriſt is God; in bringing forth Chriſt, ſhe was the Mother of God. Whether ſhe continued after this a Virgin, piè credimus sed nihil affirmamus. But that she vowed Virginity, as Papists say, we deny: For how could she promise Virginity to God, and Marriage to Joseph? There is a story, that when the old Romans had founded Templum pacis, they sent to ask Apollo how long it should stand? he answered, Untill a Virgin brought forth: This they took to be perpetual. But therein they were as much mistaken, as those Africans, who having an oracle, that when the Romans sent an army into Africa, Mundus cum tota sua prole periret, thought that then the world should be at an end. But afterwards the Romans sent an Army thither under the conduct of one Mundus, who in battel was slain, together with his sons, by the Africans; and discovered the illusion of the Devil.

Σπαργανόω of Σπαράσσω to rend.

Wrapped him in swadling-clothes] This pains she was at (such was her love) though newly delivered, and much weakned thereby. His swadling-clothes were poor and ragged, as may be gathered out of the Greek word here used.

Laid him in a manger] Non in aureo reclinatorio, saith Ludolphus, not in a stately room, as the Porphyrogeniti in Constantinople; not in the best but basest place of the Inn, which is counted the meanest house of a City. Oh humble Saviour, whether wilt thou descend?

Verse 8. Keeping watch over their flock] At the tower of Edar, say some, between Jerusalem and Bethlehem, where Jacob, returning from Mesopotamia, stayed with his flock, after he had buried Rachel, Gen. 35. 21. Mic. 4. 8.

By night] Hence some gather, that our Saviour was not born in the winter; because in winter they housed their cattel, and fed them not without doors. Prov. 27. 25.

Verse 9 And lo the Angel of the Lord] Gabriel, likely, was sent, not to Zachary or Simeon, &c. but to certain Shepherds. God goes a way by himself. Had the Sages of the East met with these Shepherds, they had received better intelligence then they did from the learned Scribes.

And the glory of the Lord] As when a Kings son is born, bonefires are made, &c.

Verse 10. I bring you good tidings] The first Preacher of the Gospel was an Angel. God hath now taken this honour from the Angels, and put it upon the Ministers, who are in Scripture called Angels, Rev. 2. 1. and Angels Ministers, Heb. 1. 14. The old Church had ἐπαγγελίαν the promise, we have εὐαγγέλιον, the joyful tidings.

Σωτὴρ. Cic. in Verr. Act. 4.

Verse 11. A Saviour] The Greek word is so emphatical (as Tully witnesseth) that other tongues can hardly find a fit word to express it. The Grecians delivered by Flaminius, rang out Σωτὴρ Σωτὴρ with such a courage, that the birds astonished, fell to the earth.

Verse 12. Wrapped in swadling-clothes] In vilibus & veteribus indumentis, saith Ludolphus. See the Note on verse 7.

Verse 13. Praising God] Angels, who have neither so much interest in Christ, nor benefit by him as we, sing him into the world: And shall we be dumb? They sang when the world was created, Job 38. 7. So now, that it was repaired by Christ.

Verse 14. Glory be to God on high] Let God have all the glory, so we may have the peace and grace or good will (for of these Angels, Saint Paul learned to salute with Grace and peace) Mihi placet distributio Angelica, saith Bernard, Gratanter accipio quod relinquis, relinquo quod retines: abjuro gloriam, ne amitterem pacem. I am well content with the Angels destribution, I thankfully accept (Lord) what thou leavest: I meddle not with that which thou retainest. I forgo the glory, so I may not miss of the peace. Thus He. It was the last speech of dying Chrysostome, Glory be to God from all creatures. Let the Jesuits (saith One) at the end of their books subscribe Laus Deo & Beatæ Virgini. Let this be the badge of the Beast: cry we, Soli Deo gloria, Glory be to God alone.

In earth peace] Pax, quasi pactio conditionum. Εἰρήνη ἀπὸ τοῦ εἰς ἓν εἶραι, à connectendo in unum. Christ is the great Peace-maker; but onely to the elect, called here the Men of Gods good will. When he was born, Cuncta atque continua totius generis humani aut pax fuit aut pactio. Flor. Hist. l. 4.

Verse 15. Let us now go even unto Bethlehem] They did not reason nor debate with themselves (saith Bishop Hooper Martyr in a Letter to certain good people taken praying in Bow-Church-yard, and now in trouble) who should keep the woolf from the sheep in the mean time; but committed the sheep to him whose pleasure they obeyed: So let us do now that we be called; commit all other things to him that called us. heed that all ſhall be well. He will help the husband, comfort the wife, guide the ſervants, keep the houſe, preſerve the goods: yea, rather then it ſhould be undone, he will waſh the diſhes, rock the cradle, &c.

Verſe 16. Found Mary and Joſeph,&c.] They, though of the blood-royal, yet lay obſcured, not thruſting themſelves into obſervation, but well content with a low condition. Beata Virgo in vili ſtabulo ſedet, & jacet; ſed quod homines negligunt, cœleſtes cives honorant & inquirunt, ſaith Stella. The humble perſon is like the violet, which grows low, hangs the head downwards, and hides it ſelf with its own leaves. And were it not that the fragrant ſmell of his many vertues betrayes him to the world, he would chuſe to live and dye in his ſelf-contenting ſecreſie. Stella. Bernard.

Verſe 17. They made known abroad] True goodneſs is communicative: there is no envy in ſpiritual things; becauſe they may be divided in ſolidum: One may have as much as another, and all alike. Theſe ſhepherds, as thoſe lepers, 2 King. 7. 9. ſaid one to another, We do not well: this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace, &c.

Verſe 18. Wondered at thoſe things] Yet made little benefit of what they heard. All the world wondered after the Beaſt, Revel. 13. 3. And it was a wonder there was no more wondering at the birth of our Saviour; if that were true eſpecially, that (beſides the Wiſe-mens ſtar, Mat. 2. and the Angelical muſick in the air, &c.) among the Gentiles a voice was heard, The great God is now about to be born: And that at Rome, the likeneſs of a woman carrying a child in her arms was ſeen about the Sun, &c. Theſe things are ſtoried. Polydor Virgil reports out of Oroſius, that on the very day of Chriſts Nativity, Auguſtus Cæſar cauſed proclamation that no man ſhould ſtile him Lord any longer, Manifeſto præſagio majoris Dominatus, qui tum in terris ortus eſſet: as preſaging a greater then himſelf then born. Polyd. Virg. lib. 4. cap. 1.

Verſe 19. Mary kept all thoſe things] Her ſoul was as an holy Ark: her memory like the pot of Manna, preſerving holy truths, and remarkable occurrences.

Verſe 20. As it was told unto them] God to ſhew that he reſpected not perſons, revealed this grand myſterie to ſhepherds and Wiſe-men; the one poor, the other rich; the one learned, the other unlearned; the one Jews, the other Gentiles; the one neer, the other far off.

Verſe 21. For the Circumciſing of the Child] Chriſt would be Circumciſed, and ſo become bound to fulfill the Law, that he might free us that were under the Law, Gal. 4. 5. He ſhed his blood for us when he was but eight days old: he took us into his family by Baptiſm, when we hung on our mothers breaſts. Should we not then ſerve him betimes, remember him from our infancy?

Verſe 22. And when the days of her purification] She was rather ſanctified then polluted by bearing Chriſt, yet wrangleth not with the Law, nor claimeth an immunity. Now if ſhe were ſo officious in ceremonies, what in the main duties of morality?

According to the law] This Law of purification proclaims our uncleanneſs, whoſe very birth infects the mother that bare us. She might not till the ſeventh day converſe with men, nor till the fourtieth day appear before God in the Sanctuary, nor then without a burnt-offering for thankſgiving, and a ſin-offering for expiation of a double ſin, viz. of the Mother that conceived, and of the Son that was conceived.

Verſe 23. That openeth the womb] This proves that Mary brought forth Chriſt in a natural way, and not utero clauſo, by a miracle, as Papiſts would have it, to prove their fixion of Tranſubſtantiation.

Shall be called holy to the Lord] God requireth the firſt-born, as uſually beſt-beloved; that together with our children, he might draw to himſelf the beſt of our affections.

Verſe 24. A pair of Turtle-doves] Chriſts Mother was not rich enough to bring a Lamb. Let this comfort poor Chriſtians. I know thy poverty, ſaith Chriſt, but thats nothing, thou art rich, Revelations 2. 9. Smyrna the pooreſt Church, hath the higheſt commendation.

Verſe 25. Juſt and devout] Or wary and cautelous; one that takes heed and is fearful of being deceived in that which he takes for right and currant. Εὐλαβὴς.

Waiting for the conſolation of Iſrael] That is, for Chriſts coming. This was the Sugar wherewith they ſweetned all their croſſes: this was the Dittany, by taſting whereof (as Harts do) they ſhoke off all the piercing ſhafts of their afflictions. κεχρηματισμένον. Verse 26. It was revealed unto him] By an immediate oracle. The Idolatrous heathens made use of this word to signifie their impious and diabolicall Oracles. The abuse of a word taketh not away the use of it.

Verse 27. And he came by the spirit, &c.] So still, the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord, Psal. 37. 23. He sets his spirit as a Tutor, to direct and convince us into all truth. Simeon likely, had done as Daniel did, Chap. 9. 2. found out by diligent search, that the fulness of time was come, and is therefore thus answered from heaven.

ἀπεδέξατο. Verse 28. Then took he him up in his arms] The blessed'st armfull that ever the good old man had in his life. The Pairiarchs saluted him, but afar off, Heb. 11.

Verse 29. Lord now lettest thou thy servant] In the Syriack it is, Now thou openest the prison door: the prisoner must not, till then, go out; nor we out of life till fairly dismissed. Simeon having laid in his heart (saith one) what he lapt in his arms, sung, Nunc dimittis; I fear no sin, I dread no death; I have lived enough, I have my life; I have long'd enough, I have my love; I have seen enough, I have my light: I have served enough, I have my Saint: I have sorrowed enough, I have my joy: Sweet babe, let this Psalm serve for a lullaby to thee, and for a funeral for me. Oh sleep in my arms, and let me sleep in thy peace. Dying Velcurio broke out into these words, Pater est amator, Filius Redemptor, Spiritus Sanctus Consolator: quomodo itaque tristitiâ affici possim? Dying Deering said, Ego omnium Sanctorum minimus, credo & intueor in Christum, salutem meam.

Verse 30. For mine eyes have seen, &c.] A great satisfaction. So it was to Job, chap. 42. 5. when he could say, I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee. What shall it be to us when we shall see God face to face? &c. 1 Cor. 13. 12.

Bucholc. Colamus hic Deum reverenter donec a spe ad speciem transeamus. Worship we God with reverence till we come to see him face to face.

Verse 31. Before the face of all the people] As a banner displaid, as a beacon on a hill, or as the Sun in heaven to be beheld of all: as the brasen serpent was lifted up in the wilderness, &c. John 3. 15. Tit. 2. 11.

Verse 32. The glory of thy people Israel] Oh! pitty their perverseness, and pray their conversion, that the Jews may call God Abba, the Gentiles Father, Dan. 12. 11. There is a Prophesie of the Iews final restauration (saith one) and the time is expressed, which is 1290. years after the ceasing of the daily sacrifice, and the setting up of the abomination of desolation: which is conceived to be about Iulians time, who assayed to re-build the Temple of the Iews, but was hindered from heaven. This was Anno Dom. 360. to which if you add 1290. years, it will pitch the calculation upon the year 1650.

And for a sign, &c.] For a but-mark, against whom his enemies shall shoot the shafts of their gain-sayings: Like as at the sack of Constantinople, the Image of the Crucifix was taken down by the Turks, and a Turks cap put upon the head thereof, and so set up, and shot at with their arrows, calling it the God of the Christians.

Verse 35. Yea a sword shall pierce, &c.] This confutes that of Plautus; Mulier nulla cordicitus dolet ex animo. The word here rendred sword, properly signifies a long Thracian dart, entring into her soul. So that she was I doubt not (as other mothers are) ante partum onerosa, in partu dolorosa post partum laborosa; yet so, as that she made misery it self amiable, by her gracious deportment, as one saith of the L. Iane Grey.

Before these days came (said Master Bradford Martyr) how many thought of themselves, that they had been in Gods bosome, and so were taken, and would be taken in the world? But now we see whose they are: for to whom we obey, his servants we are, &c. In the Palatinate scarce one man in twenty stood out: but fell to Popery, as fast as leaves in Autumn.

Verse 36. From her Viginity] i. e. She was a pure virgin when married to her husband. All are not virgins that pass for such: some have their secret conveyances, Prov. 30. 19, 20. They can eat stollen bread, and afterwards so wipe their lips that not the least crum shall be seen.

Verse 37. A Widdow of about 84. years] She was now ripe, and ready, even of her own accord, to fall into Gods hand, as ripe fruits do into the hand of the gatherer. And the thoughts of death had long since forbad the banes of a second marriage. Cogita te quotidie moriturum, & de secundis nuptiis nunquam cogitabis. Think of death, and the thoughts of marrying again will dye within thee. Hier. ad Lam.

Verse 38. Gave thanks likewise] Succinuit Simeoni, seconded Simeon, and sang the same song. This was somewhat extraordinary, as being against that 1 Tim. 2.12 and therefore fell out only in troublesom and confused times of the Church; as likewise Huldah the Propheteſs. Our Prædicantisſe have here no patronage.

Verse 39. According to the Law of the Lord] This is often recorded of them in this Chapter, that they observed the Law exactly, to their singular commendation. The Law is to be kept as the apple of ones eye, Prov. 7. 2. Count nothing little that God commands. It is as much treason to coyn pence as twenty-shilling-pieces: And they were commanded not to eat of the blood, as ever they looked for Gods blessing.

They returned into Galilee] After they had first fled down into Egypt, Mat. 2.

Verse 40. And the grace of God was upon him] Without measure; so that of his overflow we have all received grace for grace. He had a fulness, not repletive only, but diffusive too: not of plenty only, but of bounty also; not only of abundance, but of redundancy. He was anointed with the Oyl of gladness, not only above, but for his fellows. Joh. 1. 16.

Verse 41. Now his parents went, &c.] Every male was to appear thrice a year before the Lord. In the females it was a free-will offering, and well accepted.

Verse 42. And when he was twelve years old] What he did from his Infancy hitherto, the Scripture is silent: Papists fain many idle relations, and thereby expose us to the jears of Jewish and Turkish miscreants. Where the Scripture hath no tongue, we must have no ears.

Verse 43. Joseph and his mother knew not] One would wonder they should be so careless of so peerless a pearl: They might well think there were enough at Jerusalem, among the Herodians especially, that would have been glad to have dispatcht any that should take upon them to be Messias the Prince, as Daniel calleth him. Dan. 9. 25. When they fled into Egypt for fear of Herod, they lost not the child Jesus; as neither there, nor in their return from thence; But at the Feast they did, and in that greatest solemnity. Hence Stella observeth, that there is far greater danger of losing Christ in time of prosperity, and worldly affluence, then in days of persecution and tribulation. It was a sad loss of our Saviour, that his Disciples had not with them. Christians are to seek Christ among their friends. Stella.

Verse 44. Sought him among their kinsfolk] They knew him to be of a disposition not strange and Stoical, but sweet and sociable. Let not us stye up our selves in a stern austerity, but run into the company of those now, that must be our everlasting companions in heaven.

Verse 45. And when they found him not] The best are sometimes at a loss, and hard put to it for three days, or so. And this, mostly, for their security, as the Church in the Canticles.

Verse 46. Sitting in the midst of the Doctors] Christus prius sedet in medio Doctorum (ut recte distin. 36 Gratian.) quam publice capit munus Mediatoris obire.

Hearing them, and posing them] In this very year the Temple was prophaned, even at the Passeover. For the Priests having opened the Temple doors by night, as the manner was, found a great company of dead-mens bones in the morning, thrown here and there through the whole house. This, saith Josephus, was thought to have been done by the Samaritans, in spight to the Jews. But others think God had a special hand in it, to signifie that the Temple-services were shortly to dye and determine; now that the Lord of heaven and earth had taught therein with his own lively voice. Dion. Chem.

Verse 47. At his understanding] Which was so large, even as man, that some have affirmed it to be infinite, and uncreated: but of this, his manhood, being a creature, was uncapable. Howbeit here our Saviour put forth a beam of his Deity, which yet he soon drew in again, and lay long after obscured.

Verse 48. Have sought thee sorrowing] Animo tristissimo, & afflictissimo. God often cures a Lethargy of security, by a feaver of perplexity.

Verse 49. Wist ye not] Men, be they pleased or displeased, God must be obeyed.

Verse 1. Pontius Pilate being governour]

Δημοι δουλοι. Δημαρια. TAcitus calleth him Procurator only of Judea. But Saint Luke here makes little difference betwixt his office and the Imperial honor of his Master Tiberius: for he useth the same word to express both. The Earl of Flanders counts it a great prerogative, that he writes himself Comes Dei gratiâ. Others only Dei clementiâ. The Duke of Millain, that he is the prime Duke of Europe. The Deputy of Ireland, that there cometh no Vicegerent in Europe more neer the Majesty and prerogative of a King then he, &c.

Verse 3. Preaching the Baptism of Repentance] Johns note was still, Repentance. Christ comes not, where this Herald hath not been before him. Yet now it is come to that pass, that many men scorn to hear a Sermon of Repentance. Its a sign, say some, that the Minister hath been idle that week, or that his stock is spent when he comes to preach of such a common theam as Repentance. If God be not merciful, we shall quickly dispute away all our Repentance, as a famous preacher justly complaineth.

Βαραθρον Barathrum. Verse 4. In the book of the words of Esaias] Called a great roul, Esa. 8.1. (because it treats of great things, Maxima in minimo) and said to be written with the Pen of a man, that is clearly that the simplest of men may understand it, Deut. 30.11.

Verse 5. Every vally shall be filled] Every hole, or hollow. Fainting of heart unfits the way for Christ, as well as the swelling hills of pride. Plain things will joyn in every point one with another; not so, rough and hollow things: so plain spirits close with Gods Truths; not so, those that are swoln, and uneven.

That we may find in our selves that confident answer, stipulation, or interrogation, rather of a good conscience toward God, mentioned by St. Peter, 1 Epist. 3.21. in allusion (I suppose) to this text.

Verse 11. He that hath two coats] Thus Tyrus evidenced her repentance, Isa. 23.18. by feeding and cloathing Gods Saints with her merchandize. Thus Zacheus, Dorcas, &c. This is all the lesson that for the present he sets them, being but young scholars in the school of Christ.

Verse 12. Then came also Publicans] These were Toll-takers, Custom-gatherers for the Romans; and most of them greedy gripers. Publicans they were called, because they took up publica, the goods of the Empire. See the Note on Mat 9.9.

But what doth the Pope that holds forth his feet to be kiſſed? Is not this he that ſits as God in the Temple of God? Is not this Dominus Deus noſter Papa? Learned he not this abominable inſolency of Diocleſian that bloody Perſecutor? who as he was the firſt Roman Emperor that would be worſhipped as God, ſo he was the firſt that wore ſhooes embelliſhed with precious ſtones, and held forth his feet to be kiſſed of his proſtrate ſuitors. Eutrop.

Verſe 17. Whoſe fann] Viz. The preaching of the Goſpel.

Verſe 18. And many other things preached he] Being concionatur admirabilis (as one ſaith of Jeremy) an admirable preacher, full of pregnant inſtructions, and admonitions. He did no miracle indeed, but he uttered many ſweet Oracles, which St. Luke here paſſeth over, that he may haſten to ſpeak of Chriſt, his main deſign. Kockerm.

Verſe 19. For Herodias his brother Philips wife] Whom it was not lawful for Herod to have, though Philip were dead, as Joſephus ſaith he was. This was the caſe ſo much controverted here and beyond Seas in Henry the eighths time, touching his marriage with his brother Arthurs widow, by Papal diſpenſation. The King had firſt a ſcruple caſt into his mind about it by the Biſhop of Baion the French Embaſſador, who came to him to conſult of a Marriage between the Lady Mary, and the Duke of Orleans, whether Mary were legitimate, &c. This gave occaſion to the caſting the Popes authority out of England. Mary was forced, for fear of death, to renounce the Biſhop of Rome, and to acknowledge her Mothers marriage to have been inceſtuous and unjuſt, &c. Though afterwards, ſhe ſet up the Pope here again: and it was her policy, ſo to get, and keep the Crown upon her head. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 7. Camdens Eliſab. Introd.

And for all the evils, which Herod, &c.] John reproved him with the ſame liberty that Herod committed them. So did John Chryſoſtome the great ones of his time. Ità quidem ut etiam Ducum, Eutropii & Gainæ, imò ipſius Imperatoris errata reprehenderet: He ſpared not Dukes, Princes, nay not the Emperor himſelf. Oſiand. Hiſt. Eccleſ. Cent. 5. lib. 1. cap. 6.

Verſe 20. Added yet this] There is no ſtint in ſin: but as one wedge makes way for another: ſo here. As after Jonathan and his Armour-bearer, came the whole hoſt: So.

Verſe 21. And praying, the heaven was opened] Prayer is the key of Gods Kingdom: And muſt be uſed, as at other times, ſo eſpecially when we or ours receive the Sacraments: though the moſt, if urged hereto, muſt ſay, if they ſay truly, as 1 Sam. 17. 39. I cannot go with theſe accoutrements: for I am not accuſtomed to them.

Verſe 22.] See the Note on Mat. 3. 16, 17.

Verſe 23. Being (as was ſuppoſed)] But falſly: for Joſeph was no more then his Pater politicus, as Poſtellus calleth him, his foſter-father, reputed father.

Which was the Son of Heli] That is, his ſon in law. For Heli was Maries natural father: and it is Maries genealogy that is here deſcribed: but put upon Joſeph, becauſe the Hebrews reckon not their genealogies by women, but by men only. So Ruth 1. 11, 12, 13.

Verſe 24, 25, &c.] St. Luke reckoneth from the laſt of Chriſts progenitors to the firſt: And firſt he mentioneth private men, not read of in the Scriptures. 2. Captains after the Babyloniſh Captivity. 3. Kings and men of great name in and before the Captivity. 4. Private perſons again before David up to the Patriarchs. 5. Laſtly, the Patriarchs themſelves up to Adam the Protoplaſt, the firſt and common parent.

Verſe 27. Which was the Son of Neri] Salathiel was naturally the ſon of Neri, but but legally, and by succession the son of Jechoniah, Mat. 4. 12. for he succeeded him in the Kingdom. Neri, which signifieth My candle, seemeth to have been so named from the candle which the Lord reserved for David and his house, 2 Chron. 21. 7.

Verse 30. Which was the son of Simeon] Our Saviours genealogy is here the more accurately described, because there were that would have substituted and put false Christs upon the Church, Ezra. 2. 62. The Priests that could not produce their Genealogies were outed.

Verse 34, 35. Which was the Son of Thara] So there are reckoned ten Generations from Abraham to Noah: And again, ten from Noah to Adam.

Bez. in loc. Pareus in Gen. 11. Alsted. chron. M. Lightfoots Harm. p. 212.

Verse 36. Which was the Son of Cainan] This name crept by some means, into the Greek copies after Jeromes time, saith Beza and Paræus. Others say, that Saint Luke herein followed the Septuagints translation, out of wisdom and charity to the Hellenists or Greek-Jews, that had received it, and read it. 2. That writing for heathens, he followed the heathens Bible in his quotations. 3. That in his Genealogies he was to be a Coppier, not a Corrector.

Verse 38. Which was the Son of God] Not by Generation, but Creation. Therefore the Syriack translator hath it Demen Elaha, A Deo, Of God, not Bar Elaha, the son of God.

Chap. IV.

Verse 1. Returned from Jordan, and was led]

NO sooner out of the water of baptism, but in the fire of temptation. After greatest feelings, we are to expect sharpest assaults: neither can we better quench the Devils fiery darts, then with the water of baptism. We read, saith Luther, of a certain holy Virgin, who, whensoever sollicited to sin, would stop the tempters mouth with this one answer, Christiana sum, I am a Christian. Intellexit enim hostis statim virtutem Baptismi & fidei —— & fugit ab ea. Satan could not abide the mention of baptism, but fled from her presently.

Verse 2. Being fourty days] During which time, he was set upon with all sorts of temptations. These three here recorded were likely the very worst; in quibus Diabolus omnes astus & fraudis suæ sacculos deplevit, (as one saith) wherein the Devil did his utmost.

Prov. 20. 17. Verse 3. Command this stone] Bread of deceit is sweet to a man, but afterwards his mouth shall be filled with gravel. Compare this verse with verse 9. and see how the Perkins. Devil usually tempteth by extreams, to make men offend either in defect, or excess. Thus he tempted Master Knox upon his death-bed, if not to despair, then to presume that heaven should be his, for his zeal in the Scottish Reformation.

Verse 4.] See Mat. 4. 4.

Verse 5. Shewed unto him all the Kingdoms] In a visible land-skip of his own making, presented to the eye.

Verse 6. To whomsoever I will, I give it] The Pope, as heir to the Devil, takes upon him to be Dominus regnorum mundi. Boniface. 8. wrote to Philip King of France, that he was Lord of all, both Temporals and Spirituals, in all Countries. Os papæ & culeus diaboli in eodem sunt prædicamento, saith one. But, Cui volo do illa, is Gods only to say, Dan. 4. 22.

Verse 7. If thou wilt worship] Papa dulià adorandus, say the Canonists.

Verse 8. Get thee behind me] See the Note on Mat. 4. 10.

Verse 9. 10, 11, 12.] See Notes on Mat. 4. 9, 10, 11.

Verse 13. He departed from him for a season] We must look for the tother bout, and in a calm prepare for a storm. The tempter is restless and impudent: so that a man is to expect, if he live out his days, to be urged to all sins, to the breach of every branch of the ten commandments, and to be put to it in respect of every Article of the Creed.

Verse 14. In the power of the Spirit] Without which the word is preached to no purpose.

purpoſe. Cathedram in cœlo habet, qui corda docet, ſaith Auguſtine. It is with the word and ſpirit, as with the veins and arteries; as the veins carry the blood, ſo the arteries carry the ſpirits to quicken the blood.

Verſe 15. Glorified of All] Envy it ſelf was thrattled, which yet uſually waits upon vertue. Every Zopyrus hath his Zoilus. Lipſius complaineth (an Juſtus ipſe viderit) that now adays men have left off, not only to do things praiſe worthy; but alſo to praiſe thoſe that do ſo.

Verſe 16. Where he had been brought up] The Jews were to be kind to the Egyptians, and to pray for the proſperity of Babylon, where they had been bred, and fed. Be ye thankful, Coloſ. 3. 15. viz. to your friends and benefactors.

And ſtood up for to read] In honor of the word that he read: So Neh. 8. 5. A commendable cuſtom.

Verſe 17. He found the place] Whether he looked for it, or it ſo fell out by a providence, its uncertain. Origen, after his fall, lighting on that text, Pſal. 50. What haſt thou to do to take my words, &c. fell into a paſſion of weeping, and came out of the Pulpit, as not able to ſpeak to the people. Auguſtine hearing from heaven, Tolle, lege, and happening upon that place Rom. 13. 14. Put ye on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c. was preſently converted thereby. So was Cyprian, by reading the propheſie of Jonah. Aug. confeſſ. lib. 8. cap. 12.

Verſe 18. He hath anoynted me to preach] Therefore the Goſpel is a ſure ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, ſith its an effect of the holy Spirit: doubt not of its excellency, authority, certainty, ſufficiency. See my True Treaſure.

Verſe 19. The acceptable year of the Lord] A joyful Jubilee. Let us not ſtand out the time, leaſt we be bored in the ear by the Devil.

Verſe 20. Were faſtned on him] A good help againſt diſtractions. Our hearts are fickle and fugitive, if not hard held to it.

Verſe 21. This day is the Scripture, &c.] This was the ſumm of his Sermon, as were alſo the Prophecies we read, the heads only and ſhort notes of the Prophets larger diſcourſes. Brevity breeds obſcurity.

Verſe 22. Is not this Joſephs ſon?] And what of that? But it is ſtill the courſe of our hearers, to look round about us, if poſſibly they may find any hole in our coat, through which to ſlight and ſlip the cords of our Doctrine, though they cannot but admire it.

Verſe 23. Phyſitian heal thy ſelf] That is thy Country. So that for a man to cure his Country, is to cure himſelf.

Verſe 24. No Prophet is accepted] See the Note on Mat. 13. 57.

Verſe 25. Many widows were in Iſrael] q. d. God hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, &c. He is a free agent, and may do with his own as he pleaſeth. If the Prophets, by the Spirits direction, healed and helped forraigners ſooner then Iſraelites; what ſo great wonder that Chriſt did not that for his own Country, that he did for others?

Verſe 26. That was a widow] A calamitous name, 2 Sam. 14. 5. The Hebrews call her Almanah, a dumb woman, becauſe either ſhe dare not, or may not ſpeak for her ſelf: but God profeſſeth himſelf the patron of ſuch; and he can ſpeak for them in the hearts of their greateſt adverſaries. Happy they in ſuch an Advocate.

Verſe 27. Naaman the Syrian] Nor he neither ſo long as he looked upon Gods Jordan with Syrian eyes.

Verſe 28. And all they in the Synagogue] Though but plain ruſticks, yet they ſoon underſtood this ſaying of preaching to the Gentiles: which put them into an anger, and our Saviour into a danger.

Verſe 29. Thruſt him out of the City] As unworthy to tread on their pavement. And ſo mad they were, that they could neither ſtay till the buſineſs were brought to a judicial tryal, nor forbear execution till the Sabbath were over.

Verſe 30. But he paſſing, &c.] Like a ſecond Sampſon: his own arm ſaved him. This might have convinced his adverſaries; but that they were mad with malice.

Verſe 31. And came down to Capernaum] Contempt drives away Chriſt. And woe be unto you if I forſake you, Hoſ. 9. 12. Contend earneſtly for the Faith, ſith it is but once delivered to the Saints, Jude 3. You muſt never expect another edition of it.

Chap. V.

Verse 1. As the people pressed upon him]

THis was both an argument of the truth of his humanity (that he was throng'd and thrust together by the unmannerly multitude) and a part of his passion.

Verse 2. Were washing their nets] Though they laboured last night, and had taken nothing. Ferendum & sperandum. Hope beguiles calamity, as good company doth the way.

ἠρώτησεν. Verse 3. He prayed him] Gr. He gently asked him, Will you be pleased to thrust out a little? See Philem. 8, 9. Posse & nolle, nobile est.

Taught the people out of the ship] Any place served him for a pulpit. So if men be desirous to hear, they will make a mat a seat, a pair of legs a seat.

Verse 4. Let down your nets] This is the fare he paies them, for the use of their ship. No man loseth by Christ.

Spartian. Verse 5. We have toyled all night, &c.] Omnia fui, & nihil expedit, said Severus the Emperor. See Hab. 2. 13. Hag. 2. 6. If God stop not that hole in the bottom of the bag, all will run thorough.

And have taken nothing] If Ministers be put so to complain, it is to be feared that Satan caught the fish, ere they came at their net.

Verse 6. And their net brake] Yet the fishes got not out: which some note for another miracle.

Verse 7. Filled both the ships] Here the dumb fishes do cleerly preach Christ to be the Son of God.

Ἀνὴρ ἁμαρτωλός. Verse 8. For I am a sinful man] Gr. A man, a sinner, a very mixture and compound of dirt and sin. See the like phrase, Numb. 32. 14.

Verse 10. Thou shalt catch men] See the Note on Mat. 4. 19.

Verse 11. They forsook all, and followed him] They had given their names to him before, John 1. But now they see by this miracle his power to provide for them, they leave all to live with him. We love to see how we shall subsist.

Verse 12. If thou wilt, thou canst] It is a ready way to speed, to found our prayers upon the power of God.

Verse 13. I will, be thou clean] So ready is Christ to gratifie his suppliants, yea to be commanded by them, Isa. 45. 11.

Verse 14. For a testimony unto them] For a Bill of Indictment against them. Reprobates shall give an heavy account to God of all the means and offers of grace.

Verse 15. But so much the more] Fame follows them that fly from it, and the contrary: as the Crocodile doth.

Verse 16. And he withdrew] Pray, if you mean to prosper.

Verse 17. And the power of the Lord] So tis, when any Ordinance is afoot.

Verse 18. And behold men brought] See the Notes on Mat. 8. 2, 3, &c. and on Mark 2. 3, &c.

Verse 19. They went upon the house top] Which (according to the custom of building in those Eastern Countries) was flat laid, and surrounded with Battlements, Deut. 22. 8.

Verse 20. Thy sins are forgiven thee] Let our sicknesses mind us of our sins, that we soon seek pardon.

verse 23. Whether is easier] q.d. Neither of either: for both are equally hard, and feisable to God alone.

Verſe 1. On the ſecond Sabbath after the firſt]

Herom ſaith, that he asked Nazianzen what this ſecond Sabbath after the firſt was? Nazianzen anſwered, I'le tell you that, when I come next into the Pulpit, for there you cannot contradict me. Ita per jocum dixit (ſaith Melanchthon) quod hodiè ſerio multi imitantur. See the Note on Mat. 12. 1. Verſe 3. Have ye not read?] Yes, over and over: but either underſtood not, or, through malice, diſſembled it. Quilibet noſtrum de lege interrogatus facilius quam nomini ſuo reſpondet, ſaith Joſephus. The Jews were all very well verſed in the Scriptures.

Verse 30. Give to every man, &c.] General Norrice never thought he had that that he gave not way. It is not lack, but love of money that maketh men churls. Men believe not that of Martial,

The Usurer breeding money of money to the third and fourth generation, proves like the butlers box (saith one) which at length draws all the counters to it. Our Saviour in the former verse, maketh him worse then other sinners, who lend to receive the like: but he lends to receive more.

Verſe 3. He ſent unto him] Saint Matthew ſaith, He went unto him, ſc. by his Meſſengers.

Verſe 4. That he was worthy] So they held him: but he held himſelf unworthy, ver. 6. God in like manner ſaith that Jeruſalem had received double for her ſins, Iſa. 40. 2. But Jeruſalem her ſelf ſaith, Our God hath puniſhed us leſs then our ſins, Ezra 9. 13. Too much, ſaith God: Too little, ſaith ſhe: and yet how ſweetly and beautifully doth this kind of contradiction become both?

Verſe 5. Built us a Synagogue] Antiochus had burnt up the Synagogues in ſundry places. This man, now converted, is content to be at coſt for God and his people. So the Iſraelites received to favour again after their foul fall in ſetting up the golden calf, brought enough and to ſpare toward the work of the Tabernacle.

Carried out] ſc. Out of the City: for without the gates were the burying-places of old, for fear of annoyance by ill air. Hence harlots were called Mœchæ buſtuariæ, because they were thruſt out of the City to play their pranks, where the dead were buried, as being dead whiles they lived. Turnab. Adverſar.

Verſe 13. He had compaſſion on her] Of his own free accord, and unrequeſted, he raiſed him. Chriſt had a moſt tender heart. How ſhall he not pitty and provide for his praying people?

Verſe 14. Young man I ſay unto thee, Ariſe] Had he ſaid as much to all the dead (as once he ſhall, Surgite mortui, venite in judicium) they had certainly all riſen immediately.

Verſe 16. And there came a fear upon all] This was timor amicalis, a fear of reverence, for it produced thankfulneſs.

Verſe 17. And this rumour] Here the Sun of righteouſneſs, that hath healing in his wings, ſhone forth in his ſtrength, and drew all eyes to him.

Verſe 18. And the Diſciples of John] Having a Zeal for their Maſter, but not according to knowledge, See Mat. 11. 2.

Verſe 19. Art thou he that ſhould come] The ſoul reſteth not till it pitch upon Chriſt. See the Notes on Mat. 11. 2, &c.

Verſe 20, 21, 22, &c.] See Notes on Mat. 11. 2.

Verſe 23. And bleſſed is he] This is check to them for their prepoſterous zeal for John, their Maſter. Therefore alſo our Saviour commends not John till they were departed.

Verſe 28. But he that is leaſt] This is no ſmall comfort to the Miniſters of the Goſpel, againſt the contempts caſt upon them by the world. They are ſome-bodies in heaven, what ever men make of them.

ledged his righteouſneſs, repenting of their ſins, and believing Johns and Chriſts teſtimony, which the Phariſees ſo pertinaciouſly rejected; and ſo, deſervedly periſhed. For as wine, a ſtrong remedy againſt hemlock, yet mingled with it doubleth the force of the poiſon: ſo it is with the word when mingled with unbelief, and caſt away with contempt.

Verſe 30. Rejected the counſell of God] Being ingrati gratiæ Dei, as Ambroſe ſpeaketh, and ſo much the further off, for that they ſaw the people ſo forward.

Verſe 37. A woman] Not that woman, ſay ſome, mentioned Mat. 26. 6. & John 11. 2. but ſome other.

A ſinner] A ſtrumpet, a ſhe-ſinner, as their mates call ſuch.

Verſe 38. To waſh his feet] They that make their eyes a fountain to waſh Chriſts feet in, ſhall have his ſide for a fountain, to waſh their ſouls in.

Kiſſed his feet] But how many now refuſe thoſe kiſſes of his mouth, Cant. c. 1. by deſpiſing the word preached, that ſweet pledge of his love?

Verſe 39. This man, if he were a Prophet] See the picture of an hypocrite, ſlighting and cenſuring his betters.

What manner of woman this is] Syr. What an ill name ſhe hath, for a light huſwife.

Verſe 40. I have ſomewhat to ſay to thee] He that receives a courteſie, we ſay, ſells his liberty. But ſo did not Chriſt at Simons, at Martha's, &c. table. His mouth was not ſtopped with good chear. He entertains the Phariſees with as many manaces, as they do him with meſſes of meat.

Verſe 41. There was a certain Creditor] Chriſt tells the ſupercilious and ſelf-conceited Phariſee by this Parable, that himſelf was a ſinner alſo as well as the woman, and as a debtor to Gods judgement, had as much need of his grace in Chriſt for remiſſion of ſin, and removal of wrath.

Verſe 42. And when they had nothing to pay] We are all Non-ſolvents, ſtark beggars and bankrupts, having nothing of our own but ſin, and hell: nothing to ſay for our ſelves why we ſhould not to priſon, but that of Auguſtine, Ego admiſi, Domine, unde tu damnare potes me, ſed non amiſiſti, unde tu ſalvare potes me: Lord I have done enough to undo me for ever: but thou haſt yet enough to make me happy for ever. I acknowledge the debt, that's all I can do: O croſs the book, and draw the red lines of Chriſts blood, over the black lines of my ſins, &c.

Verſe 43. Thou haſt rightly judged] See here and imitate our Saviours candour: cui virtuti per ſe pulcherrimæ grande precium raritas addidit, noſtro quidem ævo, ſaith One, This is a rare, and rich vertue.

Verſe 44. She hath waſhed my feet with tears] Her heart was a ſacred Limbeck, out of which thoſe tears were diſtilled: Never did any man read his pardon with dry eyes.

Waſhed my feet with tears, &c.] We read not that the Virgin Mary ever did as this greater ſinner did. Repentance is the fair child of that ſoul mother, ſin, as the Romans ſaid of Pompey. And it is queſtion whether more glorifies God, Innocence or Penitence?

Ἐχθρὸς πατρὸς φίλτατον τέκνον.

Verſe 45. Thou gaveſt me no kiſs] Which yet was their uſual way of ſalutation, 1 Pet. 5. 14.

Verſe 46. Mine head with oyl] Which yet was ordinary at ſolemn feaſts. But Simon was too ſhort, as not underſtanding the worth of his preſent gueſt.

Verſe 47. For ſhe loved much] Nam, notificativum eſt, non impulſivum. Her love was an Argument (not a cauſe) that her ſins were forgiven her.

Verſe 48. Thy ſins are forgiven thee] Melanchthon makes mention of a godly woman, who having upon her death-bed been much conflicted, and afterwards much comforted, brake out into theſe words; Now, and not till now, I underſtand the meaning of thoſe words, Thy ſins are forgiven. It is ſtoried of another, that courting a curtezan, and underſtanding that her name was Mary: he remembred Mary Magdalen, and forbearing to commit that act of filthineſs that he intended, became a ſound convert.

Verse 49. Who is this that forgiveth sins also?] Ignorance of Christ and his office bred this offence, as it doth many other. It is easie to stumble in the dark.

Verse 50. Go in peace] Faith hath virtutem pacativam, Rom. 5. 1. It lodgeth a blessed calm in the conscience, and fortifies the heart against all discouragements. Men may mutter, as here they did, but the answer, or rather demand of faith is, Who shall condemn? it is Christ that justifieth, Rom. 8. Better be envyed then pitied.

Chap. VIII.

Verse 1. He went through every City]

TO teach us unweariableness in Gods work. He went about doing good: so should we, waiting all opportunities.

Verse 2. Which had been healed] Exod. 31. After sickness they were to offer to God the ransom of their lives. Hezekiah testified his thankfulness for recovery, by a song: these good women, by following Christ; when they might have staid at home with more ease to themselves; and more thank of their friends. Nay, very Heathens after a fit of sickness, would consecrate something to their gods.

Mary, called Magdalen, out of whom went seven devils] Which some interpret of seven deadly sins.

Verse 3. Joanna the wife of Chuza, Herods steward] Or Treasurer, as the Arabick calleth him: his Vicar-General, or Protetrach. This Court-Lady followeth Christ: so did Serena the Empress, who was therefore Martyred by her husband Diocletian. So Elizabeth, Queen of Denmark; of whom Luther testifieth, that she died a faithful Professor of the Reformed Religion: and addeth, Scilicet Christus etiam aliquando voluit Reginam in cœlum vehere. Christ would once save a Queen; which he doth not often. Luth. in Epist. ad Jo. Agricol.

Verse 4. And when much people, &c.] See the Notes on Mat. 13. 2, 3, &c.

Verse 11.] See Mat. 13. 18.

Verse 12. Taketh away the word] Least, if it should lie long upon their hard hearts, it should break through them with its weight, as being able to save their souls. Jam. 1. 21.

Verse 13. With joy] Which yet was but a flash.

Verse 14. Go forth, &c.] Viz. About their worldly businesses; which as the lean kine in Pharoahs dream, devour the fat, and it is nothing seen by them. After a while, they remember no more then the man in the Moon doth, what they had heard delivered.

Verse 15. In an honest] Referred to the end, and intent in the action.

And good heart] In respect of inward renewed qualities.

Having heard the word, keep it] As food or physick, which if not kept, profiteth not. They incorporate it into their souls, so as it becomes an ingrafted word; they are transformed into the same image, conformed to the heavenly pattern.

With patience] Or, with tarriance for the fit season: Not as that rath-ripe fruit, ver. 13. and Psal. 129. ἐν ὑπομονῇ.

Verse 16. No man when he hath lighted, &c.] q. d. Though to you it is given to know Mysteries, &c. as verse 10. yet not for your own use onely, but that your light may shine before men.

Verse 17.] See Mat. 16. 26. Mark 4. 22. Luk. 12. 2.

Verse 18. Take heed therefore how ye hear] For else ye shall neither bear good fruits, nor be born with for your barrenness. All shall out, and you shall smart for it.

Even that which he seemeth to have] There is a great deal of seemingness abroad: and every grace hath its counterfeit. Simia quàm similis, turpissima bestia, nobis, saith Ennius. But God strips men of common gifts: and counterfeit complexion will not long hold.

Verse 19, 20, 21.] See Mat. 12. 46. Mar. 3. 31.

Verse 22, 23, &c.] See Mat. 8. 23. Mar. 4. 36.

Verse 25. Where is your faith?] It is not the having faith, but the living by it, the actuating of it, that helps us in an exigence.

Verse 26.] See Mat. 8. 28. Mar. 5. 2.

Verse 27. A certain man which had devils] All Pharaohs cruelty exercised over the Israelites, was nothing to this. Oh then the unexpressible torments of the damned! Utinam ubique de Gehenna disseretur! saith a Father. I could wish men would discourse much and oft of hell. Chrysost.

This the Diſciples might do, but this was no warrant to thoſe Male-feriati amongſt us, who (if fame belie them not) pretending to an immediate call from God to go and preach the Goſpel in Galilee, ſold their eſtates, ſet forward for that place, taking neither ſcrip no ſcrap with them; reſolving to truſt God for their neceſſary ſuſtentation. Verse 55. But he turned and rebuked them] He did it not slightly, and by the by, but seriously, and on set purpose: so must we rebuke and rebate our vindictive spirits, our unruly lusts, when like kine in a strait they rush and ride, one upon the back of another.

Ye know not what manner of spirits ye are of] Not of Elias his spirit, as ye imagine: this wild-fire was never kindled on Gods hearth, as his zeal was: you are men of another mould then Elias. He was a Minister of indignation, you of consolation: his actions fit not you, because your persons are not like his: It is a rare thing to be of an heroicall Spirit, saith the Moralist. Verse 27. With all thy heart, and &c.] Serviendum Deo toto corde: id est, amore summo, more vero, ore fideli re omni: Hoc non fit verbis: Marce ut ameris, ama. Martial.

Here some weak Christians are troubled, as conceiting that they love their children, friends, &c. better then God. But it is answered, 1. When two streams run in one channel (as here nature and grace do) they run stronger then one stream doth. When a man loves God and the things of God, grace is alone: nature yields nothing to that. 2. We must not judge by an indeliberate passion. The love of God is a constant stream: not a torrent, but a current, that runs all our life time, but runs still, and without noise, as the waters of Shiloh, and of Nilus, nullas confessus murmure vires, that runs smoothly. as a grave man of God once ſaid; Whereas many other have and eat their bread ſtale, let us receive it and eat it daily new from thine hand.

Verſe 4. For We alſo forgive] So that our forgiving of others ſeemeth for Gods promiſe ſake, to be as it were the intervenient cauſe, or the ſine qua non of Gods forgiving us, ſaith learned Beza.

And lead us not, &c.] One argument that we ſhall perſevere, is, the prayers of the whole Church, offering up this daily ſacrifice, Lead us not, &c.

Verſe 5. Three loaves] He asketh no more, but receiveth as many as he needeth. So do all Gods ſuitors. His ears are not only open to their prayers; But his eyes alſo are upon their neceſſities, to give them more then they ask or think.

Verſe 6. For a friend] See Prov. 17. 17. with the Note there.

Verſe 7. Trouble me not] The carnally ſecure, caſt into Jezabels bed, unworthily anſwer Chriſt on this ſort, when he ſtands at the door and knocks by the hammer of his word, and the motions of his Spirit, which they ſlight and withſtand.

ἀναίδειαν. Verſe 8. Becauſe of his importunity] Gr. His impudency: A metaphor from beggars, that will not be ſaid, but are impudently importunate.

Verſe 9. Ask, and it ſhall be given] Ask, ſeek, knock. It is not a ſimple repetition of the ſame thing, but an emphatical gradation, and ſhews inſtantiſſimam neceſſitatem, ſaith Auguſtine. Nec dicitur quid dabitur, ſaith he, to ſhew that the gift is a thing ſupra omne nomen, above all name.

Verſe 10.] See Mat. 7. 7.

Verſe 11. For every one, &c.] Sozomen ſaith of Apollonius, that he never asked any thing of God that he obtained not. Hic homo potuit apud Deum quod voluit, ſaid one concerning Luther: He could have what he would of God.

Verſe 12, 13.] See Mat. 7. 9, 10, 11.

Verſe 14. And it was dumb] So it was a double miracle: Gods favours ſeldom come ſingle: there is a ſeries, a concatenation of them, and every former draws on a future.

Verſe 15.] See Mat. 9. 34. & 12. 24.

Verſe 16. 17, 18, 19, &c.] See Mat. 12. 38. & 16. 1. Mar. 3. 24.

Verſe 21. When a ſtrong man armed] Qui ſe dedebant, arma tradebant. Cæſar de bell. Gall. lib. 3. They that yielded threw down their arms.

Verſe 24. Seeking reſt] His only reſt is to moleſt and miſchief men.

Verſe 25. Swept and Garniſhed] By a little formal repentance, and a few faint reſolutions of reformation.

Verſe 26. Seven other Spirits] As the Jaylor lays load of Iron on him that had eſcaped. None are worſe then thoſe that have been good, and are naught: and might be good, but will be naught.

Verſe 27. Bleſſed is the womb that bare thee] So the Heathen Poet.

Ovid Metam. lib. 4.

——qui te genuêre beati,
Et mater fœlix, & quæ dedit ubera nutrix.

Verſe 28. Yea rather bleſſed] His Diſciples were more bleſſed in hearing Chriſt, then his mother in bearing him.

Verſe 29. Were gathered thick together] All on a heap, either to ſee a ſign, or to ἐπαθροιζομένων. hear what he would ſay to the motion.

Verſe 30. So alſo ſhall the Son of man be] ſc. A ſign, not of confirmation, but of condemnation.

Verſe 31, 32.] See Mat. 12. 41, 42.

Verſe 33. No man When he hath lighted, &c.] Our Saviour here warneth thoſe that had given ſome good hope of their Repentance, that they cheriſh their light, and walk by it.

Verſe 34. When thine eye is ſingle] A ſingle eye, is that that looks on God ſingly, abſtracted from all other things.

Verſe 35, 36.] See Mat. 6. 22, 23.

Verſe 36. Having no part dark] The Regenerate man is totus diaphanus, like a Chryſtal glaſs, with a Lamp in the middeſt.

Verſe 37. Sate down to meat] And yet, at their own tables, he ſets the Phariſees forth forth in their colours, and entertaineth them with as many menaces as they do him with meſſes of meat.

Verſe 38. That he had not waſhed] This the Phariſees deemed as great a ſin as to commit fornication. Godw. Antiq. Heb. 49.

Verſe 39.] See Mat. 23. 25.

Verſe 40. Did not he that made, &c.] Ought he not therefore to be ſerved with both? It is the hidden man of the heart that he moſt regardeth: the Law of the mind that he would have chiefly obſerved.

Verſe 41. But rather gives almes] So Daniel counſels Nebuchadnezzar, Cap. 4. 27. Ralph Biſhop of Chicheſter, Anno Dom. 1070. drawing toward his end, delivered unto the poor with his own hands whatſoever he had in the world (I enquire not with what intention) leaving himſelf ſcarce clothes to cover him. Alexander the fifth, Biſhop of Rome, was liberal to the poor, (ſaith the Hiſtorian) that he left nothing to himſelf: ſo that he would merrily ſay, that he was a rich Biſhop, a poor Cardinal, and a beggarly Pope. Godw. Catal. pag. 467.

Of ſuch things as ye have] Gr. As are within: either within the platter (ſend morſels to the hungry) or within your hearts: for riches get within their owners many times, and do more poſſeſs them, then are poſſeſſed by them; τὰ ἐνόντα.

——difficile eſt opibus non tradere mentem.

Verſe 42. But Woe unto you] Notwithſtanding your tything of pot-herbs; wherein you think you take courſe that all things may be clean to you, ver. 41. Or woe unto you, for that through covetouſneſs you exact the utmoſt of your tithes, &c. So ſome ſenſe this text.

Verſe 43.] See Mat. 23. 6.

Verſe 44. For ye are as graves] As the deep grave keeps the ſtinking carkaſs from offending any ones ſmel: ſo doth the diſſembling hypocrite ſo cleanly carry the matter, that hardly the ſharpeſt noſe, &c.

Verſe 45. Thou reproacheſt us alſo] Who meddled with them, but that their own conſciences accuſed them? It is a rule of Jerom, Ubi generalis de vitiis diſputatio eſt, ibi nullius perſonæ eſt injuria: neque carbone notatur quiſquam, quaſi malus ſit, ſed omnes admonentur ne ſint mali. Where the diſcourſe is of all, there's no perſonal intimation of any.

Verſe 46.] See Mat. 23. 4.

Verſe 47.] See Mat. 23. 29.

Verſe 48. And ye build their Sepulchres] And ſo ye ſet up the trophies of your fathers cruelty.

Verſe 49. Therefore alſo ſaid the wiſdom of God] That is, Chriſt himſelf, the eſſential wiſdom of his Father, Mat. 23. 34.

Verſe 50, 51.] See Mat. 23. 35.

Verſe 52. Wo unto you Lawyers] I ſee well, ſaid Father Latimer, that whoſoever will be buſie with Væ vobis, he ſhall ſhortly after come coram nobis, as Chriſt did. Act. and Mon. fol. 1550.

For ye have taken away the key of knowledge] By taking away the Scriptures, and all good means of knowledge: as do alſo the Jeſuits at this day. At Dole, an Univerſity in Burgundy, they have not only debarred the people of the Proteſtant books, but eſpecially alſo forbid them to talk of God, either in good ſort or bad. In Italy they not only prohibit the books of the Reformed writers, but alſo hide their own Treatiſes, in which the Tenet of the Proteſtants is recited, only to be confuted: ſo that you ſhall ſeldom there meet with Bellarmines works, or any of the like nature to be ſold.

Verſe 53. To urge him vehemently] Out of deep diſpleaſure to bear an aking tooth towards him (as Herodias did toward the Baptiſt, Mark 6. 19.) waiting him a ſhrewd turn. ἐνέχειν.

And to provoke him to ſpeak] Not to ſtop his mouth about many things, as the Rhemiſts falſly render it. They asked him captious queſtions, to make him an offendor for a word, Iſa. 29. 21. ἀποστοματίζειν.

Verſe 54. Seeking to catch ſomething] But there was no guile or gall found in his mouth, ſaith S. Peter, intimating, that they ſought it.

CHAP. XII.

Verse 1. Beware of the leaven]

WHich our eyes cannot discern from dough by the colour; but only our palate, by the taste. Such is hypocrisie; which also, as leaven, is 1 spreading: 2 swelling: 3 sowring the meal: 4 impuring and defiling the house where it is, though it be but as much as a mans fist.

Verse 2, 3, 4, 5, &c.] See Notes on Mat. 10. 26, 27, 28, 29, &c.

Verse 8. Whosoever shall confess me] Cyprian reproving the rashness of those Christians that would go on their own accord to the Heathen Magistrates, professing themselves Christians, whereby they were put to death; Hath a good and elegant speech: Confiteri nos magis voluit, quam profiteri. Christ would have us confess him; he saith not profess him; Now he confesseth, that doth it being asked; as he professeth, that doth it of his own free accord.

Verse 10.] See Mat. 12. 31, 32. Mar. 3. 28.

Verse 11. Take ye no thought] See the Note on Mat. 10. 19. and on Mark 13. 11. Alice Driver Martyr, at her examination, put all the Doctors to silence, so that they had not a word to say, but one looked upon another. Then she said, Have ye no more to say? God be honoured: you be not able to resist the Spirit of God in me a poor woman. I was an honest poor mans daughter, never brought up in the University, as you have been. But I have driven the Plough many a time before my father, I thank God: yet notwithstanding in the defence of Gods Truth, and in the cause of my Master Christ, by his grace I will set my foot against the foot of any of you all, in the maintenance and defence of the same: And if I had a thousand lives, it should go for payment thereof: So the Chancellor condemned her, and she returned to the Prison, as joyfull, as the bird of day.

Acts and Mon. 1858.

Verse 13. Master, speak to my brother] Whiles Christ was busily discoursing about the best things, this importunate fellow interrupts him with this unpleasing, and therefore unreasonable request. But our Saviour soon rejects it, as out of the compass of his calling: and so cuts off from his adversaries all occasion of cavelling at him, as an Usurper of the Magistrates office.

τὸ ἀκαίρον παντὶ χῷ λυπηρὸν. Isoc.

Verse 14. A Judge, or a divider over you?] It is work enough for a Minister rightly to judge of the estate of his flock, and to divide the word of God unto them daily and duly. What's that to thee? Said Christ to Peter when he medled with that which belonged not to him, John 21. 21. Age quod tui muneris est, said Valentinian to Ambrose, Do thine own business. And, Verbi minister es, hoc age, was Mr. Perkins his Motto. Clericus in foro est piscis in arido.

Verse 15. Take heed and beware of Covetousness] This our Saviour adds after who made me a Judge? to teach us not to go to Law with a covetous mind: but as Charls the French King made War with our Henry the seventh, more desiring peace then victory.

For a mans life consisteth not, &c.] He can neither live upon them, nor lengthen his life by them. Queen Elizabeth once wished her self a milk-maid: Bajazet envied the happiness of a poor shepherd that sate on a hill side merrily reposing himself with his homely pipe: Therein shewing, saith the historian, that worldly bliss consisteth not so much in possessing of much, subject to danger, as in joying in a little contentment void of fear. Covetous men by gaping after more, lose the pleasure of that they possess: as a dog at his masters table swalloweth the whole meat he casteth him, without any pleasure, gaping still for the next morsel.

Turk. hist. 216.

Verse 16. The ground of a certain rich man] Gr. The country: for he had laid field to field, til he was the only land-holder thereabouts; and had a Country of Corn, Esa. 58.

ἡ χώρα.

Verse 17. And he thought within himself] He was up with the more, and down with the less: he cast up his reckonings, as covetous mens manner is, and after long debate to and fro, concluded what to do.

He

He talked to himself, &c.] A marvelous proper word for the purpose. διελογίζετο.

Verse 18. My Barns] So my fruits, and my goods, All was his: God came not into this Epicures thoughts. Hic Deus nihil fecit, as one wittily twitted Pope Adrian, talking after the same rate.

Verse 19. Eat and drink and be merry] A right Epicure, one that had made his gut his God: another Sardanapalus, that did eat that in earth, that he digested in hell, as Augustine hath it. How many (alas) are there, that having one foot on the grave, and the other in hell, do yet put far away thoughts of either? These when they should be building their Tombs, are building their Tabernacles, Donec mors vitæ studium prævertat, longa conantes opprimat. Sen. Consol. ad Marc. cap. 11.

Verse 20. Thou fool, this night, &c.] This rich fool, when like a Jay, he was pruning himself in the boughs, came tumbling down with the Arrow in his side: his glass was run, when he thought it to be but new turned. He chopt into the earth before he was aware: like as one, that walking in a field covered with snow, falleth into a pit suddenly. He was shot as a bird with a bolt, whilst he gazed at the bow: And this may be any mans case. Which made Austin say he would not for the gain of a world be an Atheist for one half hour: because he knew not but God might in that time call him.

Then whose shall those things be? &c.] As thy friends are scrambling for thy goods, worms for thy body, so devils for thy soul. We read of Henry Beauford, that rich and wretched Cardinal, Bishop of Winchester, and Chancellor of England in the reign of King Henry the sixth, that perceiving he must needs die, he murmur'd that his riches could not reprieve him. Fie, quoth he, will not Death be hired? will mony do nothing? No: its righteousness only that delivereth from death. Fox Martyrol. vol. 1. p. 925.

Verse 21. Rich to God] That is, rich in faith, Jam. 2. 5. Rich in good Works, 1 Tim. 6. 18.

Verse 22. 23, 24, 25.] See Mat. 6. 25, 26, &c.

Verse 26. For the rest] For superfluities, when ye cannot provide your selves of necessaries.

Verse 27, 28. Consider the Lillies, &c.] Women and children use herbs and flowers to look on and smel to. Apothecaries and others use them for food and Physick. Divines and all good people, for information and instruction in the best things: this being the chief use and end of all the Creatures, ut scalæ nobis, & alæ fiant, that they help us on towards heaven, &c.

Verse 29. Neither be ye of doubtful mind] Hang not in suspence, as meteors do in the air, not certain whether to hang or fall to the ground, Meteora dicta volunt quod animos hominum suspensos, dubios, & quasi fluctuantes faciant. Aristotle himself confesseth, that of some meteors he knew not what to say, though of some other he could say somewhat. One Interpreter renders this word, Make not discourses in the ayr, as the Covetous man doth, when his head is tossed with the cares of getting, or fears of losing commodity; Or it may note his endless framing of projects for the compassing of his desires. The Syriack rendreth it, Let not your thoughts be distracted about these things. Surely as a clock can never stand still, so long as the plummets hang thereat: so neither can a worldlings heart, for cares and anxieties. These suffer him not to rest night or day; being herein like unto the flyes of Egypt, or those Tyrants, Esa. 16. μὴ μετεωρίζεσθε. Magir. Physic.

Verse 32. Fear not little flock] Gr. Little, little flock. There is in the Original a double diminutive. If we divide the known parts of the world into three equal Parts, the Christians part is but as five, the Mahometans as six, and the Idolaters as nineteen. Among the best Churches, the most are the worst, as Philip. 3. 18. Chrysostom could not find an hundred in Antioch, that he could be well perswaded of, that they should be saved. Brerew. Enqui. pag. 118.

Verse 33. A treasure in the heavens] As a merchant being to travel into a far country, doth deliver his money here upon the Exchange, that so he may be sure to receive it again at his arrival in that Country: so let us that are passing into another Country, lay up something that may stand us in stead in that day.

Verse 34. There will your heart be] your inwardest affection, your chief joy and trust.

Verse 35. Let your Loyns be girded] It implyes, 1. Readiness. 2. Nimbleness, handiness and handsomeness. A loose, discinct and diffluent mind is unfit to serve God. Here it is, ungirt, unbless.

Verse

Verse 36. And knocketh] sc. By the hammer of his word and spirit, or by the hand of death, summoning you thereto by some sickness, deaths harbinger.

Verse 37. Blessed are those servants] So ver. 38. and 43. They are three times said to be blessed that watch, Terque quaterque beati: Fœlices ter & amplius. Horat.

Verse 38. In the second watch] For serius aut citius, death will be upon us; Neither is it sure that he will knock, or give warning. Watch therefore: Sith at the next puff of breath thou maist blow away thy life. Fabius Senator, poto in lactis hausto uno pilo; strangulatus est, saith Pliny. Fabius was choked with an hair in a draught of milk.

Verse 40. Be ye therefore ready] Mat. 24. 45. See the Note there.

Verse 41. Lord speakest thou, &c.] The Disciples ever dreamt of some singular happiness, some immunity and priviledge that they should have above others. Hence this question that gave occasion to the ensuing Parables.

Verse 42, 43, 44, 45, &c.] See Mat. 24. 46, 47, &c.

Verse 47. Which knew his Lords will] None are so filled with Gods wrath, as knowing men. Sapientes sapienter descendunt in infernum, saith Bernard. The Devil is too hard for them.

πᾶς δοθὲν. Hinc παραθήκη 1 Tim. 6. 20. 2 Tim. 1. 14. Verse 48. Much is given] To know our masters will is the great talent of all other. There is a [Much] in that, There is a special depositum, as the word here used importeth.

Verse 49. To send fire on the earth] That is, that persecution that is Evangelii genius, as Calvin wrote to the French King, and dogs at the heels the preaching of the truth.

And what will I, if it be already kindled] As if he should say, Let it kindle assoon as it will, I am contented: I know much good will come of it.

Verse 50. And how am I straitned] This painful preconceit of his passion, was a part of our Saviours passion. This made him spend many a night in prayer, bewailing our sins, and imploring Gods grace, and he was heard in that which he requested, Heb. 5.

Verse 51, 52, &c.] See Mat. 10. 34.

Verse 54.] See Mat. 16. 2.

Verse 57. Yea, and why even of your selves] By consulting with your own consciences, which would, if rightly dealt with, tell you, that I am that Messias you have so long look't for.

δὸς ἐργασίαν. Verse 58. Give diligence] Purus putus Latinismus, saith Drusius. Da operam: Id est, festina, & labora, omnesque modos cogita quomodo ab eo libereris, as Theophylact expounds it. Be at utmost pains to get freed from him.

Verse 59. Till thou hast paid the very last mite] It is good to compound quickly with the Lord, and to take up the suit before it come to execution and judgement, lest we be forced to pay, not only the main debt, but the arrerages too, that is the time of Gods long-suffering and patience, here and hereafter.

I shall be perfected] Or, I shall be sacrificed, as Pareus rendreth it.

Verse 33. Out of Jerusalem] That slaughter-house of the Saints, that bloody City, Esay 1. 21. Ezek. 24. 6.

Verse 34, 35.] See Mat. 23. 37.

Chap. XIV.

Verse 1 They watched him]

Παρετηροῦντο.

Græce, They superstitiously and maliciously observed him. Aristot. lib. 2. Rhetor. Accipit pro eo quod est ulciscendi tempus captare. They watched as intently as a dog doth for a bone: they pryed as narrowly into his actions, as Laban did into Jacobs stuff.

Verse 2. A certain man before him] A fit object, and that was sufficient to move him to mercy, who himself, by sympathy, took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses.

Verse 3. And Jesus answering] Viz. Their thoughts, which were naked and open, naked (for the outside) and dissected, quartered, and as it were cleft through the backbone (for the inside) before him with whom they had to deal, Heb. 4. 13.

Verse 4. And he took him] Good must be done, however it be taken.

Verse 5. Pull him out on the Sabbath day] The Iew of Tewkesbury, that would not be pulled out of the jakes whereinto he fell on their Sabbath day, perished deservedly.

Verse 6. And they could not answer] Yet ran away with the bit in their mouths.

Verse 7. When he marked] Ministers, though they may not be time-servers, yet they must must be time-observers; and sharply reprove what they meet with amiss in their people.

Verse 8. When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding] When should a man rather feast then at the recovery of his lost rib?

Verse 9. Thou begin with shame] As passing for a proud fool: a stile good enough for a self-exalter.

Verse 10. Then shalt thou have worship] Honor est in honorante, therefore to be the less esteemed, because without us, and mostly but a puff of stinking breath, not once to be valued.

Verse 11. For whosoever] See the Note on Mat. 23. 12.

Verse 12. Nor thy rich neighbours] Laudent te esurientium viscera, non ructantium opulenta convivia, saith Jerom, Bishop Hooper had his board of beggars, who were daily served by four at a mess, with whole and wholsome meats, before himself sat down to dinner. Hieron. ad Demetr. Act. and Mon.

Verse 13. Call the poor] Christ prefers charity before courtesie.

Verse 14. At the resurrection of the just] Called theirs, because they onely shall have joy of that day. It were well for the wicked if they might never rise to judgement, or trot directly to hell, and not be brought before the Lamb to be sentenced.

Verse 15. Blessed is he, &c.] This man seems to have tasted of the good word of God, and of the powers of the world to come. Happy he, if he fed heartily thereon. This, saith Luther, is Sancta crapula. Heb. 6. 5.

Verse 16. Made a great supper] Δεῖπνον, φησὶ τὸ δεῖν πάντα. They are happy that get to heaven: they rest from their labours. The Ancients dined frugally, supped liberally. Be of good chear said that Martyr to her husband that suffered with her: for though we have but an ill dinner, we shall sup with Christ. Act. and Mon.

Verse 17.] See Mat. 22. 3.

Verse 18. I have bought, &c.] Licitis perimus omnes. More die by meat, then by poyson. Cavete, latet anguis in herba. What more lawfull then a Farm? what more honourable, of all pleasures, then marriage? But these men had not so much bought their Farms, &c. as were sold to them: not so much married wives, as were married to them. Uxori nubere nolo meæ. Martial.

Verse 19. I have bought five yoak of Oxen] This answers those that plead their necessities, and that they seek not superfluities, (as farm upon farm, &c.) but onely a sufficiency. What could be more necessary then Oxen, sith without them he could not follow his husbandry? Worldlines is a great hindrance to heaven, though a man cannot be charged with any great covetousnes. These all excused themselves out of heaven, by bringing apologies why they could not go to heaven. Never yet any came to hell, but had some pretence for their coming thither. Our vile hearts will perswade us that there is some sense in sinning, and some reason to be mad.

Verse 20. And therefore I cannot come] Note that the voluptuary is peremptory, and saith flatly he cannot come. Sensuall hearts are void of the Spirit, Jude 18, 19. Miry places could not be healed by the Sanctuary waters, Ezek. 47. 11. fleshly lusts fight against the soul, 1 Pet. 2. 11. Those that dance to the timbrell and harp, say, Depart from us, Job 21. 11. Better be preserved in brine, then rot in hony.

Verse 21. Then the master of the house being angry] And good reason he had: for, Non modò pluris putare quod utile videatur, quam quod honestum, sed hæc etiam inter se comparare & in his addubitare, turpissimum est, saith the honest Heathen. Surely as Pharaoh said of the Israelites, They are intangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in, Exod. 14. 3. so may we say of many, They are intangled in the creature, the world hath shut them in, they cannot come to Christ: They are shut up in a cave, as those five Kings, Joshua 10. and have hardness of heart, as a great stone, rolled to the mouth, and honours, riches and pleasures as so many keepers, &c. Cit. tert. de Officiis.

Verse 22.] See Mat. 22. 9, 10.

Verse 23. Compell them] This may be meant (saith Mr. Perkins) of the Christian Magistrate: for that is the Magistrates duty in respect of the outward profession.

Verse 24. None of those men] Sith they thus judge themselves unworthy of eternall life, and are miserable by their own election, Jon. 2. 8. Acts 13. 46.

Verse 25. And there went great multitudes with him] expecting great things from him, &

gaping after an earthly felicity. These he strives to undeceive in the following verses.

Verse 26. And hate not his father, &c:] Much more his Farm, and his Oxen. It was not these, but the inordinate love of these, that detained them, as Christ here intimateth. Your house, home, and goods, yea life, and all that ever ye have (saith that Martyr) God hath given you as love-tokens, to admonish you of his love, to win your love to him again. Now will he try your love, whether ye set more by him, or by his tokens, &c.

μισεῖ ex מאס ex odio reprobavit, respuit. Master Brad. Act. and Mon. fol. 1492.

Verse 27.] See Mat. 10.38. and 16: 24.

Verse 28. Intending to build a Tower] Rodulphus Gualther being in Oxford, and beholding Christ-Church-Colledge, said, Egregium opus: Cardinalis iste instituit collegium, & absolvit popinam. A pretty business! A Colledge begun, and a kitchin finished.

Counteth the cost] Let him that intendeth to build the Tower of Godliness, sit down first and cast up the cost, lest, &c.

Verse 29, 30. Begin to mock him, saying, &c.] Of all things men love not to be jeared: For there is none but thinks himself worthy of some regard, and is therefore impatient of reproaches. If neither fear of God, nor shame of men prevail with us, actum est.

Verse 31. Sitteth not down first] To consult, and so with good advice to make War. Romani sedendo vincunt, saith Varro. Thou shalt succor us out of the City, 2 Sam. 18.3.

Verse 32. He sendeth an Embassage] Mittamus preces & lachrymas cordis legatos, saith Cyprian. Currat pœnitentia, ne præcurrat sententia, saith Chrysologus. Repent, ere it be too late.

ἀποτάξαμενος. Verse 33. That forsaketh not] Gr. That bids not farewel to all.

Verse 34. Salt is good] This was a sentence much in our Saviours mouth, Mat. 5.13. Mark 9.50. And is here used, to set forth the desperate condition of Apostates.

Verse 35. He that hath ears to hear] This is usually added by our Saviour in matters of greatest consequence, and nearest concernment. See the Note on Mat. 13.9.43.

Chap. XV.

Verse 1. All the Publicans and sinners]

Christ familiarized himself with these despised persons, and thereby much woon upon them. Affability easily allureth, austerity discourageth; as it did that honest Citizen, which having in himself a certain conflict of conscience, came to Master Hooper the Martyrs door for Counsel. But being abashed at his austere behaviour, durst not come in, but departed, seeking remedy of his troubled mind at other mens hands, &c. Acts and Mon. fol. 1366.

Verse 2. But the Scribes and Pharisees] Being sick of the Devils disease, and doing his lusts, John 8.44.

Verse 3, 4, 5, 6.] See Mat. 18.12.

Verse 7. Joy shall be in Heaven] Would we then put harps into the Angels hands, ditties into their mouths? Repent.

Verse 8. If she lose one peice] One Testor. Drachma enim valebat septem denarios cum dimidio. Breerwood de num. Jude cap. 1. See the margent of our new Translation.

σαροῖ. And sweep the house] Everrit, not Evertit, as the vulgar hath it corruptly: and Gregory with others were deceived by it in their descants and glosses, nothing to the purpose.

Verse 9. Rejoyce with me] What greater joy then to have had an hand in the conversion of a sinner from the error of his way.
